Where was the ownership? It was asserted here yesterday that the English Government was in the control of the Suez Canal. That is a mistake. There is no Government on the face of the earth which manages or has the power to manage the operations of the Suez Canal or control it. The policy of its management has always been to avoid this or to permit any country to hold a controlling interest.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield to just one question right there?

Mr. CULLOP. I have not the time. If I had, I would.

Now, let us see what interest the English Government has in it. Before I pass to that, however, I want to show why the stock of the Suez Canal is so valuable. Last year it paid a dividend on its $126,000,000 and more of investment of 31 per cent, a very alluring investment to capital. This is the reason why the English people paid more than par for the stock. I read again from the hearings concerning their ownership of stock:

In 1875 the Khedive of Egypt, owner of 176,602 shares, was embarrassed and sold his holdings for £4,000,000, or $110 a share, to the British Government, which is by far the largest shareholder.

That stock, bought by the minister representing the British Government, is not held as Government stock, but it is divided among the investors as private individuals and is so owned by them.

Mr. RAKER. Just one question right there.

Mr. CULLOP. I have said to the gentleman from California that on account of my limited time I can not yield.

Mr. RAKER. Very well.

Mr. CULLOP. I would be glad to yield if it were otherwise.

Mr. RAKER. I thank the gentleman from Indiana. I appreciate it.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, then, they have another provision concerning its management to the effect that whenever it will earn a dividend of more than 25 per cent a year they reduce the tolls. That is one of the provisions which the management has incorporated into the government of the corporation itself. And the tolls have been reduced from time to time on account of the enormous dividends that the company, or the canal, was earning.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Will you not let me have a little more time?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will let you have three minutes in order to compensate for the interruptions you have had.

Mr. CULLOP. I thank the gentleman. Now, then, what does the giving of free tolls to the ships in the coast-to-coast trade mean? The ships engaged in that business already have a monopoly of that trade under the navigation laws of the United States. It is simply a bonus, a subvention or gratuity, given to them, which the people of the country have to pay. My Democratic friends, our party from time immemorial, let me say, has pledged itself against any form of a ship-subsidy scheme.

The proposition of free tolls has been adroitly made here, in order to both confuse and prejudice the public mind, that to charge tolls on vessels engaged in coast-to-coast trade would be to the advantage of the transcontinental railroads, alleging such roads were favorable to such a policy. This is a most unreasonable proposition, and one artfully foisted into this debate. But it has no foundation in fact. Sir, the converse of the proposition is true, and there is sound reason in support of this contention. The great trunk lines control to-day water navigation both on the rivers and oceans. The great common carriers of both are one great community of interest organized and operated to stifle competition in transportation both on land and sea, and their efforts in this respect have been wonderfully successful as everybody knows and which all regret to admit. But it is true, ah, too true, for the good of a great majority of the people, who are compelled to pay their unjust and unreasonable charges. These roads now own the controlling interest in the ocean liners plying in our coast-to-coast trade; they control the dockage; they are masters of the situation; give free tolls, or, better stated perhaps, exempt them from tolls in the use of the Panama Canal, and what a magnificent sum is contributed to their earnings; what a princely gratuity is donated them, all at the expense of the American taxpayers, without giving any assistance to the ultimate consumers. It is an additional profit unearned, which by legislation they secure.

But suppose the great railroad lines do not own or operate, either by direction or indirection, the vessels engaged in this trade, and by adopting the free-toll proposition the cost of transportation is reduced that amount. The railroads will then reduce their charges for freight from coast to coast the same amount in order to get traffic, but they will then increase their charges on freight carried in the interior of the country an equal amount to make up for their loss in coast-to-coast business, and while it would help the people on both coasts it would be done at the expense of the people living in the interior of the country and the railroads would lose nothing. Would this be just and fair to the people of the entire country? Is not the proposition indefensible? Why should the people of the interior of the country be so unjustly imposed upon for the benefit of the people living on the coasts? This would be the result; and against the adoption of a policy which would produce such unjust conditions I protest. The railroads doubtless are more than anxious for the adoption of the free-toll proposition, because through it splendid opportunities are afforded them to reap golden rewards.

I want to say a word or two before closing about section 11. I held a different view about the use of the canal until it was developed at the hearings that certain financial interests were attempting to manipulate the control of the use of the canal. Mr. Schwerin, of California, the manager of the Pacific Mail Co., came before the committee insisting that in order to build four additional ships to the fleet of their company for operation through the Panama Canal it would have to borrow $12,000,000. The majority of the stock of his company is owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. He testified that for more than 60 days they had tramped the streets of New York trying to get this loan by the floating of their bonds upon their entire property—good security, as everyone knows. He said he was notified that if the word "railroad" occurred in this bill not a dollar could ever be raised to build ships for the Panama Canal. This was the ultimatum issued by powerful interests, which covet the control of this great project.

Gentlemen of the committee, that is the proposition which confronts us and is the great influence against which we have to contend. Its power no one denies and none will attempt to minimize. The question, then, is, Shall we sit here in the capacity of legislators and let any man or set of men, I care not where they come from, dictate the policy of legislation on this great subject in their own interest or prevent its success if we do not frame a bill or enact a law as they demand? Upon what meat does such a Cæsar feed? Why has he grown so fat? By what right has he or his company to say to 93,000,000 people composing the American Republic, "If you do not legislate as we direct, we will see that the business project which you are about to launch shall be a failure"? The financial interests defy us by such a threat, and for one I believe it time to notify them such a stand on their part is unwise and dangerous. It was then, and not until then, that I was thoroughly convinced that there was a money trust in this country, and that the legislation in this bill could not be too drastic to meet the requirements of the hour upon that subject. [Applause.]

The right to use it should be limited and restricted, that its great purpose may be realized to our people and that they may enjoy the benefits which were promised them in return for the great expenditure they have made in its construction. I can conceive of no greater wrong that could be done the people now than by failing by proper legislation to protect their interests and prevent them from being forfeited. This section is directed at the preservation of competition in the use of the canal in order that great transportation interests may not gain control and stifle it. Its adoption is essential, in my judgment, to insure this great object and to restrain the greed and avarice of these great interests from dominating its use. Its adoption will assure the people, the world, that this great project is to be operated for the benefit of the country, the purpose to which it was dedicated; to promote industry and maintain the prosperity of our people; and that persons with selfish designs shall not thwart the great purpose for which it was constructed, to promote the general welfare of all. In view of the attempts by special interests to dictate the legislation on this subject this provision is made necessary, and I hope it will be adopted, in order that the people may be assured that this, the greatest of all projects ever undertaken by man or nation, is to be maintained for the common benefit of a liberal and progressive people. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I intended to ask that privilege for all who speak to-day. I will ask it now, Mr. Chairman, that all who addressed the committee to-day be allowed that privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order in the committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. I intended to do that in the House when we got back into the House. I will do it when we go into the House. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen on the other side want to use some time. I do not see the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] or the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to use an hour now.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I will yield an hour to the gentleman from California at any time.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will yield that hour to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to agree with the committee as to most of the provisions of this bill. I agree with the committee that the future government of the Canal Zone should be in effect a continuation, a development, and an adaptation of the present system; that the zone should be occupied, as far as possible, only for military, naval, and canal purposes; that the Government shall supply coal, provisions, repairs, dry-dock facilities, and so forth, and do so on business principles, to earn a profit by attracting traffic; that power should be given to acquire additional necessary territory; that the existing judicial system should be confirmed and extended. I approve the provisions for the protection of the canal, and I especially approve the action of the committee in investing a large discretionary power in the President.

I especially approve of the principle sought to be established by the eleventh section, that railroad companies shall not be allowed to destroy competition in our coastwise trade or to neutralize the benefits that will come to the people because of reduced rates on transcontinental and interior transportation through the unrestricted use of the canal. Such legislation is in line with the message sent to Congress December 6, 1910, by President Taft, who then said:

> I can not close this reference to the canal without suggesting as a wise amendment to the interstate-commerce law a provision prohibiting interstate-commerce railways from owning or controlling ships engaged in the trade through the Panama Canal. I believe such a provision may be needed to save to the people of the United States the benefits of the competition in trade between the eastern and western seaboards which this canal was constructed to secure.

I congratulate the committee on the wisdom and far-sighted statesmanship shown in most of the provisions of the bill submitted. It is because I so greatly appreciate and admire the act as a whole that I regret that I can not assent to all its terms. I am compelled to differ from the committee as to some of the provisions of the bill, but such changes being adopted as I believe the House must after consideration deem wise, I hope the bill will pass and become a law. I am confident that if it does it will be considered as not only one of the most important measures adopted by the present Congress, but one of the great acts of constructive statesmanship of the century, worthy as a piece of statecraft to rank with the completion of the canal as a physical and engineering accomplishment, to the lasting credit and honor of American enterprise and statesmanship. [Applause.]

TOLL CHARGES.

The fifth section of the bill relates to toll charges for vessels using the canal, and from some of the provisions of that section I am compelled to dissent.

The section provides that—

No preference shall be given nor discrimination shown, directly or indirectly, to the vessels of any nation, its citizens or subjects, other than vessels belonging to the Government of the United States (including those belonging to the Panama Railroad Co.) and the Government of the Republic of Panama, observing the rules and regulations of the Panama Canal.

The effect of this provision is to give free passage only to the Government-owned vessels of the United States and Panama. It subjects all American-built and American-owned vessels, whether engaged in foreign or domestic trade, to the same rates and charges as foreign ships. It gives no encouragement to American shipping, and it subjects the American coastwise trade to burdens and conditions never before imposed upon it through all the years of our Nation's history. It appears that the committee must have adopted this most unwise and unpatriotic view under the belief that we are forbidden by our treaty stipulations to give any preference either to American vessels engaged in the foreign trade or to American vessels engaged in our domestic commerce.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Having discussed the question of tolls and exceptions, now, as a matter of fact, as to this pretended exception of American war vessels and vessels belonging to the Panama Railroad Co., that is not an exception in fact, because the Panama Railroad Co. stock belongs to the United States except as to one share. Is not that a fact?

Mr. TOWNER. I believe that is true.

Mr. RAKER. And the exception really amounts to nothing?

Mr. TOWNER. From the gentleman's standpoint, yes; but it is important, because of other considerations.

Mr. RAKER. I just wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to the matter at that point.

Mr. TOWNER. It is true the committee disclaims an intention to thus interpret the treaty adversely to American interests. But the fact remains that if this provision of the committee bill is adopted we will thus interpret it by this first expression of governmental authority, and there is no doubt but all the nations of the world, whose interests in such matters would be adverse to our own, will be quick to take advantage of such fact. No disclaimer by members of the committee of such intention, and no declaration they make that their action is not to be considered a precedent or the declaration of a policy will or could prevail as against a deliberate surrender of a privilege, which in spite of the committee's statements, I assert exists in favor of American shipping and American commerce, if we but exercise our rights under our treaties as interpreted by well-established principles of international law. [Applause.]

TREATY OBLIGATIONS.

If an interpretation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is not intended by the bill, its language is most unfortunate. The language of the treaty is:

There shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise.

The language of the bill is:

No preference shall be given nor discrimination shown, directly or indirectly, to the vesels of any nation, its citizens or subjects.

It will be readily seen that the terms of the bill are but a recasting of the language of the treaty, using many of the same words and phrases, and intended on its face to carry exactly the same meaning. If it is adopted in its present form we shall be guilty of the incredible folly of giving away a right that was not claimed, and of forcing the relinquishment of a privilege that was not demanded. We shall, by the adoption of such act, place an interpretation upon the treaty which no other nation has presumed to insist upon, and which so interpreted would bind us to our own disadvantage.

It has been said this afternoon by gentlemen on the floor of this House that this matter is of no considerable importance, that only about 1,600,000 tons of our coastwise trade would be affected by it. But gentlemen should remember that if we by this act thus interpret this treaty, we shall bind ourselves throughout all future years by that interpretation, and no matter what may be the conditions that exist, we shall be without power to grant to our coastwise trade any discrimination in its favor if we now accept this interpretation of the treaty. Therefore it is of supreme importance to the United States that we should not thus interpret it.

And if it is not of considerable importance to these gentlemen, why do they argue so strenuously against it? If it will not make very much difference anyway, why is this effort made to impose upon our coastwise trade in this particular instance a burden that was never placed there before? And if we shall by this interpretation of the treaty by our own official act stop our hands from further action regarding this matter, we will be doing not only a foolish thing, but one that we have no right to do with regard to the future interests of our country.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. Under our present laws, covering our coastwise traffic, is it not true that the carrying of freight from one American port to another must be done by Americans and not by foreign vessels? That is true, is it not?

Mr. TOWNER. That is true.

Mr. POWERS. Now, if that is true, the carrying of our stuff by coastwise trade from one American port to another, since it is not in competition with foreign countries, can not be considered as a discrimination?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; that is true, and I will discuss that feature shortly.

In the committee report it is stated that—

Many members of the committee believe that by the terms of our treaties with Great Britain we are prevented from allowing preferential or free tolls to ships of American registry, either coastwise or foreign.

This must certainly be true, for it would appear that nothing less than such belief could have induced the committee to have thus sacrificed American to foreign interests. But, fortunately, it is an unfounded belief, and there is nothing in our treaty obligations that will prevent allowing preferential or free tolls to ships of American registry, either coastwise or foreign.

AN AMERICAN CANAL.

No elaborate argument is required to prove this. We are, of course, permitted to use the canal, which is our property, purchased and built with our money and located on our territory, as we think best in the interest of our people, except as we may be restrained by our treaty obligations.

Article 2 of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty with Great Britain provides that the United States shall construct the canal, and that it shall—have and enjoy all the rights incident to such construction, as well as the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal.

It will be noticed by gentlemen that the language quoted is the particular portion of the treaty that relates to the privileges and obligations of the United States. It also declares what powers she may exercise with regard to it, and the power is given to her exclusively to control and regulate and govern the canal.

Now I come to article 3, which provides:

The United States adopts, as to the basis of the neutralization of such ship canal, the following rules, substantially as embodied in the convention of Constantinople, signed the 28th October, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Canal, that is to say:

1. The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

I would like just here to call attention to this distinction, which seems in the minds of some gentlemen not very plain or clear. We were not only negotiating a treaty with Great Britain, but we were entering upon an obligation through her with all the other nations of the world that might come under the terms of this treaty, and any nation that desires to use this canal must come under the terms of this treaty in order to do so; and so in effect this treaty that we thus made was a treaty between the United States, building the canal, and the other nations of the world who were to use it.

Now, having stated the things that the United States might do with regard to the canal, it states the things that the United States promises to do, and how the United States will treat other nations.

The United States can not give a privilege to England that it would not grant to Germany. It can not treat the South American countries in a more favorable way than it does the European countries, although many of us would like to do so. It must treat them all upon terms of equality.

I appeal to gentlemen recognizing the situation as it was, is it not a strained construction to put upon this treaty to say that after having said the United States will build it, pay for it, put it in operation, place it upon her own purchased territory, fortify it, govern it, control it, regulate it through all the years to come, that it should have all these powers, and then, when it says with regard to the other nations of the world that they shall not be discriminated against, that they shall be treated upon terms of equality, that such language means that the United States shall not use it for her own people and her own purposes as she may choose? [Applause.]

Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable. The United States can not demand unreasonable tolls from England or from Germany or from any other nation. The tolls that she fixes must be reasonable and they must be equitable. Under this provision what does the United States undertake to do? It must keep the canal open to all nations. It can not allow the vessels of commerce or of war of one nation to use it and refuse its use to another. It can not give special privileges to France and refuse them to Russia. It is apparent the language of the provision has reference to the manner in which we shall treat foreign nations and does not apply to our domestic concerns. It refers to ships of other nations and not to our own.

Secretary Hay, in his memorandum to the Senate following the negotiation of the treaty and contrasting its terms with those of former treaties, said:

> The whole theory of the treaty is that the canal is to be an American canal. The enormous cost of constructing it is to be borne by the United States alone. When constructed it is to be exclusively the property of the United States, and to be managed, controlled, and defended by it.

We never had any such treaty as that before. The previous treaty was not such a treaty. We never entered before into an agreement by which we agreed to build the canal and pay for it, by which we agreed that we should be responsible for it, and maintain and govern and keep it free to the nations of the world forever; and therefore the restrictions of former treaties can not bind us now.

RIGHT TO REFUND.

It should be noted that while the matter of the fixing of toll rates has been a subject of international consideration for months, although it has been discussed in foreign journals on the assumption that America would give her own shipping preferential or free tolls, no nation has filed a protest against such action on our part.

It should be further noted that the treaty refers to the provisions of the convention of Constantinople regarding the use of the Suez Canal as a basis for the present treaty. Under the Suez Canal provisions nearly all European nations refund the tolls paid either directly or indirectly. Russia, Austria-Hungary, and Sweden directly refund such tolls, and Germany, France, Holland, Japan, Italy, and Spain do so indirectly, through their subsidies to their national mail lines using the canal. Spain has already taken steps to provide for the payment out of her national treasury of whatever tolls her ships shall be required to pay for the use of the Panama Canal.

Spain is now building vessels to engage in this trade. She thinks that with her associations with the Spanish-American countries in South America she ought to control a large part of this trade, and as an encouragement to her shipping, in order that her trade may be developed, already she has passed a law giving to her ships that may engage in such trade and use the Panama Canal a refund of whatever tolls may be required to be paid by them for such use.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Then, to all intents and purposes, this will be a free canal to Spanish ships?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly, and probably to every other nation in the world, because that is the policy of nearly all of them.

Mr. BOWMAN. I should like to get clearly in my mind the gentleman's idea with relation to the situation regarding the canal. Is it not this: Just as a railroad might have the right when building its line to carry material in connection with the construction or might transport its own employees and officers without charging them anything, and yet be obliged to give rates which would not discriminate against anyone outside.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman's illustration is exceedingly happy. It would be a singular condition that would exist if the United States should persist in this attempted policy—the other nations of the world paying the tolls of their ships using the canal and the United States, which built and owns it, demanding tolls from its own vessels.

It would probably be better in form, and save any possible protest, that tolls from American vessels engaged in foreign commerce should be collected in the first instance; but these may be and should be refunded. To so refund the tolls paid would be purely a question of domestic policy and would not be in contravention to our treaty obligations.

Mr. POWERS. In the gentleman's judgment could American ships engaged in foreign commerce go through the canal without paying the same toll as the others without violating the treaty?

Mr. TOWNER. I am not sure about that, and there is a contention regarding it. It seems to me that if the United States has the power to refund the tolls it would have a right to remit them absolutely; but other gentlemen think otherwise, and as it is a matter of comparatively no consequence, I think perhaps it would be better that we do it in the usual form, as is done in case of the Suez Canal, in order to save any protest that might be made. I am very confident that the United States has the power to relieve all American ships from tolls, enther directly or indirectly.

President Taft said in his message of December 21, 1911:

> I am very confident that the United States has the power to relieve from the payment of tolls any part of our shipping that Congress deems wise. We own the canal. It is our money that built it. We have the right to charge tolls for it. These tolls must be the same to everyone; but when we are dealing with our own ships the practice of many governments of subsidizing their own merchant vessels is so well established in general that a subsidy equal to the tolls or an equivalent remission of tolls can not be held a discrimination in the use of the canal.

In his report for 1911 the Secretary of War said:

> An examination of the treaty and the surrounding circumstances to my mind leaves no doubt as to the right of the United States, both legally and morally, to pay the tolls on its own vessels. This is a perfectly recognized practice in respect to the tolls of the Suez Canal, the toll rules of which canal were adopted by the United States in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty for the government of the Panama Canal.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman agrees with the President that we could not do it directly, but it might be done indirectly.

Mr. TOWNER. I agree with the President as far as foreign commerce is concerned, and I am not sure but that was probably in the mind of the President when he had reference to it.

Mr. SABATH. That it should not be done directly.

Mr. TOWNER. In regard to foreign commerce.

Mr. SABATH. If it should not be done directly, does the gentleman think it would be fair on the part of the Government to do it indirectly?

Mr. TOWNER. I know it would be fair to do it under the terms of the treaty stipulation. I know there could be no question about that, because the treaty stipulates that it shall be done under the terms of the Suez Canal, and under the terms of the Suez Canal almost every nation using it refunds the toll.

Mr. SABATH. Is there any evidence that the canal management of the Suez Canal refunds any tolls to the English ships?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no, sir; I think not; the English Government owns a majority of the stock, and the English Government pays subsidies to its ships in one form or another.

EXEMPTING OUR COASTWISE TRADE.

The right of the United States to exempt from tolls American ships engaged in domestic commerce is stronger than with regard to American ships engaged in foreign trade.

Mr. CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNELL. According to the gentleman's argument, as I understand it, with Spain and other nations paying the tolls for their vessels, if America should impose tolls on American ships, we would be the only ones that paid tolls through the canal.

Mr. TOWNER. That is exactly what our condition would be. Besides that, we would be interpreting the treaty with Great Britain to our disadvantage in that regard, and she would probably insist that having once so interpreted it that we could not afterwards change our interpretation of it.

Mr. SABATH. There is nothing in this bill to preclude our Government from subsidizing our ships if we so desired, is there?

Mr. TOWNER. I think not, but the argument that is urged here is that we can not, in view of our stipulations, either directly or indirectly, refund these tolls. But I desire now to speak of our domestic and coastwise commerce.

Indeed, there is little doubt but we have a right to exempt them in the first place from the payment of tolls. The coastwise trade of a nation is subject exclusively to local control. It is not a subject about which any foreign nation has a right to interfere. Indeed, our law prohibits any foreign vessel engaging in such trade. Revised Statutes, 4347; Navigation Laws, section 270, provides:

> No merchandise shall be transported by water, under penalty of forfeiture thereof, from any port of the United States to another port of the United States * * * in any other vessel than a vessel of the United States.

It is manifest that there could be no discrimination against vessels that were already by law excluded from entering such commerce on any terms. It is apparent also that the treaty could have no possible effect on such commerce, and was not so expected or intended.

President Taft has well said: "We built the canal as part of our coast line."

Our laws now provides (R. S., 4220; Navigation Laws, sec. 158) that—

> No vessel belonging to any citizen of the United States trading from one port within the United States shall be subject to tonnage, tax, or duty, if such vessel be licensed, registered, or enrolled.

That has been the settled policy of the country for years, and the proposition contained in this bill to reverse this policy and to charge American ships engaged in interstate trade tolls for the use of an American canal built by the American people on American soil is un-American and abhorrent. Fortunately, the question as a question of law has been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In Olsen v. Smith (195 U. S., 332) our Supreme Court passed upon this treaty provision—

> That no higher or other duties or charges shall be imposed in any of the ports of the United States on British vessels than those payable in the same ports by vessels of the United States.

I submit to the committee that this language is much stronger than the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty that we have now under consideration.

The State of Texas passed a law providing lower pilotage charges on American vessels engaged in domestic commerce than on vessels engaged in foreign commerce. A British vessel protested on the ground that this discrimination was in violation of the treaty rights, and particularly in violation of the provision cited. The Supreme Court in deciding the point said:

> Neither the exemption of coastwise vessels from pilotage resulting from any law of the United States, nor any lawful exemption of coastwise vessels created by the State law concerns vessels in the foreign trade, and therefore any such exemptions do not operate to produce a discrimination against British vessels engaged in foreign trade and in favor of vessels of the United States in such trade. In substance, the proposition but asserts that, because by the law of the United States steam vessels engaged in the coastwise trade have been exempt from pilotage regulations, therefore there is no power to subject vessels in foreign trade to pilotage regulations, even although such regulations apply without discrimination to all vessels engaged in such foreign trade, whether domestic or foreign.

I was somewhat amused by the ingenious argument of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] this afternoon. He said it is true the Supreme Court in that case had decided against the treaty regulating our coastwise commerce, but did so upon the grounds that such action was only a determination of different classifications. An examination of the case will show that the question of classification had nothing to do with the pivotal point determined, which was that it was not a matter of concern to Great Britain what charges were made or conditions imposed in regard to our coastwise trade. We could do as we pleased with it, since they were prevented from entering upon it; and the decision in that case is an absolute determination by our own Supreme Court that no matter what may be the provisions of a treaty with relation to our foreign trade it could not be applied to our coastwise and domestic trade, because the regulation of such trade could not be within the contemplation of the parties, since one of them could not under any circumstances enter it.

In that case it was accordingly held that the State law exempting coastwise vessels from pilotage charges was not in violation of the treaty. For the reason that foreign vessels can not on any terms enter our coastwise trade, the question as to tolls as to our vessels using the canal is purely a local one. The question of discrimination or inequality of treatment can not arise. The terms of a treaty can not be held to apply to a subject about which one of the parties has no interest whatever and could not be injured, whatever action is taken.

The localization of the coastwise trade and the exclusion of it from foreign influence or interest is shown in the now well-established principle of international law that if a nation opens its coastwise trade to foreign ships, such foreign ships entering into such coastwise trade will be regarded as ships belonging to the nation under whose coast trade it operates and may be captured by the enemy of that country in time of war as if it were a hostile ship.

SUMMARY OF LEGAL STATUS.

Viewed with regard to its legal aspects, the question of our right to charge tolls may be summed up as follows:

Foreign ships engaged in foreign commerce must be treated alike; there must be no discrimination in favor of any nation. The same rule applies to foreign ships engaged in commerce between American and foreign ports. American ships engaged in foreign commerce or in commerce between American and foreign ports, may be charged the same rates as foreign ships in the first instance, but the amounts thus paid may be refunded in part or in whole by the Government.

American ships engaged in our coastwise or domestic trade between American ports may be exempted in whole or in part from payment of tolls.

The whole question as to the legal objections to free tolls may be summed up in two propositions: First. The question is hardly a debatable one, since everyone admits that we may refund the tolls if we impose them. There is no serious difference between an exemption in the first instance and a collection first and a refunding afterwards. The final result is the same. Second. If the question is debatable, we ought not to give away a right before it is claimed. We ought not to yield a principle that is not demanded. It will be time enough to yield when we are required to do so, either through diplomatic negotiations or upon the determination of an arbitral court.

Every patriotic American must rejoice that we are thus free to consider the question of tolls for American ships on its merits and as a clear question of national policy. Everyone should be glad that we are not restrained by our treaty stipulations, either technically or in spirit, to give to American shipping the favorable consideration which it deserves. Everyone should welcome the opportunity to develop our policy in harmony with our past history and take such action as must be for the best interests of the American people. [Applause.]

THE REVENUE ARGUMENT.

I will now ask your consideration of the merits of the question as a matter of policy. In doing so we can not follow a better course than to consider the objections as urged in the committee's report. In that report the chairman has anticipated every argument presented yesterday and to-day on the floor of the House. All that has been said here is but an amplification of the arguments which he has so earnestly and so ably presented.

First, it is urged we shall need the money which we will derive from the tolls. Building the canal is a tremendously costly undertaking; its continued maintenance will be a constant drain on our resources, and we will need every dollar we can get to reimburse the Government. It is sufficient answer to this argument to call attention to the fact that we did not build the canal as a commercial enterprise, as a profitable investment. We did not expect to make it pay as a business proposition. The distinguished chairman of the committee has said that we never would have undertaken to build the canal if the Oregon had not been compelled to make her memorable voyage around the southern cape. I do not agree that we would never have undertaken it, for if we had not done so European nations would, and this we could not have permitted. But I do agree that the demonstration thus made, that our Atlantic and Pacific seaboards were 10,000 miles apart, gave the needed impulse to our act and hastened its undertaking. But we thought then principally of the fact that by digging the canal we should double the efficiency of our Navy and strengthen our military power; commercial considerations were only secondary and incidental.

The financial outlook is not by any means discouraging. It is estimated by the experts that approximately 10,500,000 tons of commerce annually will pass through the canal following its opening. At the proposed dollar rate this will yield an annual revenue of $10,500,000. Deduct the 1,600,000 tons of coastwise commerce, which we desire to exempt, and there is $8,900,000 remaining. The estimated cost of maintenance is $4,000,000. Thus the revenue will more than twice pay the expense of running the canal. It is true that no account is here made of interest on the bonds nor of the expense of maintaining our naval and military establishment there.

There will be nearly $5,000,000 surplus to apply to these at the beginning, the revenues will rapidly increase, and the expenditures will remain approximately stationary.

SPECIAL INTERESTS.

It is urged that as the shipping interests are in a "combine," to thus aid them is to legislate in favor of "special interests."

It is sufficient answer to say that if trusts exist in American shipping it is our duty to dissolve the trusts and free the shipping. What we want is free competition in the American coastwise trade, and we can not do more to secure this than to make and keep our commerce free to American ships. It may be suggested that every dollar of tolls imposed at Panama is a contribution to the transcontinental railways. Are gentlemen urging such action in the interests of these trusts and combines? In fact, the danger that American shipping will be controlled by trusts comes principally from the railroads who desire, by controlling the coastwise trade, to thus prevent water competition in order that they may thus maintain rates. It is for this reason that the section in the bill was inserted which will enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to prevent such control.

To allow the railroads to operate ships would destroy competition in rates by driving out all independent ships. The independent competitor would be dependent entirely on the revenues received from his vessels. The railroad vessels would be operated only as a part of their systems. They could put the price down even below the cost of carriage until they had driven their independent competitors from the field and then make rates high enough to protect the transcontinental lines in their desired schedules of rates. The railroad-owned vessels would thus become commerce destroyers.

It should be remembered that railroads do not embark in ocean commerce for its own sake, but only for such purpose as will enable them to limit or destroy competition, to increase rates and consequent dividends.

I am glad the bill affords a remedy for this. Under its terms we will prevent either railroad or trust control of our coastwise trade and thus secure not only reasonable rates on water transportation but also the benefits that will come from reductions on railway transportation compelled by water competition.

BENEFITS.

It is argued that it will be of no benefit either to the ships or to the people to remit the tolls.

It is contended that a toll of $1 per net ton will not be large enough to appreciably affect the traffic. But it is shown that vessels, in order to profitably use the canal, will be of from 4,000 to 10,000 net registered tonnage. A charge of $4,000 to $10,000 on a single voyage is not an inconsiderable item. It is almost self-evident that to thus reduce the expense of a contemplated expedition will directly and to that extent encourage it and thus stimulate the enterprise. This will be of direct benefit both to the shipowner and to the shipper.

The observation is hardly necessary that every increased item in the cost of transportation while paid in the first instance by the shipper is added to the cost of the product and is paid eventually by the ultimate consumer. Thus the burden of the toll charged is borne by the people and not by the shipowners. It is a tax on them and not on the ships.

Experts agree that as a general proposition heavy freight can be transported by water at one-third the cost of railway carriage. If that be true, the inauguration of water as a competitor of railway transportation must necessarily bring reductions in railway transportation rates.

It is admitted by transportation experts that the establishment of water transportation will bring about a readjustment, a classification of traffic by which the heavier and cheaper commodities will go to the water carriers. For instance, lumber, a great necessity of the interior, is now transported by rail from the Columbia and Puget Sound regions to Iowa and Illinois. The principal cost to the consumer is the cost of transportation. If lumber can be shipped through the canal to New Orleans and thence barged to Iowa and Illinois points on the Mississippi, the transportation cost can be reduced more than two-thirds.

An experimental shipment of barley from San Francisco was recently made. It was carried by ship to Panama, thence by rail across the Isthmus to Colon, thence by ship to New Orleans, and thence by barge up the Mississippi to St. Louis. The cost of carriage was $4,200 less by this method than was charged by the railways. It is manifest that if the shipment could be made without breaking bulk from San Francisco through the canal to New Orleans, and thence by barge to its destination, the transportation cost could be still further reduced.

No other example is necessary as to the effect of water competition on railway rates than the reduction of rates on the railways east of Chicago by the competition of water transportation on the Great Lakes and the Erie Canal. They have been forced down by such competition to reasonable figures.

No reduction of transcontinental rates can be made that will not be reflected by the rates to and from interior points, and the great Mississippi Valley will not only profit directly by her opportunity for river rates, connecting at New Orleans with ocean shipping, but also by the reflected reductions compelled by transcontinental competition.

IS IT A SUBSIDY?

It is asserted over and over again that to exempt our coastwise shipping is to subsidize it. The contention that free tolls is a subsidy is strenuously urged. Indeed it may be said that the strength of the opposition to free tolls lies in that cry. Subsidy is an unpopular word, and to label anything a subsidy is to discredit it.

But free tolls is not in any sense a subsidy. If to make free a Government improvement for the use of American citizens is a subsidy, then all public improvements are subsidies. Hundreds of millions have been spent on all kinds of public improvements all over the land. Harbors have been improved, rivers dredged and canalized, canals have been constructed—all have been made free to American citizens because paid for by their money, and yet these have not been regarded as subsidies. It is impossible to equalize the benefits of any public improvement. In the view of gentlemen here if a discrimination is shown a subsidy is established. On that line of reasoning a discrimination is made against the people of Indiana whenever a post office is built in Ohio. If that is logical, a discrimination is made against California whenever an Atlantic port is improved.

What do gentlemen propose? Is it suggested that we shall charge our people for the use of every improved waterway? Then support should be given the bill of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN], who proposes to exact tolls from every American ship for the use of every harbor, river, and canal on which the United States has put any improvement of any kind. That is at least logical. It would tax interstate commerce; it would impose a burden on trade between the States; but it would do no more than is proposed by this bill.

The Soo Canal connects Lakes Superior and Huron. Through it passes an almost incredible commerce. Thirty-six million tons passed through it last year. Why not tax that commerce? That canal was built by the Government. It is maintained at large expense by the Government. But no one proposes tolls there. Is the exemption from tolls there a subsidy? And if not there, why at Panama?

A TAX ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

But the question is not one of subsidy. To impose tolls on American ships at Panama is to tax commerce. In spirit, if not in letter, the Constitution prohibits any restraint or tax or imposition on commerce between the States. Under certain circumstances the Government has allowed private companies to build a bridge or improve a waterway and allowed the imposition of a toll for its use. But that is upon the theory that the private interests, having made the investment and thus relieved the Government of that cost, were entitled to charge a toll to reimburse them. Never before has it been proposed that the Government, having made an improvement, should charge its citizens for its use. Our internal commerce has been our greatest national achievement. It is not only greater than that of any other nation, but it is nearly equal to that of all Europe. Whatever our tariff policy may have been with regard to foreign trade, here we have free trade on a scale of almost inconceivable magnitude. Now, for the first time, we are asked to abandon that policy and impose a duty on our internal commerce. And, strange to say, that proposition comes from that side of the House where hitherto the advocates of the greatest obtainable measure of free trade were found. It is a strange position to advocate restrictions and burdens on domestic commerce but to favor freedom in foreign commerce; to advocate the desirability of relieving the people as far as possible from burdens on our foreign commerce, but to impose it on our domestic.

AMERICAN INTERESTS.

It is particularly noticeable that in this debate all appeals to American interests are deprecated and condemned. It has been said as applicable to those who think that American interests are entitled to consideration by an American Congress that "patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel." It has been said that we never hear of the American flag in this House but there is some sinister motive behind it. Singular sentiments these coming from Representatives of the American people! And remarkable certainly must be conditions that would warrant condemning as demagogic all arguments for the protection and preservation of American interests!

It may be thought by some gentlemen that the only persons professing patriotism in America to-day are scoundrels, and that no expression of love for the American flag is now made unless to cover graft. But there are some of us who refuse to accept such a belief. There are some of us who even confess to a belief that there is still some patriotism in the land; that there are still to be found among our people those who love the flag and what it represents. There are some of us who believe that the day has not yet come when it is necessary to apologize for an honest endeavor to protect and preserve the interests of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LLOYD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to make a suggestion about a recess and further procedure under the pending bill.

Mr. LAMB. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. LAMB, Mr. LEVER, and Mr. HAUGEN.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. TAGGART, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. DAUGHERTY, for 10 days, on account of sickness.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and a joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 6508. An act to exempt from cancellation certain desert-land entries in the Chuckawalla Valley, Cal.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4007. An act for the relief of the J. Kennard & Sons Carpet Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. J. Res. 107. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of permits to erect reviewing stands in connection with the unveiling of the Columbus memorial statue on the Union Station Plaza to the citizens' general executive committee of the Columbus memorial unveiling; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 18335. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 18337. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 18954. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 18955. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 5624. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

ANTIOPTION BILL.

Mr. LAMB, from the Committee on Agriculture, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to file the views of the minority on the bill (H. R. 18323) to prohibit interference with commerce among the States and Territories and with foreign nations, and to remove obstructions thereto, and to prohibit the transmission of certain messages by telegraph, telephone, cable, or other means of communication between States and Territories and foreign nations. (H. Rept. 681, p. 2.)

PANAMA CANAL—RECESS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of debate on this bill, to continue not later than 11 o'clock to-night, and that on to-morrow, when the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, the general debate shall not continue for longer than two hours, after which the bill shall be read under the five-minute rule, and that when sections 5 and 11 are reached they be passed to the end of the bill for consideration.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not the gentleman proposing to close general debate before those desiring to discuss the bill have been given an opportunity to do so?

Mr. ADAMSON. We are providing for three hours to-night and two hours to-morrow. That makes five more hours, and I think that will be sufficient to meet all the requests I have had as to time.

Mr. MONDELL. Evening debate to empty benches is not very profitable and satisfactory to anybody. It is no more effort than to print in the RECORD, except that a man has an opportunity to talk to the galleries, which do not vote on the subject.

Mr. MANN. I apprehend there will be more people here to-night than there were here during the latter part of the afternoon.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have known some mighty good speeches to be made here at night sessions. I have made them myself. My motion will provide five hours' debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night, and that the general debate on this canal bill shall run not longer than 11 o'clock p. m. and shall be entirely confined to the bill; that when the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to-morrow for considering this bill there will be only two hours of general debate on it; then, when under the five-minute rule section 5 and section 11 are reached, they shall be passed informally and without prejudice to the end of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. You are cutting off the time for supper under this recess proposition.

Mr. RAKER. I know; but what I want to know is, will there be any disposition to urge an early vote on the bill under the five-minute rule, so there will be no opportunity to present the matter fully as to sections 5 and 11?

Mr. ADAMSON. Our expectation is that most of the time will be devoted to those two sections. We do not anticipate much difference as to the other sections.

Mr. RAKER. As to those two sections, there will be no disposition to rush it through and limit it, will there?

Mr. ADAMSON. Not in my mind or heart.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Chair will appoint Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia to preside to-night as Speaker pro tempore.

Accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, at 8 o'clock the House was called to order by Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia, the Speaker pro tempore.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Panama Canal bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, with Mr. LLOYD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 21969.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, as the time approaches for the completion of the Panama Canal it becomes important to turn our attention to the problem of the permanent government of the little stretch of territory which is destined to play an important part in the future military and commercial history of the world.

The acquisition of the zone and the construction of the canal have proceeded so rapidly that we have scarcely had time to consider the questions bearing upon permanent control and occupation. Thus far we have regarded the zone as an immense construction camp under military discipline. The people on the zone are mainly those whom we have brought or sent there for the purpose of constructing the canal, the work being done under the supervision of officers of the United States Army, and the purpose to be accomplished the digging of the canal with the greatest possible expedition, efficiency, and economy. When the construction days are over, however, a form of government adapted to such temporary conditions must give way to something of a permanent nature. The views of public men on the question of a permanent government will differ, according to their ideas of the paramount purpose of the canal. One view will be dominated by the idea that the canal is primarily a military necessity, the other view by the thought that its highest purpose is the promotion of peace and commerce.

We have had in the brief discussion on this bill the most brilliant argument, the most learned debate that it has been my fortune to listen to in this House; some of the most masterly speeches, replete with information and erudition. The speech to-day of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] was a remarkable presentation of facts governing the movement of the great commerce in the civilized world. Scarcely a factor that enters into the movement of that commerce and the channels which it will seek, or ought to seek, seems to have been omitted by him in his wonderful grasp of the subject. But in all of that remarkable address, which showed how the Panama Canal could be made of permanent usefulness to the commerce of the world, I listened in vain for one word that showed how a single, solitary vessel carrying the American flag would go through the canal. He told us how Liverpool could use the canal to reach the markets of South America. He told us how Europe could reach the Orient. He told us how England would be brought in close touch with her colonies. But nowhere was a single flag bearing the Stars and Stripes going through the canal.

As the canal approaches its completion the American people will look upon it as either a pure military necessity, the cost for which must be charged off as other items of military expense are charged off, or they will look upon it as they have been taught to look upon it—as a great agency for the promotion of American commerce. If the present bill, unamended and unmodified, becomes a law in relation to the Panama Canal, the net result is that we have spent $400,000,000 for no purpose on earth except to bring a battleship once in 40 years from the Pacific Ocean to the Atlantic Ocean in time of war. [Applause.] Every nation on the globe, with its ships, can use the canal to the same advantage as ourselves, and, in addition, we have even excluded ourselves from the ordinary advantage that every nation claims for its purely coastwise commerce.

If our treaties will not bear the construction that the coastwise commerce, at least of the United States, is entitled to preferential rates in the canal, then we are worse off than we would be if we had not built the canal, for we have put forever the carrying trade and monopoly of the commerce of South America into the hands of the English and the Germans.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does any gentleman here who opposes section 5 make any argument in favor of free tolls for our ships going to the western coast of South America?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Who is the man.

Mr. BORLAND. I am.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman is the first one, and I believe he would not have said so if I had not suggested it.

Mr. BORLAND. I will make what argument I can in regard to it. The cost of the canal is $400,000,000. The interest on that at 3 per cent is $12,000,000. The majority report of the committee says it is necessary that somebody pay for this canal, and gives this as a reason for charging tolls to American ships. The report further says that by the highest estimate placed on the tonnage that will go through the canal by no possibility can it pay the interest on the cost of the investment; therefore it is only possible for us to get any return from our investment by encouraging American commerce from the east coast to the west coast of America. We are told that we are bound by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty not to discriminate in favor of American ships as to the coastwise trade of the west coast of South and Central America. We are told that we have no such control over the commerce going to the Orient as will place us in any advantageous position in comparison with the subsidized ships of England or of Germany, and that the sole dividend the American people can draw on that $400,000,000 investment is the possible encouragement of shipping going through the canal between the east and west coasts of America.

If there be not that dividend, then there is no dividend from the $400,000,000 invested except the possible saving of the expense, once in 40 years, in taking a battleship around Cape Horn. We all hope that the need of such expenses of taking battleships from one coast to the other will be on rare occasions and very few and far between.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman does not claim that even if the tolls have to be paid there will be any failure of the commerce between the eastern and western coasts of America to go through the canal, does he?

Mr. BORLAND. No.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. It will go through anyway, so that the tolls proposed are really of no account. The canal will be patronized just the same for all the commerce there is between one coast and the other.

Mr. BORLAND. I am not sure that I understand the gentleman's question. If I understand him, he says that even if the tolls have to be paid, the canal will be patronized as to all the commerce there is.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. And that therefore it is useless to remit the tolls?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Except to the people who will ultimately have to pay them. We take the position that somebody must pay a certain amount of money, and that the people who get the most direct benefit are the ones who ought to pay, rather than the people who do not get the direct benefit. Whatever has to be paid will be taxed back upon the people. That is our position.

Mr. BORLAND. Has not the gentleman refuted his own argument? I understand the gentleman to say that if the ships going through from the Atlantic to the Pacific pay the tolls, the amount will be so negligible in quantity that they would not be of any consequence in supporting the canal.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I did not say that.

Mr. BORLAND. I understood the gentleman to say that the amount would be negligible.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I say that the tolls on the commerce coming through the canal after it is in operation will be negligible compared with the benefits that will be conferred upon commerce.

Mr. BORLAND. What commerce? That is what we are trying to get at.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Ships coming from one coast to the other. In other words, any man who owns a ship and can now compete with the railroads will get at least $4 a ton benefit by going through the canal. He can pay one-half dollar a ton to the Government for going through the canal and save $3.50 on every ton of cargo. He will get $3.50 benefit on every ton and will give the Treasury 50 cents benefit on a ton of actual cargo, so that the amount charged per cargo ton—50 cents—is negligible. That is what they say. That is what Mr. Deering says.

Mr. BORLAND. As I still understand the gentleman, he says that the amount of the tolls will be negligible either to the ship or to the Government. If they are negligible to the ships, they are of course negligible to the Government, and the amount of tolls we collect could very well be dispensed with, because they would be relatively unimportant in comparison with the enormous amount of the investment. But I want to take the gentleman's words at their face value. Suppose that a 4,000-ton ship only saves $4,000 or a 10,000-ton ship only saves $10,000, that it only amounts to $1 a ton on the load of that ship, I ask the gentleman how far inland will that carry each ton of that freight brought by the ship? How much farther will it carry it into the interior of the country to compete with the transcontinental railroads? Every 50 cents a ton that is taken off is of that much advantage in reaching farther and farther into the interior and productive regions of the country. [Applause.] For the great problem that has always confronted the people of the Mississippi Valley, I want to tell gentlemen of this committee, has not been the question of producing, but the question of transporting. We want to get our stuff to the seaboard at the cheapest price possible, and then get it into the markets of the world.

If we have to produce it in competition with the markets of the world, if we must sell our goods in Europe under conditions with the highest competition, we must figure that every penny it costs us to get our goods to the seaboard and to Liverpool is so much out of the pockets of the producer, and so much out of the pockets of everyone from the small merchant up, whose prosperity depends on that of the producer.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I prefer not to yield further at this time, because my time is so limited. I desire to refer in that connection to some of the other features of this bill very briefly, because I do not expect to occupy the attention of Members very long. I have read the report of the committee that the tolls that can be collected from the coastwise vessels are negligible. If they are negligible, and if we have an investment of $400,000,000, the interest on which is accumulating at the rate of $12,000,000 a year, and there is any possibility that by remitting those tolls as to coastwise vessels, we can increase the number of coastwise vessels; then, that is one dividend, at least, that we ought to draw from the construction of the canal.

I believe further that if we do not have this method of encouraging the coastwise ships of this country, the carrying trade will remain as it has been—under foreign flags. I believe that gentlemen will be back here demanding some sort of a subsidy, not only for coastwise vessels, but to all vessels, in order to encourage again the American flag upon the ocean.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I desire to state to the gentleman that I have always been in favor of a subsidy for our ships engaged in foreign commerce, and I would be for it again, even more than you are asking for it for this interstate commerce.

Mr. BORLAND. I will say that I am not in favor of a subsidy.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. So far as commerce needs it, but interstate commerce does not.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. How does the gentleman demonstrate that the remission of the proposed toll of 50 cents a ton will have any influence in developing coastwise shipping?

Mr. BORLAND. Frankly I do not think that that thing can be demonstrated in advance. I think any gentleman can take a piece of paper and formulate theories and figures on that subject to his heart's content, and those who favor charging the tolls can sit down and figure out that the toll is absorbed somewhere and does not reach the consumer. I have seen gentlemen figure that out in regard to a protective tariff. Gentlemen have figured out that all kinds of charges placed on commerce are absorbed somewhere, but my belief is that ultimately the consumer in domestic commerce pays the entire cost of transportation added to the article produced, and that in foreign commerce, where we come in competition with foreign people, the American producer pays the entire cost of transportation, and that there is no absorption of it at all.

Mr. RAKER. Suppose in the freight from New York to San Francisco we could deliver at San Francisco at a dollar a ton cheaper, or vice versa, is it not possible that we will get the benefit, the intermountain States, by getting an opportunity to get our produce cheaper, and thereby get more and cheaper products?

Mr. BORLAND. I think so. I think the Pacific coast will be able to go back farther into the interior and take more products from the Pacific coast there and around to New York in that way.

Mr. RAKER. And the same way with the eastern coast.

Mr. BORLAND. With the eastern coast the same.

Mr. KNOWLAND. And with the southern coast also.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. Of course, the gentleman understands that our coastwise trade is protected now by coastwise laws.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. And that no foreign ships can enter into the coastwise trade. Our coastwise trade has a monopoly. Does not my colleague believe that, whether we charge them a dollar per net registered ton or let them go through free, there will be just as many ships engaged in the coastwise trade as there is cargo to transport?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I do not. I live on great transcontinental railroads, and I realize that the carrying facilities of the railroad in competition with the water haul are such that, even at the higher rates on account of the regularity of service and the promptness of delivery, the railroads have an advantage.

I know that you have got to put the water carriage at the lowest possible point in order to compete with the transcontinental railroads. Every expense you put upon the water carriers is so much advantage to the transcontinental railroads, added to their natural advantage.

Mr. HAMLIN. We are taking off that water carriage $4 a ton by giving the canal.

Mr. BORLAND. The fact we are now taking off the $4 a ton by saving the land haul across the Isthmus, to that extent encouraging shippping through the Panama Canal for coastwise vessels, the remission of tolls ought to be another encouragement to increase the carrier trade for the entire western country.

Mr. HAMLIN. In regard to the objection the gentleman made awhile ago as to the competition between the water and railroad carriers, I will call attention to the testimony taken before the committee, when his associate upon this proposition, the apostle of free tolls—I refer to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]—was asked this question. I quote:

> The actual cost of moving goods by water from the Atlantic seacoast to the Pacific coast when the canal is completed will be far below the actual cost of moving freight by rail.
> Mr. HUMPHREY. I think that is right; nobody can dispute that.

Now, if that be true, is there any other competition from the transcontinental railroads?

Mr. BORLAND. The transcontinental railroads, the rail carriers, can get business at a higher rate than the water carriers. There are natural reasons why that is true, too numerous to enter into here. Every advantage that the water carrier can have to secure more trade is to that extent a more active competition with transcontinental railroads. Then another well-demonstrated fact: Every advantage the water carrier is deprived of is that much added weight in favor of the transcontinental railroads.

Mr. HAMLIN. If they can carry and pay these tolls for less money than it actually costs the railroads to haul, will not this traffic go by water?

Mr. BORLAND. No. I think I have answered that correctly. I said the railroads can get the business at a higher rate, because they carry winter as well as summer; they have regular deliveries, they have a way of soliciting trade, they take a carload and deliver it at a man's back door or deliver it at a man's warehouse, or deliver it at a grain elevator, and there are a thousand reasons I have not the time to go into why the rail carrier gets the business. You have to put the water carrier on a level of rates much below the railroad before they can compete with the railroad. Now, I do not wish to spend any more time on that question.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think the gentleman referred to freight between coast to coast. Now, naturally the lower the toll the more advantage the interior will get because the shipments will be made by rail to the interior and the advantage of the water route will be reflected; it always has been for the last 30 years.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to call the attention of the committee again to the fact that unless some advantage is derived by coastwise shipping there is absolutely no dividend from the construction of the Panama Canal at the cost of $400,000,000. I hope that not only will we be able to encourage shipping by giving free tolls to the American ships, but I hope we will find a way of actually reaching and controlling the markets of Central and South America, and do that without the necessity of a ship subsidy such as has been hinted at here. The only way in which that can be done in my judgment is by the good old democratic principle of a preferential low tariff for goods coming in in American bottoms. Every American ship should have this advantage, and every ship that wants to ought to be able to fly the American flag and be placed under the American navigation laws, no matter where the ship is built. [Applause.] We believe in free ships to sail under the American flag wherever American trade can be carried. I believe every Central and South American country ought to be told that "the door of trade is no longer closed against you in America; you are no longer driven to seek your markets in Europe; you are no longer driven to seek your banking in Europe; you are no longer driven to buy your goods for a return cargo from Europe, but now you shall have an offer to an open door into this country. We will take a part of your goods here. We will buy something from you in America. We will take a little of your hardwood or your oils or your gum, your natural-forest products and tropical fruits, and such other things that can be shipped here and can be used by the application of American capital and labor." Then, when they get a shipload coming in this direction, and their bank account is here and their credit here, then they will begin to deal with the American merchants. If we subsidize every ship on the ocean to carry the mail to South America and did not allow goods to come back in that ship, it would be a useless and extravagant proceeding. I am opposed to this proposition to subsidize somebody to carry the American flag.

If we would take this $400,000,000 of investment and allow the American business man to get a preferential rate out of it, to get a preferential use, so far as our treaties will justify; if we would seek the friendly commerce of the Central and South American States; if we would invite their trade to come here and would not close our doors to them by a prohibitive tariff; if we would not drive them to Europe to sell their goods and keep their bank accounts; if we would not build a canal for the free use of England and of Germany; if we would turn some American capital and effort through the Panama Canal by means of preferential rates on goods coming in American bottoms this whole question of subsidy would be solved. [Applause.] Here we are not only asked to spend millions of dollars for the canal and to maintain it and protect it and then allow 98 per cent of it to be turned over to England and Germany, our shipping rivals, but we are not to allow the coastwise vessels to go through with a less toll than the English vessel pays in going from San Francisco to Liverpool. That is the principal point I want to make on that particular clause.

I want to discuss now, in some detail, the history and government of the Canal Zone to show why I oppose the military reservation theory.

The plan to construct an interoceanic canal at or near the Isthmus of Panama first assumed importance during the gold rush to California in 1849. The result was the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 between Great Britain and the United States. This treaty contemplated that such a canal would be constructed, probably in Nicaragua or Costa Rica, and that the work would be undertaken by a private company organized under the authority of one or the other of the signatory powers. The controlling motive of this treaty was clearly commercial; it expressly restrained each nation from fortifying the canal or from occupying, colonizing, or exercising sovereignty over any country through which the canal might be constructed, and it was contemplated that other civilized States should be invited to join in the treaty for the protection and neutralization of the canal.

No canal was begun under this treaty. Meanwhile American capitalists had constructed the Panama Railroad, which proved a very valuable property. Later a French company, headed by the celebrated engineer Compt de Lesseps, secured a concession from the Government of Colombia for the construction of a commercial canal across the Isthmus. This canal was actually begun and nearly 80,000,000 cubic yards of excavation made. The failure and subsequent bankruptcy of this company was due to causes partly natural and partly administrative. The thousands of French stockholders lost their money, and after a legal receivership the concessions and property, including the Panama Railroad, passed into the hands of a small band of speculators who acquired the property for a song, with the design of selling it to the United States Government.

In 1901, after the War with Spain, the United States sought and obtained from Great Britain a new convention known as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which superseded the Clayton-Bulwer agreement. This treaty provides that an interoceanic canal shall be constructed entirely by the Government of the United States, or by private corporations with its aid; that the basis of the neutralization of the canal shall be the rules adopted for the free navigation of the Suez Canal; and that no change of territorial sovereignty or of the international relations of the country or countries traversed by the canal shall affect the general principle of neutralization. This treaty omits all mention of fortifications. From this omission it is assumed that our Government regained the right to fortify the canal at the expense of agreeing with Great Britain to waive the terms of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. In other words, Great Britain has conceded to us the right to construct a canal entirely at our own expense and to fortify it as we please, provided that we never charge her ships more than we charge our own, and that we allow her at all times free use of the canal facilities on the same terms as ourselves. As Great Britain has the largest merchant marine in the world, equal to the combined merchant marine of several other countries, it is manifest that as a commercial proposition she will make $10 profit out of the construction of the canal to our $1, and this without any expense to her in either constructing, policing, or protecting the canal. She is quite satisfied that we should restrict our use of the canal to military purposes, so long as we are bound by treaty to accord her every commercial advantage.

The next step in the construction of the canal was the passage of the so-called Spooner Act of January 28, 1902. By this act the President was given power to acquire the property of the new Panama Canal Co., or the alternative of constructing a canal through Costa Rica or Nicaragua. He was empowered to appoint a commission to be charged with the duty of constructing the canal. It is a matter of common history that the negotiations following this act led to a revolution by which the State of Panama seceded from the Republic of Colombia and entered into a treaty with the United States which cleared the way for the acquisition by the United States of the property of the new Panama Canal Co. This treaty between the United States and Panama was proclaimed February 26, 1904, and is the basis of all of the present rights of the United States in the Canal Zone.

The powers of this Government as a sovereign are defined by article 3 of the treaty, as follows:

> The Republic of Panama grants to the United States all the rights, power, and authority within the zone mentioned and described in article 2 of this agreement and within the limits of all auxiliary lands and waters mentioned and described in said article 2 which the United States would possess and exercise if it were the sovereign of the territory within which said lands and waters are located, to the entire exclusion of the exercise by the Republic of Panama of any such sovereign rights, power, or authority.

It may be noticed that this article does not confer actual sovereignty upon the United States, but provides that this Government shall possess all the rights, power, and authority within the zone as if it were sovereign of the territory, to the entire exclusion of the exercise by the Republic of Panama of any such power or authority. This wording is as obscure as the wording of article 2, by which the grant of land is made to this Government. In article 2 the Republic of Panama grants to the United States "in perpetuity the use, occupation, and control of a zone of land." Justice Brewer properly decided that such a grant necessarily carried the fee title, as it entirely excluded the rights, present or reversionary, of any other proprietor. He well stated that the absence of technical words of conveyance could not alter the nature of the title. The same reasoning should apply to the right of sovereignty in section 3 of the treaty. If the United States has all the rights, power, and authority within the zone which it could possess and exercise if it were sovereign of the territory, and it is to exercise these powers to the entire exclusion of the enjoyment by the Republic of Panama of any such rights, power, or authority, it is manifest that there is but one sovereign over the zone and that is the United States. It occupies, therefore, with relation to the Canal Zone the same position that it occupies with relation to the Louisiana Purchase, Alaska, or any other added territory. By the treaty its powers of sovereignty are expressly extended beyond the limits of the Canal Zone for certain purposes. In section 7:

> The Republic of Panama agrees that the cities of Panama and Colon shall comply in perpetuity with the sanitary ordinances, whether of a preventive or curative character, prescribed by the United States, and in case the Government of Panama is unable or fails in its duty to enforce this compliance by the cities of Panama and Colon with the sanitary ordinances of the United States the Republic of Panama grants to the United States the right and authority to enforce same.
> The same right and authority are granted to the United States for the maintenance of public order in the cities of Panama and Colon and the territories and harbors adjacent thereto in case the Republic of Panama should not be, in the judgment of the United States, able to maintain such order.

Following the ratification of the treaty with Panama an act was passed, approved April 28, 1904, to provide for the temporary government of the Canal Zone. Section 2 of this act follows:

> That until the expiration of the Fifty-eighth Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the Canal Zone be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers, as well as the power to make all rules and regulations necessary for the government of the Canal Zone, and all the rights, powers and authority granted by the terms of said treaty to the United States shall be vested in such person or persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President shall direct for the government of said zone and maintaining and protecting the inhabitants thereof in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

This act, which remains substantially unchanged, contains the whole law for the civil government of the zone. It seems to have been assumed that the powers of civil government were vested in the Canal Commission. In fact, the President, on May 9, 1904, issued a letter of instructions to the Secretary of War outlining a plan for such civil government. The Canal Commission has been created and had formulated a complete civil government for the Canal Zone, including courts, police, fire and sanitary regulations, fees and licenses, schools, public works, and other necessary branches. The commission originally acted as the legislative body of the zone. Between August 16, 1904, and March 1, 1905, the commission enacted a number of laws, which are published in book form and numbered from 1 to 24, inclusive. After that time this method of legislation was abandoned and no other acts—or ordinances, as they are called—of the commission have been passed. General legislation has been enacted from time to time under the form of Executive orders signed and promulgated by the President. These Executive orders relate to every possible phase of civil life and cover every known branch of legislation from the qualifications to practice a profession to the procedure for the administration of an estate. In the aggregate they form a large and undigested mass of legislation, in the main fragmentary acts torn from the statute books of various States, which govern in the points expressly covered the conduct and rights of the persons within the zone. As to matters not covered by any specific Executive order the law applicable to rights of individuals is extremely hazy. It seems to be assumed, in accordance with the settled principles of private international law, that where one country acquires sovereignty over a territory which has enjoyed a system of local laws established by a civilized government the local laws shall continue to prevail until they are supplanted by express legislation of the new sovereign. According to this principle there is a vague and ill-defined body of laws, supposed to have been in force under the Colombian Government and to have remained in force after the revolution establishing the independence of Panama. This body of laws, as is the case in all Latin-American countries, is an evolution from the civil or Roman law. Unfortunately this body of laws is a sealed book to the judge sitting in the American courts of the Canal Zone. So far as I am aware few of the judges on that bench have been able to read the Spanish language or have had any knowledge through experience or study of the Colombian law. In but one instance, so far as I know, has it been appealed to as the basis of a decision in the American courts. In a recent case it was decided that a person injured on the Panama Railroad by the negligence of its employees had no right of action against the railroad company, because under the principles of the Colombian law the employer is not legally responsible for the negligence of his employee.

This chaotic condition of the law and of private rights is emphasized by two decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of Coulson v. The Government of the Canal Zone (212 U. S., p. 553) it was decided that a writ of error to review a judgment of the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. No written opinion was filed, but the effect of this decision is that the judgment of the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone is final in all cases, and there is no power of review in the Supreme Court of the United States or any other tribunal. Another phase of the same question was presented in the case of Kaufman v. Smith (206 U. S., 610), in which the Supreme Court of the United States held:

> The questions involved in this case as to the right of the Government to collect duties on merchandise coming into the United States from the Canal Zone, under the act of March 2, 1905, have already been settled by the case of Downes v. Bidwell (182 U. S., 244), and the writ of error is dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Downes v. Bidwell is the celebrated case in which the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the Constitution did not extend to the island of Porto Rico. The Supreme Court therefore holds, in accordance with that case, that the Constitution of the United States does not extend to the Canal Zone.

By a gradual but very natural encroachment, all of the power, legislative, executive, and even judicial, within the Canal Zone has been transferred to and absorbed by the chairman and chief engineer of the Canal Commission. I say judicial, not only because there have been no cases in the zone courts against either the commission or the railroad company but that have been promptly reversed by the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone, but because I have seen a copy of a letter from the chairman and chief engineer of the Canal Commission to one of the judges of the circuit court refusing to recognize the authority of a receiver of private property appointed by a decree of said court. In other words, we have in the zone a complete and perfect type of a benevolent despotism. A benevolent despotism may work very satisfactorily for a short time amid the enthusiasm of a great scientific work which calls out all that is best in the patriotism and professional ambition of men, and especially where the benevolent despot is drawn from and centers upon himself the public sentiment of 93,000,000 people, who have been trained by a century and a half of self-government. After the enthusiasm of the construction work is over, however, and public attention is diverted to other matters, it is perfectly manifest that such a system of government would be the worst possible, not only for the governed, but also for the governors, and especially for the public.

It may be said that it will be difficult to frame and enforce a suitable government for such a territory with such a population. Conceding the difficulty, are we to assume that the only solution is to drive the population off at the point of a bayonet? Every foot of land in the Canal Zone not actually needed for the operation of the canal should be sold, not leased, but sold in fee to American citizens. Preference should be given to the employees of the canal. As to government, the form should first be that of a Territory, with a governor appointed by the President, but without a legislative assembly. One United States court should be established, with the usual provision for review by a circuit court of appeals and by the Supreme Court of the United States. Legislation should be enacted for the zone by Congress in the same manner that legislation is now enacted for the District of Columbia. It has long been the desire of American lawyers to secure, under national authority, a complete codification of the laws of this country, especially upon commercial subjects. Commendable efforts have been made by the American Bar Association to secure uniform State laws upon commercial papers, bills of lading, and so forth. Here is an opportunity for both practical and experimental legislation that may well challenge the attention of the American Bar Association. When England acquired India, a vast country of petty sovereignties, with a decayed civilization, she found it necessary to enact codes of laws on commercial subjects for the use of the British subjects who were developing India commercially; hence the English contract act, the English evidence act, and so forth. No such opportunity has been before presented to our country to codify and enact, under the authority of Congress, an advanced and complete commercial code for the use of American citizens. It is a subject worthy of the thought of the entire bar. Such a code applicable to Panama could be made a model for the commercial codes of each of the 48 States and would have its influence upon the commercial life of the entire world. It would establish a uniform system of commercial rights which would bring us into touch with all of our neighboring countries and form the basis of an international code of commerce. Such an international code is the great need of the present day and the biggest contribution that the legal profession can at this time make to the advancement of civilization. [Applause.]

So much for the powers of the United States as sovereign. Its rights as a private proprietor are founded on other sections of the treaty.

The second article of the treaty provides:

> The Republic of Panama grants to the United States in perpetuity the use, occupation, and control of a zone of land and land under water for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of said canal of the width of 10 miles, extending to the distance of 5 miles on each side of the center line of the route of the canal to be constructed.

By this article a grant is made by the Republic of Panama of all right, title, and interest it has in the land embraced in the strip, containing approximately 400 square miles, extending from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean. It seems to be intended, and has been construed, to be a grant of the full title to all public land claimed by the Republic of Panama within the zone. This question was squarely decided in Wilson v. Shaw (204 U. S., p. 33), in which case suit was brought to restrain the officers of the United States from expending money in the construction of the canal on the ground, among others, that the United States did not own the land upon which the canal was being constructed. On this point Justice Brewer, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> It is hypercritical to contend that the title of the United States is imperfect, and that the territory described does not belong to this Nation, because of the omission of some of the technical terms used in ordinary conveyances of real estate.

By the sixth article of the treaty the Republic of Panama grants to the United States the right to acquire by purchase or eminent domain any lands or other property within the cities of Colon and Panama, which may be considered necessary for canal purposes. By the eighth article of the treaty the Republic of Panama grants to the United States all reversionary interest which it may have as successor to the Republic of Colombia in the property and franchises of the new Panama Canal Co. This treaty having resulted, as was contemplated by both parties, in the purchase by the United States of the property of the new Panama Canal Co., has made the United States the proprietor not only of all the public land within the Canal Zone, but of all the private property of the new Panama Canal Co. in the zone and in the cities of Panama and Colon, and the reversionary interest of the Republic of Panama in all the land and other property of the new Panama Canal Co. The Federal Government claims, therefore, that it now owns the fee title to the public land in the Canal Zone, together with several valuable pieces of real estate in the city of Panama and nearly all the real estate in the city of Colon. The city of Colon is built almost entirely upon land, the ownership of which was in the new Panama Canal Co., and which is leased to the persons constructing and occupying the buildings. The United States, since the acquisition of this property, has still further improved it by the construction of new docks, warehouses, terminals, and other facilities.

The United States has further enlarged its holdings of real estate within the Canal Zone by extinguishing, through the power of eminent domain, the private titles in such portions of the land as are taken or damaged by the construction of the canal and the filling of the lake. None of the real estate acquired by the United States has been sold. A system of leasing has been adopted under the authority of an act of Congress approved February 11, 1909. By this act the President is authorized to grant leases of public lands in the Canal Zone not needed for actual use by the canal, for a period not exceeding 25 years, and in tracts not exceeding 50 hectares. The terms and conditions of the lease were left to the discretion of the President, but the lessee must be the head of a family, over 21 years of age, and the lease must be made in good faith, for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation.

At this time, as we approach the completion of the project and its practical operation, we must choose between the only two systems of administration that will be possible. If the canal is regarded as primarily a military enterprise, with only such commercial advantages as are incidental, then the Government might be purely military and placed under the arbitrary control of a military governor, accountable only to the President. This seems to be the view of the present chairman and chief engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission. As a logical result, he advises that the entire zone should be cleared of inhabitants when the canal is completed, except the employees engaged in its operation and soldiers quartered there for defense. Of course he believes that a large number of soldiers should be maintained there, together with fortifications and land batteries sufficient not only to repel an attack by sea, but to withstand any possible invading force that might approach by land. The entire zone is to be made a military reservation, which would necessitate the acquisition by the United States of the title to all the private land which it does not now own. The United States now owns, according to the highest claim, about 60 per cent of the land in the zone, so that to turn the zone into a military reservation it would be necessary to acquire the remaining 40 per cent.

I say the United States "claim to own," because that claim is not admitted. We admit a private ownership of about 40 per cent, represented by the land marked there in green on the map. We claim all of that marked in yellow as railroad concession and all marked pink as public land, but, in fact, a large amount of that is in possession of people who claim it themselves, and if we undertook to acquire it we would find a large number of claimants with whom we would have to settle.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to have about 15 minutes more.

Mr. ADAMSON. That rests in the discretion of the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes more to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Thank you.

Under the treaty with Panama the value of private land acquired by the United States in the zone must be fixed by a joint commission appointed by the Government of the United States and the Government of Panama, composed equally of Americans and citizens of Panama. Only one such commission, known as the Denby Commission, has been appointed during the life of the treaty. This commission awarded to private owners prices below what they claimed, but greatly in excess of what the United States officers contended were reasonable. The result is that the chairman and chief enginer of the commission is strongly opposed to any further joint commission under the treaty, and has followed the good old soldierly way of seizing the lands necessary to be used and leaving the private owner to litigate as long as he chooses. Under any plan, however, it is apparent that the acquisition of the remaining 40 per cent of the land within the zone would be made at enormous expense. To further emphasize his views, the chairman contends that the presence of a producing and trading population on the zone would greatly impair its military strength, and even hints that it might introduce an element of danger; further, that the land itself is worthless for the purpose of cultivation. It may be said that these views are not shared by other military members of the commission.

Again, it is inevitable that warehouses and other business establishments of great shipping centers will spring up at each end of the canal. By the peculiar terms of the treaty with Panama the cities of Colon and Panama, while geographically within the zone, are excluded from American jurisdiction. From this it results that the limits of these cities are carefully defined and are completely surrounded by American territory. Hence, the growth of these cities, resulting from an overflow of their commercial population, must be upon American territory. To one who is used to commercial affairs and who has made an actual personal observation of conditions at both ends of the canal, it is almost inconceivable that the military occupation theory can be carried out in practice. It would leave absolutely no room for the cities to expand except by sufferance, which, in plain English, means by favoritism toward those who could secure locations upon the military reservation.

I am frank to say that after three visits to the zone and a fairly careful study of its commercial and physical characteristics, I am entirely opposed to the military reservation theory. The land is not remarkably good, but it will produce in paying quantities all of the tropical products, including bananas, oranges, lemons, limes, grapefruit, mango, casaba, guava, coconut, chocolate bean, coffee, pineapples, and rubber. The principal drawback of the Tropics is not the unproductiveness of the soil, but the difficulties of transportation and the unhealthfulness of the climate. The land within the zone enjoys a very fortunate situation both as regards transportation and sanitation. It will have the most remarkable transportation facilities of any tropical district in the world, and I believe that every foot of available land would be eagerly taken up by our American employees as fast as the construction force is disbanded. In fact, our employees are now going just beyond the edge of the zone into the Republic of Panama and investing their money in tracts of land there with the intention of remaining. If a force of white Americans can be induced to live in the zone along the route of the canal, even though they employed largely Jamaica negro labor in operating their plantations, it would not be a menace, but might be an aid to the protection, repair, and operation of the canal.

After we have acquired the lands of the zone, then the bill provides that no person shall go on or be upon the zone without the permission of the military government.

Now, if there must be a military reservation, and nobody can be on the zone without the permission of the governor, that means that every location on the zone is a matter of permission or of sufferance or of favoritism, if you choose to call it so. That condition, it seems to me, is absolutely incompatible with any considerable growth of South and Central American trade.

When the canal is completed, a vessel entering from the Caribbean Sea will proceed about 8 miles on a sea level to the foot of the Gatun Dam. At this point it will be raised by a flight of three locks to the level of the lake. The lake will be 165 square miles in extent, dotted with beautiful islands and surrounded by the luxuriant verdure of the Tropics. A sail of 23 miles across the lake will bring the vessel to the entrance of the cut at Bas Obispo. From thence there will be more than 9 miles of narrow canal through the Culebra Cut to Pedro Miguel, whereby means of one lock the vessel is lowered to the little lake of Miraflores. At this point two more locks permit the vessel to reach ocean level on the Pacific, from whence a journey of 7 miles brings it out to the Bay of Panama at Balboa. The time consumed in this trip would enable the passengers to cross the Isthmus by railroad and reach Panama several hours ahead of the ship to transact business or to entertain and amuse themselves. The trip will be a very beautiful one, especially in the dry season of early winter, and the zone may easily become one of the most delightful winter resorts in the world. It may be dotted from end to end with beautiful hotels, equipped with American conveniences, surrounded by spreading verandas, and shaded by stately groves of palms. Every amusement would be within the reach of the winter guest—horseback riding, canoeing, golf, tennis, sailing, surf bathing, deep-sea fishing, and numerous exploring trips to neighboring islands.

But above and beyond all this in the minds of most Americans, that great mass of our citizens whose money has paid for the construction of this great work, is the thought that the supreme importance of the canal consists in the fact that it will open up new channels of trade to American commerce. If we can count on the friendship and trade of our South American neighbors and turn to our own shores some of the wealth that is flowing year by year to Europe, we shall perhaps regain many fold the enormous cost of the canal. This means that the canal ports will soon be busy with American commerce, crowded with American merchants, and rapidly building up with American warehouses and branches of American commercial establishments. It is hardly to be conceived that we should handcuff ourselves through the medium of a military reservation and turn the best commercial advantages of the canal over to England, Germany, and our other commercial rivals.

I want to read to the House briefly the reply of a high official of the canal on that point. He said:

For defensive purposes of the locks and dams we will require everything from Paraiso to the sea and from the locks to the Canal Zone lines. We ought not to allow settling of any kind to come between the earthworks that we contemplate constructing for the defense of the locks and the locks themselves, nor ought we to allow the occupation of any of the land over which an enemy must pass in order to reach these earthworks. That, then, practically limits the Canal Zone from Paraiso to the Gatun Lake, so far as the south side of the Isthmus is concerned, and from Gatun Lake to the Atlantic on the other side. If it were not necessary to protect the canal, the terminal cities which Judge Feuille spoke of this morning would be advisable, and it is possible that necessity may force us to it later on. The proper military protection of this canal is against any such establishment of cities at the terminals.

Now, I submit, gentlemen, that we have gone plenty far enough under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, in turning this canal over to the English and German merchants, after we have dug the canal at our own expense. We have gone plenty far enough in encouraging shipping to come in that direction and take away the commerce of Central and South America. We can not afford to go as far as to cut off our coastwise trade with the western coast of North America, and we can not afford to go so far as to exclude commerce from the Canal Zone under the guise of military protection. This military protection, of course, is the professional idea of the gentlemen who have been constructing the canal. It may be that the training of their profession is responsible for such views. No man can go on the canal with enough dynamite in his pocket to blow up the locks, and, if he did, the ordinary policing of the locks for the distance of a couple of miles would be amply sufficient for all purposes. It is sufficient for the Treasury of the United States, and it will certainly be sufficient for the locks at Gatun. If any hostile nation or hostile individual undertook to blow up the locks, he would probably swoop down there in three or four minutes in an airship and drop enough explosives into the locks to blow them up anyway. It is not the man on foot who is a source of danger; it is the man in the air, and that is no stage joke either, because similar things have actually been done. So that we can not protect the locks by earthworks.

England does not try to police the Suez Canal. Nobody has ever undertaken to police or protect a work of that magnitude. After we have constructed it and dedicated it to the commerce of the world there is absolutely no reason why we should be compelled to police it. I believe there ought to be great commercial cities at both ends of that canal, containing great American warehouses, filled with American manufactured goods, with American banking facilities, American mercantile facilities, American transportation facilities, American insurance facilities, and every facility that this country can furnish to encourage all of the Central and South American trade to seek American aid and an American market. Unless the American people get that kind of a dividend out of the Panama Canal, or if they get nothing out of it except once in 40 years the transportation of a battleship from one coast to the other, they will feel that the $400,000,000 expended has been spent in vain.

I am very glad that these gentlemen on the west coast States have maintained this fight for free tolls, at least for American commerce; but we ought to go much further than that. We ought to provide for preferential duties on all goods coming in American bottoms. We ought to encourage by every possible means a financial and mercantile connection with every Central and South American country, and then the American people—not the Pacific coast alone, but every American producer and every American business man—will begin to realize a dividend upon that $400,000,000, which will vastly increase the prosperity, wealth, and power of our beloved country. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, the Panama Canal when completed will be one of the great wonders of the world. It will be another monument to American genius and American industry. It was built under the auspices of the American Government, it has been paid for by American citizens, and while it is intended to be of benefit to the whole world, I submit that the country which built it and under whose control it will stay, and the people whose money has paid for its construction, are entitled to more than an equal share in its benefits. [Applause.] And yet, what you are proposing here to-day will give a vast percentage of its benefits to foreign countries; and foreign countries realize this fact so well that in every maritime nation in the world ships are being built and money is being invested in shipping companies for the Panama Canal trade.

It is bad enough to realize the fact that has saddened so many American travelers, who have gone all around the world without seeing an American flag or an American ship, and now you propose to limit still further the possibilities of an American merchant marine by placing restrictions upon the shipping that is to go through the canal, restrictions which under no possibilities can be enforced against the ships of any foreign nation. Do you realize that the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. controls $20,000,000 of investments in steamships? Its great steamships on the Atlantic and Pacific will all be able to ply through the Panama Canal, and not one of these ships can be subjected to these restrictions under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty between this country and Great Britain.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the very moment they land their cargoes on American soil they have to pay an import duty?

Mr. LEVY. Yes; as between foreign countries; but they have the whole of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast.

Mr. RAKER. But if they pay the tolls through the canal and then when they undertake to land their products from Canada on either side when they come into the United States they have to pay a toll and revenue tax.

Mr. LEVY. A revenue tax for going through the canal?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no; when they land their products in the United States.

Mr. LEVY. I am not talking about landing cargoes in the United States. I am discussing the matter of carrying goods from one point in Canada through the canal to another point in Canada. But these steamships could carry goods into the United States on payment of tolls and duties.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Does not the gentleman know that section 11 prevents the Canadian ships from going through the canal?

Mr. LEVY. How can that be? You may make restrictions, but you can not enforce them because of the plain terms of the treaty we have made.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The act covers any railroad company that comes under the Interstate Commerce Commission, and every Canadian road comes under the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LEVY. But that provision of this act is clearly inconsistent with the terms of the treaty.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Railroads entirely in Canada would not come under the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LEVY. That is what the Canadian Pacific does.

Mr. KNOWLAND. This provides what they shall not do in the United States.

Mr. LEVY. I do not agree with the gentleman; I do not believe that you can control such a foreign railroad.

Is it possible that we are going to be so blind as to allow another nation to get the cream of the wonderful commercial possibilities which will be opened up by the inauguration of the Panama Canal? The moment you forbid an American ship owned or partly owned by an American railroad company to use the canal you strike one more blow at the American merchant marine and eliminate practically all ships that are flying our flag to-day. [Applause.]

Why should there be objection to an American railroad company building and owning steamships? No private enterprise can attempt, nor will attempt, to build steamships under our present navigation laws; but the great railroad companies build them for the purpose of relieving congestion and taking care of freight at their terminal points. They are to-day the only means of keeping the American flag on ships and sustaining, at least to some degree, the American merchant marine. Are they not regulated sufficiently now by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and is it possible that the misguided hatred of railroads can go so far as to forbid them doing what will be of the utmost benefit to trade and American interests? Is it not enough that the pernicious hindrances to American railroads have already stopped the building of thousands of miles of railroads in this country; and shall we now pass a law that surely will prevent the building and operating of American ships, while other countries are getting ready to take advantage of the new opportunities of trade which the Panama Canal will create?

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is not opposed to the railroads owning shipping going through the canal.

Mr. LEVY. No; I am not.

Mr. MURRAY. I understand, however, that the gentleman from New York believes in adequate and complete regulation by some governmental commission of railroad-holding companies.

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say in that connection that the Interstate Commerce Commission recommend this provision and say it is the most effective method of regulation.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentlemen ought to quarrel among themselves. Whether a railroad should rob the people by freight rates or the steamship company shall rob the people by taking the money out of the Treasury is equally pernicious. They had better make common cause in their raid on the Treasury and their assault on the treaties.

Mr. LEVY. The Canadian Pacific Railway, with its 16,000 miles of railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, has diverted an enormous amount of trade from American railway interests on account of the large opportunities and splendid advantages it enjoys under the Canadian Government, and now you propose to allow it the same benefit on the sea and through our own canal that it has on land. Only a short time ago this company placed an order with the Fairfield Shipbuilding Co., of Glasgow, for two steamships 570 feet long and 68 feet beam, with a speed of 18 knots per hour, to supplement the fleet now engaged in the Pacific trade. The approximate cost of these steamers will be over $2,000,000 each. They already have 16 magnificent steamers in the Atlantic service, 4 in the Pacific service, and 21 on the Pacific coast service—all available for the Panama trade and ready to grasp the opportunity that you are seeking to make us throw away.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to charge up against the gentleman my inability to understand him. What remedy does the gentleman propose? Is he sorry that we built the canal?

Mr. LEVY. No; but I do not believe in putting in all these restrictions. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair takes it that the gentleman from New York does not care to be interrupted.

Mr. ADAMSON. If I take any of his time, I will return it to him fourfold. I did want to suggest that the gentleman from Indiana probably never heard of the man who dug a well and had to buy water to fill it. [Laughter.] Now, when the Government has built a canal, the Ship Trust demands that we hire them to furnish commerce and patronage and that they be allowed to loot the Treasury in addition to being paid otherwise therefor.

Mr. LEVY. Europe and Asia are also interested, and it is conservatively estimated that at least 1,500 ships are in process of building throughout the world for the Panama trade. We have lost magnificent opportunities in South America by neglecting our merchant marine and allowing Germany, England, and other countries to attract trade which should have properly come to us; and now it is proposed to carry out the same policy with regard to the great Pacific trade, which the Panama Canal will open up to us and turn that carrying trade over to foreign bottoms. I can not see either patriotism or sound business sense in the proposition at all, and it is incomprehensible to me that there can be any doubt or question on this matter.

The further proposal to place these shipping interests under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission is most vicious and ridiculous. It takes from six to nine months for the Interstate Commerce Commission to render a decision in domestic railway matters. How long do you suppose it will take them to reach a decision in questions affecting shipping? Is any man blind enough to think that any shipper will wait for the Interstate Commerce Commission rulings when he can obtain a quicker ruling and an immediate service from the competing foreign lines?

The story of our maritime decline is a sad enough one as it is. Eighty-six years ago the percentage of American carriage in foreign trade was 92.5; when the Civil War began, 65.2; when it ended, 27.5; in 1892, 13.3; and it has been steadily declining until now it is only about 8 per cent. If you will allow the Interstate Commerce Commission to get a fair chance at it, I have no hesitancy in predicting that it will take a still further tumble if it is not entirely swept off the surface of the seas.

And, Mr. Chairman, it should not be forgotten that opportunities once lost are extremely hard to regain; and even if some future Congress should show more wisdom and more patriotism than we are showing to-day, the steamship companies of other nations, which, as stated above, are bending every energy and are keenly alive to the vast changes the canal will make in sea carrying trade, will have so intrenched themselves in the firm control of this trade that it will be next to impossible to dislodge them. And it can not be repeated too often that if you carry out the policy outlined here to-day you are making foreign nations the chief beneficiaries of this canal, which is about as wise a proceeding as it would be for a man to build a large and expensive garage fully equipped with every device for the care and maintenance of automobiles, and then going out and hiring the motor cars he needed for his transportation. And the Panama Canal stands in this further position that it is the last, almost desperate, chance we have of retrieving our position as a deep-sea trading nation. Our coast trade has been one of our proudest possessions and one of the most valuable assets of the people of the United States for so many years that to allow this incomprehensible and unjustifiable hatred of railroads to eliminate the last vestige of our mechant marine will most certainly be emphatically and severely rebuked by the American people when they once become cognizant of what this legislation really means.

Even now before the canal is open thousands of our citizens are visiting it on ships that fly a foreign flag and paying tribute to a foreign country. When they see the wonderful work that is being done on the canal they are thrilled with pride at the showing of American skill and American energy, but the great majority of them on their return, along with the patriotic pride that they felt in American achievement in the Panama Zone, bring back also a feeling of shame and deep humiliation when they remember that on the trip going and coming from start to finish they did not see the American flag on an American built and owned steamship.

Do you suppose for one moment that foreign nations will not do the same with the ships of theirs that will pass through the Panama Canal as they now are doing with the ships of theirs that pass through the Suez Canal? Just let us for a moment examine. The Russian Government in 1909 appropriated 650,000 rubles in exact terms to pay the tolls of the Russian volunteer fleet both for tonnage and for men, women, and children carried. The British Pacific & Orient Co. receives in subsidies enough to nearly pay all its canal dues, although it operates through the canal a number of boats apart from the mail steamers. The North German Lloyd receives an annual appropriation on its vessels using the canal of $1,385,000. Japan pays a subsidy of $1,336,947 to the Nippon Yusen Kaisha for its steamers through the Suez Canal to Europe.

The Massageries Maritimes, the largest French company using the Suez Canal, was paid for its lines to China, Japan, Australia, and Madagascar $2,145,000 in subsidies. Austria specifically provides by law for payment of Suez tolls on Austrian steamers from Trieste to Bombay, Calcutta, and Kobe. The Swedish Government calculates its subvention to the Svenska Ostasiastika Kompaniet to represent the amount of tolls paid by the ships of the company for passing through the Suez Canal.

In the meantime, while every foreign government is helping and will continue to help its steamship companies, knowing well that every dollar expended will be returned in tenfold, you not only are against helping, but you are in favor, apparently, of absolutely hindering American ships from competing on any kind of basis with these foreign subsidized lines. I will not say, nor is the question involved, that we should subsidize our steamship lines, but I do object, always have objected, and always will object to allow our Interstate Commerce Commission to penalize them.

Let us see for a moment how well the steamship lines pay in England. The advance in the combined net profit in 1911 over 1910 was over 26 per cent, and with two exceptions every concern in the big group of English ships participated. And even the two exceptions did much better in 1910. I append two tables, the first one showing a dozen representative companies for the last two years, net profit being struck after deducting debenture service, depreciation, and insurance allowances and other changes written off revenue:

	1911	1910	1911	1910	1911	1910
			Per ct.	Per ct.
Cairn Line	£35,900	£2,100	6	Nil.	£12,800	£5,200
Cunard Steamship	222,900	203,300	7½	5	87,300	60,300

Sutherland Steamship	15,400	3,000	7½	5	10,800	1,100

The second table compares the gross receipts of the various companies in 1911 with those of 1910:

	1911	1910	Increase.
Cairn Line	£129,400	£27,600	£101,800
Cunard	3,103,600	3,097,400	6,200

Royal Mail	293,100	181,600	111,500
Sutherland	52,400	9,900	42,500

Among the most successful of the companies is the Pacific Steam Navigation. The latter's report has just appeared, and part of the greatly increased earnings is reflected in the former's accounts through its predominant holding of share capital. Gross profit is up £26,900, and net profit £53,200. So that this company will be in a most favorable condition for the Panama Canal trade.

The liner tonnage of England is actively employed all the year, and especially with the emigration movement to Canada, and that emigration movement to Canada will continue and increase very largely in the next few years, and inevitably increase the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railroad both in freight and passenger traffic enormously, giving them a still further power to use its great resources in extending their steamship lines to use the Panama Canal, while our railroad companies come under the restrictions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the further restrictions, which you are placing upon them by this legislation, will be eliminated as a factor in competing on the sea with our British competitors.

One of the excuses made for this legislation is that it is to discourage monopoly of domestic traffic by placing these restrictions on the railroads, yet a careful study of its real effect will readily show that instead of discouraging monopoly it can easily have the effect of fostering and promoting steamship monopoly, since it would forbid a railroad from establishing a steamship line in competition with an existing independent line, and it certainly would not restrict and might even promote industrial monopoly through the control by large corporations of steamship lines. But the main object and the most serious fault in the entire matter is the advantage that it gives to foreign steamship companies and the tribute it will make Americans pay to foreign Governments.

It means less business for American shipping lines, with the natural result of less business for American industrial enterprises; it means more wages not only to foreign seamen, but to foreign workmen in every field of industrial endeavor; it means taxing the American people for the benefit of people who contribute nothing to the wealth or prosperity of our country; it means a still further decline in the training and development of American sailors, and it will make it still more difficult to man the ships of the United States Navy with American bluejackets. It is not only unnecessary from a commercial and industrial standpoint, but it is—and I regret that I must say so in all candor—unquestionably and undeniably unpatriotic.

While we stand, and hope to stand in all the years to come, on friendly terms with every great nation in the world, yielding to all fair opportunity to compete with us in the markets of the world, it is not selfishness, but the natural and patriotic desire of a nation to take care of its own; to see that we, who bear the burden, who made possible, by our energy and by the wealth which our citizens contributed, this great engineering feat of modern times; it is not selfish for us, I say, to claim our just and fair share of the fruits that will accrue from this enterprise.

Americans have long had the deserved reputation of being good business men. Our factories turn out the finest products in the world; commercial methods are of the very best; and I submit to you gentlemen that there is no reason why we should not apply the same sound American common sense to this question and desist from these constant disturbing attacks on business which are menacing the very industrial life of this Nation. We should spend a little less time in this sort of destructive legislation, for it can be called nothing less, and do a little more constructive work along lines that will make business better, that will increase both our output and its distribution; and while helping our merchant marine and giving our railroads a living chance to expand and to progress, at the same time increase the demand for labor and bring the natural prosperity which belongs to our country and should to-day be ours. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Louisiana or the gentleman from California if he has another speaker this evening.

Mr. BROUSSARD. We have no other one to-night, and we will ask the gentleman from Georgia to proceed if he has any other one here.

Mr. ADAMSON. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] 30 minutes.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I feel that I ought to make an apology to the members of this committee, for the reason that all the gentlemen who address the committee must necessarily traverse the ground with which you are already familiar.

The only justification I have for attempting to use a short space of time is the justifiable pride that any citizen may have in taking a little part in the discussion of legislation that indicates the approach of the completion of the greatest exhibition of genius and skill that the American people have ever exhibited. The completion of the canal that opens up a new pathway for the commerce of the world that has been the dream of all nations for the last 50 or 75 years is about to see its realization through the efforts of the American people, and is one of the greatest achievements since the organization of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, in order that I may occupy as little time as possible, I am going to confine myself to the notes that I have made, and I desire to discuss simply the questions involved in section 5 of this bill, the question of tolls.

I desire at the outset to express my approval of this bill and my purpose to support the same. The completion of this monument to the genius, skill, and ability of the American people in bringing into use this new pathway for the world's commerce is of such immense importance as to require by this body the most careful consideration of those measures intended to secure its most comprehensive and widespread usefulness.

A government for the zone should first be established with responsibility definitely fixed for the exercise of the functions with wisdom and experience.

One of the absorbing questions involved in this legislation is the problem of tolls for use of the canal and the manner of laying them. Gentlemen, in the report on this bill, disclaim any attempt to construe the language of the treaty of the United States with Great Britain lying at the very bottom of the building of the canal and establish by "such construction any precedent or permanent legislative policy or to bind any future Congress, should it be deemed expedient or adjudged competent, to adopt a different basis." There can be no abandonment of the proposition to construe the language of the treaty, and if the national honor is regarded of any consequence the terms of the treaty must be consulted in fixing the rates. Why should we lay uniform rates of tolls or no tolls at all? Because we promised as a condition precedent to any authority to build the canal in the most solemn compact the Government could enter into, a compact that the Government declares to be the supreme law of the land, to administer no "discrimination against any such nation or citizen or subjects in respect to conditions of charges or traffic or otherwise." That promise was made by properly constituted authority and confirmed by the Senate of the United States. I propose to inject into this discussion as a part of my remarks a little history of that transaction. Before what is known as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was adopted, no authority existed for the United States to enter any part of Panama to construct a canal. For the very purpose of laying the authority to do so, our Government negotiated a modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty that provided against either Great Britain or the United States engaging to construct or own any canal or interest in any canal across the Isthmus. This modification in the form of a new treaty was negotiated and confirmed by the Senate on February 22, 1902, and before the British Government would assent to the proposition it made us consent to these provisions, viz:

> The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war, observing these rules (those of neutrality) on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation or its citizens or subjects in respect to the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable. (Art. 3, clause 1, of the treaty.)

That was the result of the modification of the treaty. Now, what is the next thing we did? We entered into a treaty stipulation with the Republic of Panama in which we agreed to do these things for the privilege of constructing the canal across their territory. I quote from the treaty of 1902:

> The United States of America and the Republic of Panama, being desirous to insure the construction of a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and the Congress of the United States of America having passed an act, approved June 28, 1902, in furtherance of that object, by which the President of the United States is authorized to acquire within a reasonable time the control of the necessary territory of the Republic of Colombia, and the sovereignty of such territory being actually vested in the Republic of Panama, the high contracting parties have resolved for that purpose to conclude a convention, etc.
> ART. 1. The United States guarantees and will maintain the independence of the Republic of Panama.
> ART. 18. The canal, when constructed, and the entrances thereto shall be neutral in perpetuity, and shall be opened upon the terms provided by section 1 of article 3 of and in conformity with all the stipulations of the treaty entered into by the Governments of Great Britain and the United States on November 18, 1901. (The Hay-Pauncefote treaty.)

These are the preliminaries, briefly stated, that this Government had to arrange before she had any authority to enter upon this undertaking. Panama was indirectly a party to the construction of the canal because she was in a position to dictate the terms of the enterprise, and because we assented to them we are bound by them. I want you to notice that Panama, as well as the United States, reaffirmed their purpose in the treaty with each other to respect the terms of section 1, article 3, of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and made such terms and their observance a part of the condition for the right to build that was conferred by the Republic of Panama on the United States.

Gentlemen say that the original purpose of the construction of the canal was for strategic purposes in time of war and that commerce was a secondary matter. That can not be true, for many reasons not necessary to state. These treaties to which I have called your attention show conclusively that the canal was a commercial project of the widest possible scope, and the very provision in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty declaring that the canal should be "free and open to vessels on terms of entire equality" reflects the very purpose in the minds of the high contracting parties that the strategic value was incidental to its construction, and the terms were made definite as to every element of contract necessary for the successful administration of the great commercial highway.

That opinion is confirmed by the fact that President McKinley, in the message he sent to Congress, made no suggestion to have the Panama Canal constructed for the purpose of creating a strategic point in time of war, but the tenor of all the presidential messages for the last 70 years was to create a highway for trade across the Isthmus of Panama, and in all the conventions that had been held, and in all the declarations that have been made by interested parties, the paramount question arising was to benefit the trade of the nations of the world and to cut off the long detour around Cape Horn, so that there might be a better market for us and for other nations to the East for that purpose.

For more than 60 years the purpose of establishing an interoceanic canal has been the subject of presidential messages. I quote from the former Clayton-Bulwer treaty to show that we did not originally construct the Panama Canal for the sole and only purpose of a strategic point in time of war, and that the idea of creating the Panama Canal for military purposes only, did not arise out of the fact that we were unable to get the Oregon around the Horn for early active service in the Spanish-American War. The Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 contained these provisions:

ART. 6. And the contracting parties likewise agree that each shall enter into a treaty stipulation with such of the Central American States as they may deem advisable for the purpose of more effectually carrying out the great design of this great convention, namely, that of constructing and maintaining the said canal and ship communication between the two oceans for the benefit of mankind on equal terms to all and of protecting the same.

ART. 8. It is always understood by the United States and Great Britain that the parties constructing or owning the same shall impose no other charges or conditions thereupon than the said Governments shall approve of as just and equitable; and that the same canal or waterways being open to the citizens and subjects of the United States and Great Britain, on equal terms, shall also be open on like terms to the citizens and subjects of every other State which is willing to grant thereto such protection as the United States and Great Britain engage to afford.

Treaties are construed like any other contract, and I invite the attention of the committee to the rule laid down in this country and recognized by all authority on international law:

It is a general principle of construction of treaties that they shall be liberally construed, so as to carry out the apparent intention of the parties, to secure equality and uniformity between them, as they are contracts between individual nations. In their construction words are to be taken in their ordinary meaning, as understood in the public laws of nations, and not with any artificial or special sense impressed upon them by local law, unless such restricted sense is clearly intended. (Hauenstine v. Lynham, 100 U. S., pp. 483–7; Godfrey v. Riggs, 133 U. S., pp. 258–71.)

There is no ambiguity in the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and consequently no room for any construction by intendment. The language is clear, direct, unequivocal, and the meaning is not to be clouded by "any artificial or special sense" imposed upon the terms.

Did England so understand the Hay-Pauncefote treaty? Certainly she did, and had faith in our observance of its conditions. On its ratification she dismantled her fortifications in Jamaica and moved away her stores and munitions of war and practically abandoned her holdings as a strategic point. Would she have done that if she had understood that the solemn compact she entered into with her great rival for trade and supremacy contained an ambiguous provision through which we could work a discrimination against her in freight rates, and that we stood ready to repudiate and trample under foot our obligations? Would she have voluntarily added an additional handicap of free tolls against her coastwise trade on this continent and in favor of our coastwise trade when we already had the advantage against her of 3,000 miles in travel to the markets of the South American Republics and the Orient? She believed in the unstained honor of this Republic, for she had dealt with us for a century in another compact on our northern border between Canada and ourselves, and she had a right to rely upon our integrity as a Nation, and that integrity will not now be compromised.

I want to pause here long enough to state that I do not concur in the opinion of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] with reference to the construction of the canal being of a proprietary character. The negotiations for the construction were made with the sovereignty of the United States, and the United States acted in that sovereign capacity, and the only provision that was made in the treaty was that it might determine that the canal should be constructed by the United States, an individual, or by a corporation. The United States chose to build it herself. Admitting that it had that right under the treaty to turn the work over to a private person or a corporation, it would still be controlled by the organic act which constituted the agreement between the United States and Great Britain as to the manner under which it should be constructed, and the responsibilities of the Government entering into that contract and that agreement rested solely in the sovereignty of both nations. It could not enlarge its province and take to itself any of those incidents that attach to a proprietary nature or character from the simple fact that it determined to commit the building to a person or corporation, because back of that would rest the right of the Government of the United States in its sovereign capacity to control the manner in which the canal should be constructed and the manner in which the toll should be collected, and all of the agreements in this contract between the United States and Great Britain rested for their performance in the sovereignty of the United States and not in its contractual relationship.

Contrary to the assumption by the gentlemen opposing the fifth section of this bill, the United States does not own the canal absolutely, in the sense of having an absolute title, a perfect, indefeasible title. She obtained her interest in the territory through which the canal runs by treaty, not by purchase, and the terms under which she got it are set out in the grant and constitute a limitation defining what we got the grant for. Suppose the United States should conclude to abandon the canal for lack of commerce, or because of the expense of maintaining it, or for any other reason, would any man assert that the United States, which has acted solely in her sovereign capacity, could claim any further interest in the zone that is now under her sovereignty and conditional ownership? Would not Panama on such abandonment succeed to our present rights? The United States could not confer upon herself or her assigns any greater or different power than what she derived under the treaty, nor could she under the claim of proprietorship in the construction of the canal in the slightest degree affect or limit her liability as a sovereign power under the treaty.

But to return from the digression to the proposition of free tolls, demanded by the east and west coasts for their especial benefit: This proposition is confronted with another phase of the subject. Our navigation laws are now in force as they were when this treaty was entered into. That they were included in the understanding that there was to be no discrimination in favor of our coastwise shipping is clear to presume, for no power entering into such a compact could doubt that the vast fields for trade in South America would invite our coastwise shipping.

Is it to be supposed for an instant that Great Britain would have consented to free tolls for our ships engaged in that coastwise trade and shut the market doors of the South American Republics in her own face through such discrimination against herself at her own election? This statement will not be rejoined in that the coastwise shippers would not engage in the South American trade. Those vessels now doing business on the Atlantic coast have an absolute monopoly of the traffic, both passenger and freight, and have already investigated the subject, with a view of engaging in that trade. So also has the American-Hawaiian Line, that now owns eighteen 10,000-ton vessels and has five more in process of construction. Nor will it be objected that a different rule would prevail in case the coastwise trade shifted to the South American trade, for the difficulties of administering the law in that event would be too complex to be practicable to charge for southern trade and not for coastwise trade in the same vessel. The claim that the canal was inspired for commercial reasons, instead of to establish a strategic ground in case of war, is supported for another reason. Our individual trade would not support such an enterprise or justify the expenditure of $400,000,000. We are in no position to donate this mighty highway to the world's trade, and no nation expects us to do it—to control and defend it without pay. Governments expect and are anxious to remunerate us for the use of the canal and pay the charges without discrimination against them. The Government ought to lay a rate sufficiently low to attract not only our own trade but the trade from foreign countries to that gateway.

The greatest element of wealth in any nation is its trade. The nation that has no great foreign commerce has no great enduring history. The trade of the South American Republics and the Latin Republics last year amounted to $4,000,000,000. We took about 20 per cent of that trade. They are lying right at our doors. Why should not we have 90 per cent of it? If we cut through the Isthmus of Panama, we bring ourselves 3,000 miles nearer to those markets than any of the nations of western Europe. We handicap the nations of western Europe by 3,000 miles of travel in our favor, and the vast amount of trade that is yet in its infancy will be our trade, and this country never did a wiser stroke of policy, despite the statement of my friend LEVY to the contrary, than when we created the Panama Canal and opened up that vast territory of South America to the trade of this country. Let me say another thing, and that is this: That the rates of the Suez Canal will determine the rate we put upon the Panama Canal. Why? It was developed in the hearings that the railroads got as high as four times as much for transportation from coast to coast of merchandise as we could carry it for by water. If that is true, then there would be no real competition between water and rail routes. If we increase our foreign trade, we must do it by handing over to those parties who would prefer coming through the Panama Canal a lower rate of duty, a lower rate of toll, so that it will be profitable to travel that distance instead of going through the Suez Canal. There is between us and the Suez Canal a zone of trade that both the Suez and ourselves will bid for. How shall we get it? Only by offering such a preferential rate as will induce them to leave the Suez Canal and come our way, and that preferential rate must be so low that the difference between the Suez and our rate will not be eaten up by time and distance. That proposition being true, then we can make the rates so low for toll that it will not affect our coastwise shipping and at the same time give us absolute control of the South American trade as far south as Chile, so far as any of the nations of western Europe are concerned. Four billions of trade and we got only 20 per cent last year!

Mr. ESCH. The gentleman means 400,000,000.

Mr. CLINE. Four billions I said, all the export and import trade of the Latin Republics, and we got 20 per cent of it.

Mr. HAMLIN. But in that is included trade on the eastern as well as the western coast.

Mr. CLINE. Yes, sir; all the trade.

Mr. HAMLIN. To open the canal would help us in getting the trade on the eastern coast?

Mr. CLINE. No, sir; but the principal trade of South American Republics for us is on the western and northern coasts—that is the valuable trade.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was thinking it was on the other side. I may be in error on that.

Mr. CLINE. I presume I might refer that question to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], who is certainly an authority on that proposition. Now, as to the question as to whether this was built as a strategic point. I think the American people will come to understand this proposition in reference to this canal and that is it will serve not only as a strategic point in time of war, but it will be a highway for increasing our commerce. Personally I am for peace instead of war. I want to say that the proudest page in the record of the present administration, that has been cursed by scandals which were entailed from a previous administration, is that the historian may write over the name of William H. Taft, as President of the United States, that he gave his sincerest efforts to the cause of universal peace. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. They have not very much of it just now, have they? [Laughter.]

Mr. CLINE. I want to know whether England understood this proposition. Did she understand that this great American Republic was going to be bound by its obligation to her? Had she the right to believe that we were bound when we agreed to maintain the neutrality of Panama and her independence and to maintain equal trade relations with the world and with her? She has coastwise shipping in Canada right north of us; she has coastwise shipping in Canada on the north and west of us. She closed the gate of the canal to herself and opened it to us under the contention of the gentlemen who oppose the first section of article 3, and that has given us the advantage of free tolls when we also had an advantage against her of 3,000 miles in distance. It is not to be presumed at all. Now, I have not heard any of the gentlemen who have argued this proposition tell the committee just how the remission of tolls was going to advance the local merchant marine. The evidence disclosed this fact: That the entire coastwise trade, both on the Atlantic and on the western coast, was absolutely supplied at the present time; that there was no use for any more ships for the amount of trade we now have. And the hearings developed another fact, and that is this: That the men who operate the local merchant marine and coastwise trade had a monopoly of the business. Those steamship lines running out of New York—the Clyde, the Mallory, the Morgan, the Ocean Steamship Line, and the Old Dominion—divide up the passenger traffic and the freight traffic, and no two of those lines run to the same point on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. CLINE. I will just read a little from the hearings and find out.

Mr. SABATH. That was the evidence before our committee.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In some instances they do and in other instances they do not.

Mr. CLINE. The vice president of the Clyde Co. gave the information that they have a perfect working agreement. I think the other members of the committee will bear me out.

Mr. ADAMSON. Where they went to the same point they have an entirely different service.

Mr. CLINE. I am not going to be bound by anybody's recollection. I am going to read the record.

I am going to call your attention to a little evidence in this matter. I quote from the hearings, pages 543–544, from the statement made by Mr. Raymond, vice president and general manager of the Clyde Steamship Co. and the Mallory Steamship Co., of New York:

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Let us bring Mr. Sabath's questions home now.
The CHAIRMAN. Yes; we want to know what the fact is.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. There are two lines that you are vice president of—the Clyde and Mallory.
Mr. RAYMOND. The Clyde does not go to Galveston, T
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Clyde does, does it no'
Mr. RAYMOND. No, sir.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Mallory and Morgan?
Mr. RAYMOND. The Mallory and Morgan?
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Do go from New York to Galveston?
Mr. RAYMOND. Yes, sir.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Is there any difference in the rates between New York and Galveston on these two boat lines?
Mr. RAYMOND. Yes, sir.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Is not the fare identical?
Mr. RAYMOND. There is only one line that handles passengers, and that is the Mallory; there is no competition.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. From New York to Galveston?
Mr. RAYMOND. The Morgan does not handle passengers; no, sir.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. How many lines are there between New York and Key West handling passengers?
Mr. RAYMOND. Only one.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What is that?
Mr. RAYMOND. The Mallory.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Are there any places on the coast where the Mallory has competition in the matter of hauling passengers?
Mr. RAYMOND. Not that I know of.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It hauls them all—how does it come that the Mallory has no competition?
Mr. RAYMOND. Because nobody else has put any money into that service; that is all.

Those six lines are in a position to freeze out any other lines. That is what they are for.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Clyde does not carry passengers?
Mr. RAYMOND. The Clyde carries passengers, but it does not go to Galveston.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does it go to any of the ports that the Mallory goes to?
The CHAIRMAN. It pays better to divide the ports up.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Is that the way it is done?
Mr. RAYMOND. No.

Of course you would not expect a man to admit that.

Now, I want to take the following examination from the record:

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Let us see; we have got three lines out of New York—the Clyde, the Mallory, and the Morgan. Now, how many lines have we got in the coastwise trade going out of New York in addition to the Mallory, Morgan, and Clyde lines?
Mr. RAYMOND. Out of New York?
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, sir.
Mr. RAYMOND. The Ocean Steamship Co.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is four.
Mr. RAYMOND. The Old Dominion; that is, coming south.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is what I mean.
Mr. RAYMOND. Coming south from American ports?
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is what I want in order not to scatter too much.
Mr. RAYMOND. The Old Dominion.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is five. Are there none of those carrying passengers into the same ports from New York, down along the Atlantic coast and return?
Mr. RAYMOND. No, sir.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What do they do then—have they just divided up the territory between themselves?
Mr. RAYMOND. No.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not understand why there is not an explanation for this. We have got the facts, in a measure, but not the explanation as to why there is just one boat line in the coastwise trade of the Atlantic carrying passengers between New York and all these coast points around to Galveston and the Gulf.

Mr. RAYMOND. The explanation is that two would not pay.
The CHAIRMAN. I think that is a good one.
Mr. SIMS. How is it about the freight?
Mr. RAYMOND. The same

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman permit a question right there? Was it drawn out in the hearings that there was an understanding between these five companies that they were not going to the same ports?

Mr. CLINE. Has my friend an idea that they are going to take the stand and admit anything of the kind?

Mr. ADAMSON. They said they had sense enough to do it without any understanding.

Mr. RAKER. This is serious. Did the committee seek to find out, or were they able to find out, whether there was a written agreement between them?

Mr. CLINE. It was a gentlemen's agreement, an agreement which does not go into writing, so that the Interstate Commerce Commission or anybody else can get hold of it.

Mr. NYE. It never does go into writing.

Mr. ADAMSON. I remind the gentleman right there that he said it was probable he would not run through the canal in competition with the American-Hawaiian Line, because it would not be prudent or advisable to compete with them, as they could handle the business.

Mr. CLINE. And I recall that some gentleman in the committee inquired whether it was possible for foreign traders to compete with local coastwise trade if they had an opportunity, and this same Mr. Raymond said: "We never have seen a time when we were not able to take care of ourselves in the business." I say it comes with poor grace for any man to stand up before an intelligent committee as the advocate and sponsor of a class of men that have been able to get together and control all the coastwise shipping of this country; and when we open up 8,000 miles of new coast lines, with the market of the whole continent for them, so that they can control them in preference to all the other nations of the world, it is not becoming for them to ask that we give them a preference in toll in the canal that cost this Government $400,000,000, when they are able, without relief from toll, to control the market.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. CLINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. I understand, now, from the gentleman's statement, he being one of the committee——

Mr. CLINE. I am not one of the committee. Oh, no. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. RAKER. I will change my question. From your statement and study and examination of the matter, there was no evidence to show that there was an agreement, in writing, or a favorable agreement, or a verbal agreement, between these companies as to the coastwise trade. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. CLINE. Oh, it was not developed in the hearing, so far as I have been able to read, that there was a formal agreement. There was no evidence developed that the gentlemen running these six lines had gotten together in some office in New York and entered into a written contract that they would divide up the passenger and freight traffic among themselves, and that each of them took a copy of it and advertised their meeting in the papers. There was no evidence of that, but the fact developed that they had done so, whether in pursuance of a contract or not.

Mr. RAKER. Was there any evidence to show that anyone, or any individual or assosciation, had been seeking or trying to do this coastwise trade, and that these particular companies now in existence were working together so as to drive them off the coast?

Mr. CLINE. Well, my friend, do you know what the Gould system of railroads in the Southwest did to some men who were undertaking to start a new, independent railroad there?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. That is what these gentleman are able to do. Nobody would undertake to put money into a concern when there were five or six companies that already occupied the field, with power and inclination to crush any competition.

Mr. SABATH. The evidence showed that they had bought out all the smaller companies from time to time and thereby killed any possible competition that might have existed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLINE. Let me have five minutes more.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the interruptions that the gentleman has been subjected to entitle him to five minutes more. I think his speech itself entitles him to five minutes.

Mr. CLINE. Thank you. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish I had time to examine the brief that I hold here, otherwise denominated the "Report of the Commissioner of Navigation."

Mr. ADAMSON. An obiter dictum.

Mr. CLINE. Yes; a brief that was filed by the Commissioner of Navigation for the local shippers of this country; a brief that no lawyer could prepare in less than two months; and the commissioner went absolutely outside the province of his official duties, that of Commissioner of Navigation, and every conclusion drawn from the gentleman's argument by himself was shot full of holes on his cross-examination before the committee.

Among other deductions he made was that if the tolls were put on American shipping it would not develop, and no shipmasters were making preparations for the Panama trade. As a complete refutation of that proposition I propose to quote from the hearings again:

The CHAIRMAN. Are you building any new ships?
Mr. RAYMOND. We built three last year; we are building two now.
The CHAIRMAN. How large are they?
Mr. RAYMOND. The ones we built last year were 5,000-ton boats; the one that is building now depends on the measurement afterwards; she will be somewhere between six and seven thousand tons.
The CHAIRMAN. Most of your ships would be large enough to do business through the canal, if you could find inviting opportunities in the Pacific Ocean, I presume, would they not?
Mr. RAYMOND. Some of them.
The CHAIRMAN I believe it has been stated 4,000 tonnage is as small as could be economically operated through the canal. I do not know how true that is.
Mr. RAYMOND. As a practical man, I should say not less than that, and it would be better to be more.
The CHAIRMAN. With those preliminary statements, if there are any words of comfort or any assistance that you can give this committee affecting this legislation, I would like to have it.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. You have studied the west coast of South America?
Mr. RAYMOND. I say that we have made some investigation of it.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Was that based on the theory that there would be a greater development from the opening of the canal to the west coast of South America than to the west coast of North America?
Mr. RAYMOND No. We are in the steamship business for transportation, and it is the duty of those that manage the property, as I view it, to keep informed, and it is only as a matter of information that we are looking into this question at all, not with any definite view of engaging in it at once.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But, agreeing entirely with what you say, what caused your investigation of the west coast of South America rather than the same coast of North America?
Mr. RAYMOND. That is a matter I would prefer to answer to the directors of my company and not to a public committee.

I now quote from the testimony of Mr. Dearborn, representing the American Hawaiian Steamship Co. I refer to pages 558–559, and ask the attention of the House to this convincing statement by Mr. Dearborn, the president of the company:

This steamship company has within 11 years created a fleet of eighteen 10,000-ton high-class freighters, all from American shipyards, and is building five additional steamers, and, in the belief that any canal tolls which may be levied will permit of its use, has announced that it will abandon the Tehuantepec route and divert its ships through the canal.

Why, he said, "We are going to go through the Panama Canal, and the toll question is not going to cut any figure with us, because we have done business across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and made money, and we know we can do better, regardless of what the tolls are, through the Panama Canal.

Mr. KNOWLAND. It is true that he said the tolls did not make any difference, because they would come out of the consumer.

Mr. CLINE. Well, the tolls always come out of the consumer, do they not?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I am glad to have the gentleman admit that. The gentleman's Democratic colleagues have not admitted it.

Mr. CLINE. The freighter takes what he has to pay out of the consumer.

Now, Mr. Chamberlain proceeded to say that if you reduced the tolls you would destroy the coastwise shipping. He said that in the face of the fact that he knew that the water rate was only one-third of what the rail rate was now; and some of the members of the committee were inquisitive enough to try to find out what system of logic led him to arrive at that conclusion. I want to read three or four questions from the hearing. The first it this:

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. My question is, How will the Panama Canal tolls destroy the American coast-to-coast trade, which shipping has an exclusive and absolute statutory monopoly?
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. My reply thus far, Mr. Chairman, has been, first, I understand that this proposed canal toll is the first peace tax on interstate commerce. My second suggestion was that it is the first instance where Congress undertook to impose, in form at least, a tax on American vessels—of course, foreign vessels too, but this discussion is confined to American vessels—for using improved waterways and canals.
The CHAIRMAN. I understand he wants you to answer a concrete question as to how the tolls will affect the shipping.

The question that was put up was how the tolls would affect the shipping. The answer was:

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can not get at that, Mr. Chairman, by yes or no.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to know how tolls are going to have that result.

Of course our good friend the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], who championed the commissioner, was beginning to get restless in his seat by that time, and he said:

I think the witness should be allowed to answer in his own way.

Of course, the witness had not been attempting to make any answer yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman, as he has been interrupted.

Mr. CLINE. Then the chairman of the committee put this question:

The CHAIRMAN. Now, as to the effect which charging tolls would have in killing American merchant marine, I would like to have the explanation how that is possible.

Observe the mental agitation that the gentleman from California was going through at that time.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The commissioner was able to take care of himself all right.

Mr. CLINE. Every point that he undertook to sustain in his brief was abandoned by his own testimony.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. CLINE. It was the opinion of every man around the table, and it was the opinion of the gentleman from California, or he would not have interjected those interruptions.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I did not want answers put into his mouth. That was all I objected to.

Mr. CLINE. He ought to have had some answers put into his mouth. Now, listen to the embarrassment of a man at the head of the Bureau of Navigation of this country, who had spent months in preparing this brief. Hear what he says:

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This is getting to resemble, if I may be allowed to make the remark, the wireless interference with which we are dealing in another committee, etc.

Mr. KNOWLAND. You do not finish reading his answer.

Mr. CLINE. The rest of it is just like what I did read. There is no ground for the proposition. Now, just one word more, to say that the man who did more to construct the Panama Canal and had more to do with it than any other living man, Mr. Roosevelt, said in the February number of the Outlook that the tolls must be paid at the canal and there must be no discrimination.

Mr. RAKER. Is that going to settle the question?

Mr. CLINE. I hope not, but in reply to the suggestion that because other countries may appropriate tolls and therefore we ought to abandon the treaty, I have to say that we can not interfere with the local legislation of another country; we do not go to the German Reichstag, or the British House of Commons, or the French Chamber of Deputies, to see what they wish to do with reference to the toll question on this canal, but when their vessels approach the canal they must surrender to the conditions laid down in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which I believe this Government will enforce to the full letter. [Applause.]

Mr. KNOWLAND. Was the article in the Outlook signed by Mr. Roosevelt?

Mr. CLINE. It was on the editorial page, and I suppose he was responsible for it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. He denies any such statement.

Mr. CLINE. Where does he deny it?

Mr. KNOWLAND. He denied it through a California friend.

Mr. CLINE. Is his denial in print?

Mr. KNOWLAND. No; it is not in print, but it is over his signature.

Mr. CLINE. Put the canal on a business basis instead of upon a gratuity plan. Shipping corporations that can not pay a reasonable toll and do business can not do business if the toll is remitted. It is conceded that if the tolls are assessed it will not be detrimental to the shipping interests because the consignor will be assessed the additional amount; it is also agreed that if the tolls are remitted that the shipping concerns will get the gratuity and not the shipper or the consumer, because in the distribution it would be inconsequential and for the further reason that the rates will be kept to the limit that the business will carry.

This great Government has been good to the coastwise trade. It has shut out the foreign shipper from our local business, and properly so, and given the coastwise shipper a monopoly of the business. We have taxed this great people four hundred millions to open up 8,000 miles of additional coast line for them, and given them a position so that they could control vast fields of new business, amounting into the hundreds of millions annually. Not satisfied with that exhibition of generosity by a great Government, they "abuse our patience" by dividing up all the business on the Atlantic seaboard among themselves so as to eliminate all fair and honest competition to which the people who made this contribution in their interest are entitled. With these concessions handed over to them without money and without price, with the command to go forward and do the trade well-nigh of this Western Hemisphere, they have the unspeakable nerve to ask us not only to go down into our pockets and pay the interest on the immense debt, to pay the running expenses and the cost of constantly protecting and providing this great pathway for their business, but they demand that we pay for them the price of passing through this canal.

I wish, in closing, to refer briefly to the statement of the minority. One of the most remarkable statements in this controversy is contained in the opening page of its report. This is the language:

This great canal, built for the American people by American money, genius, and enterprise should be forever a free and untrammeled competing route with transportation by land.

Mr. Chairman, that is the kind of a half truth stated as the basis of an argument that carries in its form the virus of a willful misstatement. The Panama Canal is not fully an American canal, though built with American money. Let us be candid in this discussion. It belongs to the commerce of the world. To its use and its protection are applied the principles of international law. It is not a waterway within our own States and territory wholly under our jurisdiction without any limitation whatever. Before we built the Panama Canal we went into a foreign country and invoked the highest constitutional power under this and another Government in a formal negotiation with a distant sovereignty for the mere right to enter upon such an enterprise. We were compelled to go from that sovereignty, which imposed limiting restrictions upon us, to another Government separated from us also by a foreign State to obtain further consent and engage in additional reciprocal obligations before we could begin. Those conditions absolutely distinguish the Panama Canal from a mere domestic improvement. A companion statement to the one above is the further observation that—

It is true that we levy no tolls upon Canadian vessels using the Soo Canal, but that is because the American vessels are accorded the same treatment in the use of the Welland Canal.

That is not a correct statement of the fact. We use the Welland Canal without toll and the Canadians use the Soo Canal without toll, not because of any reciprocal arrangement, but because the right is fixed by treaty stipulations and on no other grounds. If the Canadian Government attempted to charge American vessels a toll for passing through the Welland Canal, our vigorous protest which we would immediately make would be based upon our stipulations in our treaty with them and upon no other grounds and not upon the fact that they were using, free of toll, the Soo Canal.

When we arranged with the Panama Republic for the right to build the canal they had it in their power to prescribe the terms upon which we might enter upon such an undertaking; they did it and we acceded to those terms and now we should obey them. Every declaration made not only by the President, but by Mr. Roosevelt when he was President, declared the enterprise to be international in its intended use.

But gentlemen themselves do not agree as to the method in getting the money out of the Treasury. Some of them who want this subsidy, like Mr. Lewis Nixon, of New York, and his associates, have no regard for treaty stipulations. They would create a stampede for the tolls, regardless of our treaties. They would break down all barriers, if they are correctly reported in the press, wipe out all agreements, and appropriate the necessary money. I do not believe in that sentiment, Mr. Chairman, even if there is some popularity for it in the country. I do not believe in a doctrine if a legislature gets in the way, brush it aside; if the courts get in the way, brush them aside; and if you get a decision on a constitutional question that does not suit you, go down to the corner grocery and reverse it. I believe in the integrity of this Government in all of its undertakings. As I said, there are men in high authority who wish to make a feint at a compliance with the terms of the compact. Secretary of War Stimson, this year, at Kansas City, before the Commercial Club, discussing the toll question, said:

I think the United States has a clear right to appropriate to the vessels, paying the same sum paid into its Treasury by these vessels in the form of canal tolls.

That statement is very wide of the real question. What is the real proposition involved, anyway? Stripped of all its subterfuge, its sophistry, its buncombe, it is the unmasked stalking horse for ship subsidy that has so frequently been driven out of this Capitol, only to return again at the next session under a different guise. The time has passed when this Government proposes to grant a gratuity to private interests—to cooperating capital—that already skulks in the shadow of a prosecution for violating the Sherman antitrust law. It will refuse to be a party to such combinations to fasten a tighter grip on the business of the country by way of the Public Treasury. Such indirect appropriations to these masterful institutions are wrong in principle, and the injustice can not be cured by taking the circuitous route suggested by the Secretary of War. I submit that the language of the President in his late message on this subject is open to the same objection, both in its tone and in its conclusion. This is his language:

> We own the canal. It was our money that built it. We have a right to charge tolls for its use.

It does not follow, simply because we have the sheer power to do these things, that we are not hedged about by certain limitations. We have a right to charge tolls, but not to discriminate in making the charges; and the President admits our contention, in the further discussion of the matter, in the use of this language:

> These tolls must be the same to everyone; and when we are dealing with our own ships the practice of many Governments of subsidizing their own merchant vessels is so well established in general that a subsidy equal to the tolls and equivalent remission of the tolls can not be held to be a discrimination in the use of the canal.

This is an unworthy subterfuge to milk the Public Treasury, and the statement is not in harmony with the facts. No great commercial nation, either Germany or England, our greatest competitors, votes a subsidy to their commercial and merchant vessels except in the nature of mail subsidies or as subvention to certain naval lines, both of these services being a public service and not a private enterprise.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have prepared with some care a discussion of a very important, and in my opinion the most important, question in connection with the Panama Canal, a question that perhaps is not entirely pertinent to the legislation before us, to wit, the question of fortification of the canal. I do not intend to inflict that discussion on this small, but select audience. At some future time I hope to have the opportunity to show what monumental folly it is and will continue to be to attempt to fortify and protect this great waterway with 16-inch guns and bayonets. Of all the errors that the American people have fallen into, or that they are liable to fall into, I think none can be more profound than that of attempting to create of the Isthmus of Panama a heel of Achilles, a point which every foreign enemy which we shall ever have in all our history will strike when it is entirely practicable to protect the canal without a gun and without expense.

I hope, when the appropriation bill is before the House, to have an opportunity to discuss that question at length.

It has been suggested that we have already entered upon the plan of fortification of the canal, and therefore it is useless to discuss that question. We have already wasted a million or two down there, and we have in all a $3,000,000 appropriation to draw on. But no question is ever settled until it is settled right. I do not hope that anything I shall say will prevent this Congress from making another appropriation, but I do believe that before that appropriation is used the American people will wake up to a realization of the folly of attempting to protect the canal with guns.

Gentlemen have noted that all those who have discussed the canal have talked about its neutralization, and yet we propose to plant 16-inch guns at each end of it, and talk about a fortified canal being a neutralized canal.

Failing in the opportunity of discussing at such length as I should like to the question of fortification, I did not intend to enter into this discussion at all, and I would not have done so except for the astounding fact that gentlemen who represent the localities of the organizations to be directly affected seriously urge the proposition that the American people, who have spent $400,000,000 in the construction of this great waterway, shall give to the chief beneficiaries of it for all time the opportunity of going through it without even paying for the grease used in turning the gates of the locks. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Is not it provided in the subdivision 7, article 2, of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty that no fortifications shall be erected commanding the canal or adjacent territory?

Mr. MONDELL. I regret I have not time to discuss the treaty at length. I base my argument not at all upon our treaty rights, because I have discovered with regard to fortications, as we have discovered within the last two days in regard to the question of tolls, that there are a considerable number of gentlemen who in this matter are in the attitude of the gentleman from Texas who inquired, when the suggestion was made to him that the Constitution stood in the way of a certain measure he favored, "What is the Constitution between friends?"

Mr. ADAMSON. He was from New York.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, wherever he was from, he represented very clearly the attitude of the gentlemen from the Pacific coast, and to some extent from the Atlantic coast, who, in the face of opportunity to do something for a few of their constituents, are willing to say, "What is a solemn treaty obligation in the presence of an opportunity to grab something?"

And so I shall not, in the brief time that I have to discuss the question of tolls, talk about our treaty obligations, though they are writ so plain that a wayfaring man, though he be a fool, can not fail to understand them if he wants to have these obligations carried out. [Applause.]

Every line, every syllable, every word, of all that has been done from the beginning with regard to this canal pledges this great Nation to equal opportunities and equal treatment to the ships of all flags and citizens of all nations.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has given the subject a good deal of thought——

Mr. MONDELL. I have not, as a matter of fact, for I did not intend to discuss it.

Mr. RAKER. There are just two questions that I have been intending to ask the gentleman. First, under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of April 19, 1850, if a private individual had built the canal, under the provisions of that treaty all foreign powers would have had an equal right to go through the canal. That is conceded, is it not?

Mr. MONDELL. I did not catch the gentleman's question; I was otherwise engaged.

Mr. RAKER. Under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of April 19, 1850, if a private individual or a corporation had built the canal, and built it under its provisions, they would have been entitled to equal and exact treatment—every nation—would they not?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not the treaty before me, but we are not building the canal under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; and, in any event, I am not discussing treaty relations, because the gentlemen from the Pacific coast do not seem inclined to regard the treaties anyway.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman give me three questions, and I will quit? If that is conceded, if this private individual or corporation had built the canal, will the gentleman from Wyoming say they could not have run a line of ships through this canal?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not conceded anything. I have not the time in the very brief time I have to discuss the treaty relations.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Does the gentleman from California think that under the treaty and his statement that a line of ships having a flag of some nation would not be treated the same as every other ship?

Mr. RAKER. No; but if this private individual or corporation had built the canal would not he or it have been entitled to run a line of ships through it?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. They would have to fly the flag of some nation or they would be considered pirates. If they had the flag of any nation, then they must be treated just exactly as ships under the flags of any other nation. The gentleman seems to assume that a man can be a pirate, just as all of these people do.

Mr. RAKER. Suppose they were flying the flag of America, then they would have gone through the canal without paying any tolls.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No; the gentleman is wrong, as most of his class are in that respect.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am very good-natured, but, really, my time is very brief.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming declines to yield further.

Mr. RAKER. No, Mr. Chairman, he has not declined to yield. Just one more question and I am through.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman again that I do not propose to spend a lot of time going into a detailed discussion of what the Clayton-Bulwer treaty proposes; nor do I intend to discuss at any length what the treaty under which we are working provides, although I do say that in my opinion that treaty prohibits us from preferential tolls; but realizing that treaties and treaty obligations seem to have no weight whatever with the gentlemen on either coast, I am going to discuss the question of tolls from an entirely different standpoint, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] can have his own opinion as to what we may or may not do under the treaty. My opinion is that there is not a word nor a line in any treaty—Bulwer-Clayton, Hay-Pauncefote, or Panama—that gives us the right to do what the gentleman desires we shall do with regard to American shipping.

Now, Mr. Chairman, furthermore——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt, but I have been seeking from the gentleman on this question at least an answer to this matter, and I think that this House ought to be able to get it and somebody ought to be able to give it to us, even if it does take a little time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my time is limited——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not entering upon a discussion of treaties. The gentleman and those who agree with him have had an infinite amount of time in which to discuss our treaty obligations, and they have ended their argument in this way: The gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], who sits near me, closed his argument with a statement that whatever our treaty obligations were or might be, they should be construed in favor of the proposition for which he stood, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] wanted to know by what right the Secretary of State and the Senate of the United States had made a treaty under which we could not give preferential rates to American shipping. That is the way the gentleman's side has treated this question; and as they propose to flaunt treaties and are ready to trample upon them, I shall place my argument entirely upon the question of the propriety of doing the thing. If they insist upon it, I will admit, for the sake of argument, that all of the treaties, every one of them, have written across them in letters a yard high a statement that you can grant preferential tolls, and still I say it should not be done. [Applause.]

Mr. KNOWLAND rose.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I can not yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. But the gentleman does not want to misquote me.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not misquote the gentleman, because almost the gentleman's closing words were that whatever we might think about the treaty we should resolve any doubt with regard to it in favor of the policy that he proposes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I said if any doubt existed——

Mr. MONDELL. Then I will let it stand at that.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I want to say in that connection that every department of the United States Government that has written or passed upon this question maintains that we have that right under the treaty.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not expect me to accept that statement as being true.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I can not let that statement of the gentleman from California go unchallenged. I think the contrary is true, that every department of our Government that has construed these words has construed them exactly in the opposite way from the contention of the gentleman from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. What department is there that has done that?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The Department of State, the records of this House, the records of the Senate——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming declines to yield. The gentleman from Wyoming has the floor.

Mr. ADAMSON. Let me make a suggestion; I will yield the gentleman another minute; the members of the committee who have studied this question and taken precedence in place for debate have opened themselves to the questions of their colleagues and have invited the most scrutinizing interrogations. When we yield time to gentlemen who are not on the committee and who do not profess to be able at all times to answer any of these questions and have only a limited time, I do insist that they ought to be allowed to utilize the time given them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there can be no question of the fact that a gentleman can refuse to yield if he desires to do so, and the gentleman from Wyoming refuses to yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to be courteous, and I would be glad to answer these questions if I had the time. I started out with the proposition I did not propose to discuss our treaty rights, and immediately the gentlemen from California, who are in favor of trampling our treaty rights under foot, want that question discussed. That is the question they want discussed now, though they have had hours to discuss it. I propose to show how outrageous it is without regard to treaty rights to give the coasts this advantage over all the other people of the United States of America.

As far as treaty rights are concerned, I say again that the first paragraph of section 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty makes it so plain that any man who wants to interpret it fairly can not fail to interpret it as against the proposition laid down and advocated by the gentlemen from California, but whether that be true or not this is the proposition: We have spent $400,000,000 of the money of the American people. To do what? To reduce by 8,000 miles the distance from San Francisco to New York, and approximately that distance between the Atlantic and the Pacific seacoasts generally. To reduce by 25 to 35 days the sailing distance between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts; to reduce by one-third to three-quarters the cost of shipping from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and yet gentlemen from the Pacific coast stand here, the Pacific coast that has been voted in this House an opportunity to celebrate the completion of that magnificent work, as the gentleman from Washington did to-day, and talk about our doing nothing for American shipping by this great outlay and suggesting that nothing will be done unless we give coastwise shipping the right to pass through the canal free, taxing all the American people for all time to come for its care and its maintenance. To-day you can not ship oranges from Los Angeles to New York for less than $26 to $28 a ton——

Mr. RAKER. Do you want to know why?

Mr. MONDELL. They can not be shipped around the Horn at all under ordinary conditions. They can be shipped through the Panama Canal for $8 or $9 a ton without any regard to what the rate of toll may be, and yet the gentlemen from the Pacific coast are here saying to us that after having given them the opportunity to reduce freight rates $20 a ton the people of the United States generally shall pay for putting those ships through the canal. Every case that has no foundation has to have a bogie man, and this case has its bogie man, and they attempt to stampede gentlemen by saying, at the beginning of their argument, this is a question of the people as against the transcontinental railroads. No argument to prove in what way the transcontinental railroads are interested, no argument in support of the assertion but that bare statement reiterated and wrung in in all its changes in the hope that somebody will be stampeded by it. It is a question between a few favored shippers and the people of the United States. To all intents and purposes, so far as 95 per cent of all the shipping that will go through the canal is concerned, there is absolutely no such thing as competition between the steamships through the canal and the railways across the continent. There can not be any competition. How can there be a competition between the railway traffic at $12 to $25 a ton and traffic through the canal at $8 or $9 at the most? The only competition there will be and can be for the bulk of the business is the competition between the steamships themselves.

The building of this canal, the expenditure of our millions, has given the Pacific coast an opportunity such as never came to a community in all the tides of time; but, not satisfied with this, they want to load upon the people of the United States generally the cost of taking their ships through the canal. The Panama Canal is a glorious monument to American genius, to American industry, and it will be beneficial to all the country in a way. It is our pride and our glory, both those of us who dwell in the interior as well as those who dwell on the seacoasts, but the benefits in the main will come to those who dwell upon the two coasts and in the vicinity of them, and heaven knows they are getting quite enough out of this canal, without calling upon the people of the country generally to pay the cost of its operation. Carried to its logical conclusion, the argument of the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] would amount to this, that if the Government were to condemn and secure ownership of a piece of railway somewhere the shipper who might use that piece of railway for his particular traffic should have the right to run over it without cost. Built with public money, why should not the public have the benefit of it, or the particular part of the public that he represents?

The argument is made that this is part of our coast line. It is in no sense a part of our coast line. The argument is made that, being a part of our coast line, in the sense that traffic from one coast to the other passes through it, therefore it ought to be free, as all our waterways are free. Our waterways are free, and the country generally receives a benefit of the remission of all charges.

But here is a great work far from our coast line, the great benefit of which, however, will accrue to those who have the monopoly of coastwise trade. As a matter of fact, it would be perfectly just to charge shipping from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Pacific to the Atlantic coast of the United States a higher rate of duty than any other shipping. And if we did, it would not cost any American citizen, except the man who owns the ships, a dollar.

Gentlemen have argued in favor of these lower rates on the theory that the American people were going to get the benefit of the remission of tolls, but they have not given us a single argument to prove that contention—not one—and any man who has given the matter any study at all knows perfectly well that the shipper never will know the difference between a toll of $1.25 a ton and no toll at all.

Mr. CLINE. Or the consumer, either?

Mr. MONDELL. I thank the gentleman. The shipper at the one end and the consumer at the other will never know the difference. I know there are a few large shippers in addition to the owners of steamships who desire to enjoy this graft—a few large shippers of automobiles, and such things—who think they will get some sort of benefit from free tolls. They never were more mistaken in their lives. Does anybody imagine that an automobile shipped from Detroit will be landed in San Francisco any cheaper because of the remission of $1.25 a ton toll through the canal? And if that were true, does anybody imagine that the man who bought the automobile would ever know from the price he pays whether it went through the canal or went across by the railway?

Mr. NYE. If, strictly speaking, the cost is paid either by the consumer or shipper, or both, naturally and logically should not the commerce itself pay the cost of the improvement for the benefit of commerce?

Mr. MONDELL. That is very largely true. Or, putting it another way, have not the American people done quite enough for the commerce between the Atlantic and the Pacific seaports when they have shortened the distance 8,000 miles, shortened the time 26 days, and shortened the rate by one-half or two-thirds? And should not the people interested at both ends—both the shippers and the consumers and the steamship people—be satisfied with that splendid gift from the American people and not ask them for all time to come to furnish them a free passage through the canal? [Applause.]

There has been a great deal of declamation in regard to this. Why, one gentleman said, "Why do we spend four hundred millions of our money and get no benefit?" I blush for an American citizen who feels that way. Have we not done a good deal for the commerce of the country when we have shortened the distance as we have, shortened the time as we have, and reduced the cost as we have? And how much more do these gentlemen want the people of the United States to do to benefit their particular section and to benefit particularly a few steamship owners in their locality? For, in the long run, they are the only men who will be benefited.

The gentleman says few, if any, steamship men came before the committee and demanded a remission of tolls. Why, certainly not. No intelligent steamship man would have the nerve to come before that committee and stand the cross-examination he would have to stand there in the attempt to make his case. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] has no other speaker yet, or the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] has no speaker, I will yield the balance of the time this evening to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN], a member of the committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] is recognized for 58 minutes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will assure the committee that I do not think I will tire it by taking too much time to-night. This is a great question, and I would like to be able to discuss it at some length, but the ground has been covered so thoroughly that it would seem there is not much left for me to say.

I have been here for several years, and I do not hesitate to say that I never heard any debate that has displayed as much real ability as has this debate yesterday and to-day. I feel that it is due the chairman of the committee which reported this bill [Mr. ADAMSON] to say that he started this discussion off by making one of the few great speeches that I have heard on this floor. [Applause.] And certainly the ranking Republican Member on the committee [Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota] did not fall one whit behind him. [Applause.] Neither does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], another member of the committee, who spoke to us this morning, suffer any by comparison. [Applause.] And I might go on down the line and say the same thing of the other gentlemen who have spoken on this question and not be accused of throwing bouquets at anybody. I believe that everyone will agree with me that this has indeed been a great debate.

The ground has been thoroughly covered, and I confess my inability to measure up to the standard that has been set, but I do not want this occasion to pass without saying a few things in relation to this great question.

We are about completing what ought to be and doubtless will be regarded as the eighth wonder of the world. I had read a great deal about the Panama Canal, and I had seen pictures of it and talked with parties who had visited the Isthmus. I thought I had a very good conception of that wonderful undertaking. But last winter I went with the committee down to the Isthmus and very carefully inspected that wonderful piece of work, and it was so much greater than I had anticipated or thought that it almost staggered my comprehension. Rivers and mountains have been defied. A great ridge has been thrown from hill to hill across the Chagres River—they call it the great Gatun Dam. Locks have been provided whereby great ships may be hoisted 85 feet in the air and sent 35 miles on an artificial lake and then dropped to the ocean level and sent on their way across the Pacific Ocean—an accomplishment which is a monument to American engineering. France failed in the undertaking. Eminent foreign engineers said it was impossible to construct a lock canal. It remained for American genius, for a man born on American soil, to go down there and overcome those difficulties and give mankind the greatest piece of work the world has ever seen. [Applause.]

And your committee in attempting to bring about legislation for the control and management of this canal has been prompted by no other purpose than to introduce and present to this House legislation such as we think ought to be adopted in order to properly operate, control, and protect this great canal.

It is not necessary for me to attempt to discuss any portions of this bill except section 5. All the other sections seem to be practically agreed upon. It is true that my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], who spoke to the committee to-night, did raise some questions about giving preferential tolls to ships other than those engaged in the coastwise trade, but he was outside of the contention made by the Members who have filed a minority report, and I presume that the committee is not giving any serious thought to his contention. The opposition, or rather the nucleus for the opposition, is made up of those Members who signed the minority report. That report is signed by my friend from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], and by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS], the gentlemen from New York [Mr. CALDER and Mr. GOLDFOGLE], and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD].

Of course these gentlemen are in favor of free tolls for our coastwise vessels from principle, but it is an interesting coincident that they each reside in the section of country near where the coastwise vessels are active.

My friend from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] can, without leaving the soil of his native State, paddle his feet in the limpid waters of either Lake Michigan, Lake Huron, or Lake Erie. My friends from New York City [Messrs. CALDER and GOLDFOGLE] can, without leaving their dooryards, look out on "Liberty enlightening the world." My friend from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] hails from a State the southern boundary of which ebbs and flows with the tide on the Gulf of Mexico. And my friend from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] knows the alligators and crocodiles in the Pacific Ocean by name.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] opened up the debate for those representing the minority report, being put forward as their spokesman, and I am willing to state that they made no mistake in selecting him as their advocate, for he did himself proud.

But I think he unconsciously—because I do not believe he meant consciously to do it—was hardly fair in his statement, for he sought to put the majority members of the committee in a position which they are not entitled to occupy. You will read between the lines an intimation, at least, that the majority of the committee had a little too much consideration, perhaps, in reaching their conclusions for the transcontinental railroads in this country, and I am quite sure that the gentleman knows, and every gentleman on the committee knows, that there was nobody that stood more firmly against railroads owning steamships that would prevent competition through the canal than the men who are standing for the majority report at this time in this House. [Applause.]

I want to call attention just in connection with that to one statement that he made, and in doing that I will jump a little bit ahead of what I intended to say in the regular order. I quote from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS]. He said:

I am opposed to allowing the Wall Street parasites to dictate the policy of Congress.

I believe that is true, but why are you standing here pleading for free tolls for coastwise ships? Wall Street wants free tolls for the coastwise trade. They finance these coastwise ships, and it is Wall Street that wants free tolls as much as the owners of these ships. Are you not playing right into the hands of Wall Street?

I am not in favor of permitting Wall Street to dictate to Congress how it shall shape its legislation. I do not charge for one moment that the gentlemen signing the minority report were influenced by Wall Street, but I only call attention to the fact that the evidence was adduced before the committee that Wall Street did finance the building of these ships, and the contention of the gentlemen who are in favor of free tolls, if it amounts to anything, is that they want free tolls in order to encourage the building of more ships, and in that contention they are in entire accord with Wall Street.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will.

Mr. KNOWLAND. It is the intention of the minority, at least of "the gentleman from California," to keep out the Wall Street ships controlled by railroad interests.

Mr. HAMLIN. And in that the gentleman from California and myself entirely agree; but I say these ships are financed by Wall Street, and Wall Street wants free tolls, and so do you. I am not charging that gentlemen were prompted by any wishes of Wall Street, but in this instance they find themselves in accord with Wall Street. In the last analysis you want more ships, do you not, in the coastwise trade? The evidence before the committee is that they are financed in Wall Street, and you can get them financed more easily by enacting the legislation that they want; and, in addition to other things, they especially want free tolls.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is only as far as the Pacific Mail was concerned.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, it applies to all ships built in this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to one thing that seems to have been overlooked in this debate, and that is this fact: We have been proceeding in this argument apparently upon the theory that the Government owns the Panama Canal. In one sense that is true. In another sense it is not at all true. Do not mistake my meaning. It has been said upon this floor publicly and privately that because the Government of the United States owns this canal it has a right to discriminate in favor of American ships and ought not to charge tolls to its coastwise vessels. That is not absolutely true. I concede that if we were to build a canal from Chicago down to the Mississippi River, which we are contemplating, and I hope we shall build some day, that being wholly within United States territory, wholly within our control, the concern of no other nation upon the face of the earth, we would have a right to discriminate in favor of our own ships or the ships of any other nation, and I have no doubt we would not charge any tolls to American ships throught that canal.

But by what right are we on the Isthmus of Panama? We are outside of the territory of the United States. We have gone into a project at a place that we would have had no right to go if the other nations had objected; and knowing that fact, we first obtained the consent of certain nations by solemn treaty permitting us to go and build there a canal. And while we speak of owning it, and in a general way we do own it as far as controlling it is concerned, it is my judgment that if we should to-morrow conclude that this canal proposition was an absolute failure, and should pull up stakes and leave it, and go away and abandon it, we would then have no more right there than if we had never gone upon the Isthmus. If we owned it in the sense that you own your farm or your house and lot, it would be ours whether we abandoned it or whether we did not. But we do not so own the Canal Zone.

Mr. RAKER. On what theory does the gentleman reason in that way?

Mr. HAMLIN. On the theory that we have no rights there except such as we have acquired by treaty. The gentleman must understand that if we were to abandon that project and go away from there we would lose all our rights down there. It would certainly revert to the Republic of Panama. We could not sell and transfer our sovereignty to that Canal Zone now without the consent of the Republic of Panama.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Are there not provisions in both treaties that substantially carry out the contention of the gentleman from Missouri? I refer to section 4 of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and section 1 of the Panama treaty.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is no question about it, and I want this committee not to fail to get that idea into their heads. Then I think we can see why it is that we are not able to discriminate in favor of American ships in Panama, as we could do if that canal was built within the limits of the United States.

Let us see what our rights down there are. Some gentlemen say, as my friend from California in substance said the other day, that even if we have this kind of a treaty, it is a foolish treaty, and in substance that we ought not to observe it, that we ought to ignore it. I say that all the reasons in the world, moral and otherwise, bind us to that treaty, because the only right under heaven that we have down there is by virtue of that treaty. In that sense we own the canal, and in no other sense in the world do we own it.

Another thing: I believe that the treaties in this case are binding upon us. I am not going to tire you by going all over that again.

I just want to call your attention to one or two things in this treaty. Here is the proclamation following one of the treaties:

It is agreed that the canal may be constructed under the auspices of the Government of the United States, either directly at its own cost, or by gift or loan of money to individuals or corporations, or through subscription or purchase of stock or shares, and that, subject to the provisions of the present treaty, the said Government shall have and enjoy all the rights incident to such construction as well as the exclusive rights of providing for the regulation and management of the canal.

Now, if we had bought that land, and had a fee-simple title to it, we would not need to get a treaty from any other nation in order to build that canal. We could do with it just as we pleased. But we never got that, and we do not have it to-day. You must not get it into your minds that we absolutely own that zone 10 miles in width across the Isthmus.

Now, listen to the conditions:

The United States adopts, as the basis of the neutralization of such ship canal, the following rules substantially as embodied in the convention of Constantinople, signed the 28th October, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Canal; that is to say—

And it points out specifically that—

The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise.

Now, do you tell me that under the conditions I have mentioned we did not agree that we would not show any discriminatory rates in favor of our own ships? But a gentleman said to me to-night, "Suppose we owned a railroad, do you tell me that we would not have a perfect right to transport property on that railroad free and not charge for freight, and yet charge other shippers freight rates for shipping their stuff?" That is just exactly where the mistake is made in this proposition. We can put Government ships through the canal without the payment of tolls, but we have no right to put John Smith's or Bill Jones's ship through there simply because he happens to be an American citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The lines found on page 2, commencing at line 21, are as follows:

The President is authorized to acquire by treaty with the Republic of Panama any additional land or land under water not already granted, or which was excepted from the grant, that he may deem necessary for the operation, maintenance, sanitation, or protection of the Panama Canal, and may, in like manner, exchange any land or land under water not deemed necessary for such purposes for other land or land under water which may be deemed necessary for such purposes, which additional land or land under water so acquired shall become part of the Canal Zone.

If the Government, under the provisions of this bill, should abandon the title to all of the lands within the Canal Zone not now owned or claimed in private ownership, does the gentleman contend that we would not be in a position to dispose of the land and property as we saw fit, even if the canal was not built or was not used?

Mr. HAMLIN. These gentlemen have this mistaken idea, that we may acquire additional lands by treaty or exchange by treaty, but when we acquired the zone 10 miles wide across the Isthmus by treaty there were private individuals who had some claims against the Panama Government. Of course, these people could not be robbed of their rights; somebody must pay them or they would be robbed of their property.

Now, in making provisions for depopulating the zone, we believe it is necessary for the Government of the United States to own all the land, and then if my friend from Indiana has a home down there the Government can not dispossess him without paying him something for his improvements and his rights, whatever they may be there; but that does not give us any greater rights than we got out of the treaty.

Mr. SABATH. If a man owned a title to the land, it would not give us any greater right than we got by treaty.

Mr. HAMLIN. No; we hold the strip of land in perpetuity by virtue of the treaty, and if we acquired every foot of land, so far as private ownership is concerned, and then abandoned the project, or moved away, it would go back to the Panama Government.

Mr. CLINE. We got the land under the treaty for a certain purpose and the limitation was set out in the grant.

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly; and I am glad the gentleman called my attention to it. We got the land for a certain purpose, and that was a public purpose. We did not build the canal for the United States alone; we built it for the world, and the world has got an interest in it, in a way. There is no question about it, and we could not handle it as we could a canal wholly within the jurisdiction of the territory of the United States.

Here is the proposition in a nutshell, on our right to collect tolls or not collect tolls on coastwise trade: It seems to me that your representative who opened up the debate for you on this proposition, who fired the big gun—and I make no invidious comparison—gave your whole case away in answer to a question by the gentleman from Minnesota the other day. I refer to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS]. On the right to collect tolls, Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota asked him this question:

> Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Section 3 of the general bridge act provides that any company desiring to use a railroad bridge, built under the railroad-bridge act, shall pay for it, the same as is provided by the law under which the Panama Canal was built; that is, we authorize a railroad that builds a bridge to charge for the use of it in interstate commerce.
> Mr. DOREMUS. Yes.
> Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. So that this Congress does authorize charges, levies tolls, and imposes taxes in interstate commerce, does it not?
> Mr. DOREMUS. Yes. The gentleman is entirely right. The mistake he makes is in confusing a proposition of that kind with the Panama Canal, which is a Government-owned proposition, and the tax proposed to be imposed is a Government-imposed tax. If they had proceeded under the old Clayton-Bulwer treaty and permitted an American company or private individuals to build the canal, of course everybody would have had to pay tolls for the use of the canal. But this is an entirely different proposition. The canal is not being built by a private corporation. The Government simply permits a private corporation to charge a reasonable toll for the use of the improvement.

Is that the proposition you stand for—that if we had permitted, as we could have done, the building of this canal by a private corporation that then you would not be here asking the Government to compel that private company to give to your ship-owned companies these tolls, but because it was the people of the United States who built the canal you are ready to make a raid upon the Treasury and say that we must give up these tolls, that it is an outrage, an infamous outrage, to impose upon the traffic a toll charge of a dollar or a dollar and a quarter a ton? If it were some private corporation and you were dead sure that it would go into the pockets of some private concern, you concede the right of that concern to charge toll through that canal. You forget the interest of the poor consumer, for whom you have shed crocodile tears here the last two days for fear that the Government will charge toll there that may ultimately be paid to the consumer; but if it shall be paid to the private corporation, you do not contend it ought not to be charged.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I presume the gentleman is very much in favor of the project of a deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think I should be glad to see that built.

Mr. KNOWLAND. If that is constructed, we will have the right there to impose a toll, which a private corporation probably would do. Is the gentleman in favor, if that waterway is completed, of imposing a toll? It does not benefit the people on the coast.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, when we get to that proposition, if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] is then in Congress, he will try to deal with it as it seemeth best to him. At present I am dealing with the Panama Canal, a project 2,000 miles from our shores. If it is right to impose this burden on transportation, as you characterize it, if a private corporation had built the canal, why is it not right to charge it when the people of the United States built it?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit the interruption, I think it will fit mighty pretty right there to suggest that section 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, under which the private company would have been authorized to construct the canal, is preserved and eternalized in the preamble to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty under which the canal has been constructed.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; that is true; but I was arguing the ethics of the thing, or trying to. We can not concede the right to charge tolls provided those tolls go to a private corporation, but claim if they go into the Federal Treasury then they ought not to be paid. The people of this country have contributed $400,000,000 toward the building of that canal drawn from every section of the country. Have they not a right to compel the ship companies who get the benefit of the canal to contribute toward the cost of operation and maintenance of the canal? Who is it going to benefit when you come right down to the question of dollars and cents? It will not benefit the people living in the interior sections of the country. It is ridiculous for gentlemen to talk about the steamship companies, if they can save $1 a ton toll through the canal, giving the benefit of that dollar to the people throughout the interior of the country on their freight from the seaboard to their homes. Once it has gotten into the pockets of the ship company they are not going to part with it and contribute that toward the freight rates into the interior of the country. The railroads, the moment the goods get to shore, will charge all that the traffic will bear and all that the Interstate Commerce Commission will permit them to charge for hauling this freight into the interior. So that there is no reason to tell me that we people living in the interior of the country are to be benefited in dollars and cents by giving the coastwise trade free tolls.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I presume the gentleman voted for free sugar?

Mr. HAMLIN. I did.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Does the gentleman believe that the difference between the present tariff on sugar and free sugar will go into the pockets of the consumer or into the pockets of the Sugar Trust?

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope and expect that it will go into the pockets of the consumer.

Mr. KNOWLAND. What is the difference between the two propositions?

Mr. HAMLIN. There is all the difference in the world. You put this $1 a ton toll in the pocket of the Shipping Trust. There is nothing to make them turn it loose. Importers of sugar will compel the Sugar Trust to reduce the price.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, if the rate on wheat is lowered 5 cents a hundred from Missouri River points to New York, it means 3 cents a bushel to the producer, does it not?

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not figured it out. Your figures may be correct.

Mr. LOBECK. When you lower the freight somebody gets the benefit.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is no question about that.

Mr. LOBECK. When I can sell something as a merchant at my door for 5 per cent less than ordinarily, and I sell it for 5 per cent less, I make just as much money on a smaller investment in the business.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is no question about that.

Mr. LOBECK. Whenever you reduce the freight rate somebody is going to benefit, and indirectly the consumer gets it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the gentleman think that the remission of the toll of $1 a ton through the Panama Canal will enable him to get goods in Omaha by the railroads from New York any cheaper than he gets them now?

Mr. LOBECK. If I can buy for $1 a ton less in the port of New York on account of reduction in the freight, I can lay that down at $1 a ton less in the city of Omaha. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman can not do that; that is the trouble. The railroads will charge you all they are allowed to charge without regard to the water rate.

Mr. LOBECK. I want to submit it will not increase the freight rate from New York to Omaha, and if my New York importer can sell me at $1 less I will lay it down at Omaha at $1 less.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman is not foolish enough to believe he would make $1 difference in the goods he is buying?

Mr. LOBECK. If the man in San Francisco sells delivered in New York City for $1 a ton less by reason of $1 less charge he will sell for $1 less in New York, and I buy his merchandise to the Missouri River for $1 less. My freight rate will not be decreased to the Missouri River.

Mr. HAMLIN. But the San Francisco merchant does not get the benefit of this $1 toll. It is the Shipping Trust.

Mr. SABATH. What reason has the gentleman to believe the rate will be lowered $1 a ton to the Omaha merchant?

Mr. LOBECK. I said if they reduce the freight rate $1 a ton I would buy it for $1 a ton less.

Mr. SABATH. You have had experience with railroad lines and steamship lines——

Mr. LOBECK. Not steamship lines.

Mr. SABATH. With railroads, and whenever the conditions are so whereby it is possible for them to reduce a rate 15 per cent or 20 per cent, do they do it? I say, do they do it?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield further?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. LOBECK. If they do not reduce I do not get any reduction, but if the reduction is made my customer or I get the benefit.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman, it seems to me, is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. LOBECK. Possibly.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman tries to make a personal application to himself. The gentleman would not likely buy any goods, living in Omaha, as he does, that came from the Panama Canal; therefore personally he or his section of the country would get no benefit. But let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact: Now, we are told in the hearings that the average freight rate across the continent by the railroads is $25.76 per ton. Now, the evidence is that by water it would be about $6 per ton. Does the gentleman believe——

Mr. KNOWLAND. More than that.

Mr. HAMLIN. Well, say $8 per ton.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Ten dollars.

Mr. HAMLIN. Well, say $10 per ton. Does the gentleman believe that if there were no tolls charged that that rate would be any less than $10?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Just that much lower.

Mr. HAMLIN. We might as well get down to common sense. If the railroads are charging $25.76 a ton now, they can not meet the rate of $8 or $10 per ton, can they?

Mr. LOBECK. The railroads of this country have met it.

Mr. HAMLIN. No. Here is your chief apostle on free tolls, Mr. Humphrey, who answered this question:

> Question. The actual cost of moving goods by water from the Atlantic seacoast to the Pacific coast when the canal is completed will be far below the actual cost of moving freight by rail.
> Mr. HUMPHREY. I think that is right; nobody can dispute that.

If that is true, does the gentleman think the railroads can meet that rate?

Mr. LOBECK. The railroads across the continent have met the rate——

Mr. HAMLIN. But your own expert says they can not meet it. Does the gentleman believe the steamship companies are going to be generous enough simply because they get free tolls to reduce their tolls another dollar a ton?

Mr. LOBECK. The man on the Pacific coast is going to sell New York delivery so the New York man can deliver.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, no.

Mr. LOBECK. He has done it heretofore. They all buy merchandise from Europe and sell me delivery at New York.

Mr. HAMLIN. We are not buying from Europe. Let us approach this question in a little broader way.

Mr. LOBECK. You have argued here by lowering tariff rates we would have more importations.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let us discuss this subject from a little broader standpoint.

Mr. LOBECK. All right.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, say we do not charge any toll; who gets the benefit?

Mr. LOBECK. That lowers the freight rate, will it not?

Mr. HAMLIN. Who gets the benefit, taking your view of it?

Mr. LOBECK. Finally, the consumer.

Mr. HAMLIN. The consumer of those particular goods; the goods which go through the canal?

Mr. LOBECK. Whatever it is.

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly. That would be only a very small percentage of the 90,000,000 of the people of this country getting any benefit, would it not?

Mr. LOBECK. Oh, I do not know about that.

Mr. HAMLIN. But there would not be enough traffic coming through that canal to supply the one-hundredth part of the people of this country.

Then take your own argument that those particular consumers did receive some infinitesimally small benefit, what are you going to do with the other eighty-and-odd millions of people of this country who are taxed every year to contribute money to pay the running expenses and the interest on the money we have expended in building the canal who get no benefits by reason of free tolls?

Mr. LOBECK. Now, I want to answer that. Kansas City has asked that the Missouri River be improved so that you can have water transportation from the Mississippi River up to Kansas City, at the cost of $20,000,000. Why? Because they will have competition with the railroad by water, so that the producer west of the Missouri River, and you people in Missouri, and all along, north and south, will get a lower rate, which will mean 3 cents a bushel on all the grain produced, and for every shipment from the East and West the rate will be lower. That is why you have asked Congress to improve the Missouri River. Yes, and the people along the Missouri River expect to get some benefits from it.

Mr. HAMLIN. And that is exactly what we are giving the people of the United States in the building of this canal, namely, lower freight rates across the entire country. And yet you are not satisfied with that. As the chairman suggested to-night, after you have built the well you want to charge us for the water you put into it.

Mr. LOBECK. You are asking to spend——

Mr. HAMLIN. We did not build the Missouri River. God Almighty built that.

Mr. LOBECK. You are asking to spend twenty millions of the people's money——

Mr. HAMLIN. And we spend money on harbors and docks, for the use of which we do not charge anything. These rivers are free as the air.

Mr. LOBECK. But you do it for the general good.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; but I can not let the gentleman take all of my time. I want to be generous, but I can not let him take all the time allotted to me.

Mr. LOBECK. Excuse me. I just wanted to get some information.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not believe that the little sum of $1 per ton, which means only about 50 cents an actual ton, because it is to be a net registered ton—and the fact is that most of these ships will carry about twice as many tons as the net registered ton that the ship shows, and so the actual rate will be about 50 cents a ton for coming through the canal—I do not believe that this small charge will make any appreciable difference in the price to the consumer.

Mr. LOBECK. Whatever it is, it is a reduction.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is so infinitesimally small that the consumer could put in his eye all he could save out of that. He would never notice it; but in the aggregate it would mean something to the people of the United States to help them pay the expenses of the running of this canal.

Now, another proposition advanced by the free-toll people is that we want to encourage the building of more ships. Of course some of our people own ships, and whether we charge them toll or do not they will provide to carry whatever traffic is to be carried; but no man is going to be foolish enough, I apprehend, to contend that a dollar or 50 cents a ton that they might save in the tollage in the canal will induce them to build any more ships to ply between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. He must have other reasons and motives for building it, and not the saving of 50 cents or a dollar a ton.

I will put it on broader ground. This canal is being built by the American people to-day at large expense, and they have a right to make a charge for shipment through that canal to recoup some of the expense that they are put to in maintaining that canal and operating it. We have protected the coastwise shipping by law. They have an absolute monopoly of the coastwise traffic, and, as Mr. Dearborn, the president of the American-Hawaiian Line, who impressed me as being a man very fair and frank, said:

> If you will only keep your coastwise laws and do not repeal those, we do not care anything about the toll. We can pay the tolls. It is a small matter, and we are willing to pay it, and we can do it and then compete with any rates the transcontinental railroads can make in this country.

That is true. I have not a particle of doubt about it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield on that question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. You mean by "monopoly of the coastwise trade" that the American vessels, floating the American flag, have the monopoly?

Mr. HAMLIN. I mean vessels engaged in the coastwise trade.

Mr. SABATH. No other vessels are permitted.

Mr. RAKER. I understand. I appreciate that. He says that there is a monopoly of the coastwise trade.

Mr. HAMLIN. By the coastwise vessels.

Mr. RAKER. That means that as many as may desire may go into that business?

Mr. HAMLIN. I mean that vessels of other nations can not enter into the coastwise trade. Now, then, we have given them that monopoly, and if we treat each one of those fellows fairly and equally, where is the complaint? Let us be perfectly frank about that. To illustrate, you three gentlemen are engaged in the coastwise trade. None of these other gentlemen over here can compete with you, because they are excluded by law.

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMLIN. And you have got an absolute monopoly. Of course, others could come in and engage in the coastwise trade, but an outsider can not do so, hence they have the absolute monopoly. You all agree to that.

Now, then, where is the calamity to you if we charged a dollar a ton on every ship? There is no discrimination; there is no harm done; it is entirely equal; no favoritism shown. Then the only excuse under heaven for giving your people, the owners of these coastwise ships, the advantage of a dollar a ton tollage is to encourage you to build more ships, and that is ridiculous. Of course, that would not be an incentive to you, because it is not big enough, but it is simply a stepping-stone toward a ship subsidy, in fact it is a ship subsidy in the worse form—a thing I am absolutely opposed to, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I do not find any fault with the idea that all vessels should be treated alike, but I am astounded by the argument that the lowering of freights does not benefit either the producer or the consumer.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, the gentleman has listened absolutely in vain to me if he thinks that I have stated any such thing.

Mr. LOBECK. It has been the argument heard here to that effect.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not argue that at all, but I say that if the consumer gets the benefit of this dollar toll, or if he has got to pay that dollar toll—and concede that he does—it is so infinitesimally small that he could not realize it one way or the other, and then, on the other hand, it would be only a very small fraction of the American people who——

Mr. LOBECK. It is 5 cents a hundred.

Mr. HAMLIN. Well, it is only those who happen to consume the goods that are hauled through the canal who would be affected by it. But if you do not charge any tolls, the expenses of operating and maintaining the canal go on down there just the same. You have got to pay the interest on the bonds. How, then, are you going to get your money? Are you going to take it from every man, woman, and child in the United States, or are you going to make the shipowners pay it? You are willing to stand here and advocate the placing of a burden on every man, woman, and child in the United States, but you say please do not put 5 cents extra on somebody living along the Pacific coast that happens to consume the goods that are hauled through that canal.

I do not stand for that doctrine. I believe that my people deserve some consideration. My people, who will not be benefited a particle by reason of the coastwise trade, should not be taxed to pay the operating expenses of the canal. I am glad we have got the canal. We are proud of it. It will reflect glory on this Government for all time to come. But when you come down to this measly question of tolls, after we have given you a monopoly and shortened the distance 8,000 miles from coast to coast, then you come here begging and whining and asking us to give you free tolls through the canal.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. It seems to me that there is a gentleman here who is under the impression that the freight rates, due to the Panama Canal, will be increased. Now, for the information of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK], will the gentleman kindly inform us again what the saving on freight will be between, we will say, San Francisco and New York on each ton?

Mr. LOBECK. You could illustrate by the saving accomplished over the method of hauling by ox teams in the West and by the railroads to-day.

Mr. SABATH. No; what the rate will be when the Panama Canal will be completed?

Mr. LOBECK. That is why you are building the canal, to lower the rates to St. Louis and the neighborhood where the gentleman lives.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is exactly what they are going to do. Here is testimony that the rate through the canal, for instance, on lumber, will not exceed $6 a ton, and yet it is $25.76 by rail; and it is now conceded——

Mr. LOBECK. It used to cost just as much to haul corn from central Illinois up to Chicago as it now does from there to the seacoast.

Mr. HAMLIN. But as we give you benefit and as we give you comfort and as we give you conveniences, you want us to give you more; and after a while you will be like the old man to whom they offered to give some corn. He said, "Is it shelled?" They said, "No." Then he said, "Drive on." [Laughter.]

Mr. LOBECK. I mean that the producer shall get every cent that he can for what he is going to sell.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Nebraska announce a sound sentiment when he says one object in digging the canal is to reduce freight rates. I had inferred from the argument of those who were assaulting the Treasury that it was to fill up the pockets of the Ship Trust. I want to ask the gentleman in that connection if it is right, because we have built this canal to shorten distance and reduce freight rates, that we be compelled to pay a bounty of $4,000 or $5,000 a ship out of the Treasury of the United States and give it to the Ship Trust, would it not be right to give to the passengers who go through the canal the price of their passage instead of making them pay?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly it would, on the same principle; and I have no doubt if my friend from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] should go through there he would want us to pay his passage.

Mr. ADAMSON. Suppose we should give American citizens their passage free and should charge foreign passengers, what would you say to that? Would that be equal conditions and charges?

Mr. LOBECK. I have not said I was either for or against free tolls; but I have been listening to the argument made here that when freights are reduced, whether in the shape of a reduction of tolls or anything else, it does not benefit some one. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] made that statement this evening, and he knows better, because he has shipped goods out into his country by ox team when there was no railroad.

Mr. HAMLIN. If it will reduce freight rates $6, $7, $8, or $9 a ton, will it not benefit transcontinental freight rates all over the country?

Mr. LOBECK. That is what I have been trying to get into the gentleman's head.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have always conceded that, and I tell you we are giving you that. How much more do you want?

Mr. LOBECK. Everything the Lord will give us.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is true.

Mr. HAMLIN. I believe that is so; but we on the committee have some regard for the Federal Treasury and for the balance of the people of this country.

Mr. LOBECK. I believe that.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, let us get back to a little common sense.

Mr. LOBECK. All right.

Mr. HAMLIN. This bill provides that the tolls shall not be more than $1.25 a ton and shall not be less than the actual cost of the operation and maintenance of the canal, in the option of the President. That is based on the idea that it will cost somewhere in the neighborhood of a dollar a ton to put a ship through that canal. If the shipping company does not pay that cost, the people must pay it. A ship can not be put through that canal without cost. Who pays it? If you do not charge a toll, who will pay the cost of putting that ship through?

Mr. KNOWLAND. The same person who pays for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is taking it out of the pockets of the American people, and on whom you have no mercy at all. As long as you can make the American people pay you will stand up here and ask to have money put into the pockets of some private ship company and taken out of the pockets of your fellow citizens. I could not go home and look my people in the face without blushing if I admitted that I stood up here and said, "Let us take a dollar a ton out of the pockets of the American people for putting privately owned ships through the canal in order to give the money to some privately owned ship company."

Mr. LOBECK. But the gentleman could go home with a smile on his face when he got a good appropriation for the Missouri River.

Mr. HAMLIN. Of course, I am always glad to get appropriations for the Missouri River, for it benefits all the people along that great river, and not some private monopoly. I am willing to get an appropriation to improve your rivers and harbors, too; but I could not go home with a smile on my face if I stood up here and said I wanted to charge to the American people what it cost to put a ship through the Panama Canal and put that money in the pocket of the Shipping Trust. I say let the company owning the ship pay the tolls. I am willing that this canal should be built at the expense of the American people; but when you have expended $400,000,000 to marry the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans and shorten the distance 8,000 miles from coast to coast, in God's name what more do you want? Do you want us to buy the coal to run your ships?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Your southern markets get the benefit of it.

Mr. RAKER. You say we built the canal to marry the Atlantic to the Pacific. Was it not stated by the chairman of the committee [Mr. ADAMSON], and has it not been one of the main contentions in the arguments for this bill, that the prime, principal, and important consideration was for the Army and the Navy?

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, no.

Mr. RAKER. And that the question of commerce was not considered of primary importance?

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not think he made a statement of that kind. I did not so understand him at all.

Mr. RAKER. Is it your contention that one of the prime objects of building this canal is for the benefit of commerce?

Mr. HAMLIN. That was the prime object, undoubtedly.

Mr. ADAMSON. I did not hear all of that colloquy. I understand the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] accuses me of something in this connection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. No; I did not accuse the gentleman of anything, but as I understood his statement when he started out, it was that one of the principal things, or one of the main things, rather, that the canal was conceived and built for the purposes of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. ADAMSON. I took 4 hours and 15 minutes to run a kindergarten here and reiterated my position about a dozen times. I will refer the gentleman to the RECORD and he will find that I made no such statement as that.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman from Georgia did not make any such statement; the gentleman from California must have misunderstood him.

Mr. SABATH. There are some gentlemen who do not want to understand.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have occupied more time than I intended. I am thoroughly convinced, looking at the question from every standpoint, and at every phase of it, that every interest will be taken care of; that it is equitable and just to let whatever traffic goes through the canal pay equal toll, and that will not, we are afraid, in the next few years any more than pay the cost of operation, if it does that.

We have built a wonderful canal and if you have not seen it you ought to. We are proud of it, and we are going to maintain it, but I do not believe that the American people ought to continue to be taxed every year for the benefit of the few people who happen to operate ships through the canal. [Applause.]

In conclusion I will say: How any gentleman who claims to be opposed to ship subsidy, and especially my Democratic brethren, can be in favor of giving this advantage to our coastwise vessels, I can not understand.

In our last national platform, on this subject we said:

> We believe in the upbuilding of the American merchant marine without new or additional burdens upon the people and without bounties from the Public Treasury.

It will actually cost about $1 a net registered ton to put the vessels through the canal. If you do not make these shipowners pay it, you will have to take the money out of the Public Treasury to pay it. It is safe to say that the average vessel going through the canal will be about 7,000 net registered tons. This will mean, if you give the vessels free tolls, that it will cost the people $7,000 every time we put one of these vessels through the canal. Will that not be "an additional burden upon the people"?

You can not get away from this proposition that somebody must pay for putting these ships through the canal. Will you make the Shipping Trust, who will get the benefit of the canal, pay it, or will you put their vessels through at the expense of all the people?

I am opposed to ship subsidy in any form and shall vote to make the owners of these ships pay the tolls through the canal. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LLOYD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21969, to provide for operation of the Panama Canal and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken up to this time on the bill be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the bill may extend remarks in the RECORD—for five days?

Mr. ADAMSON. No, Mr. Speaker; I do not ask for leave to print, but simply for those who have spoken to extend remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 18, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HARRISON of New York, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21963) to make Fort Covington, N. Y., a subport of entry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 730), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (S. 4572) to designate Walhalla, Neche, and St. John, in the State of North Dakota, subports of entry, and to extend the privileges of the first section of the act of Congress approved June 10, 1880, to said subports, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 735), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GREGG of Texas, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 24225) to amend an act entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," approved March 3, 1899, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 732), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (S. 3815) to amend an act entitled "An act to require apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean steamers," approved June 24, 1910, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 734), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. PRAY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 5817) granting to the county of Hill, in the State of Montana, the jail building and fixtures now upon the abandoned Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation, in the State of Montana, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 736), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 18, 1912.

The House met at 11 a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God and our Father, fit us for the new duties of the new day by bringing us in rapport with Thee, that forgetting self in an earnest and patriotic desire to do great things for a great people, these Thy servants may demonstrate the wisdom of popular government through its chosen Representatives in the Congress now assembled. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REGULATING THE LOANING OF MONEY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 8768, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real-estate brokers in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. DYER.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LINTHICUM, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence, for three days, on account of important business.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER. Gen. BINGHAM was the father of the House. When he died the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] succeeded to that title. It is an extraordinary situation, and therefore the Chair assigns the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] to preside to-morrow in the House as Speaker pro tempore at the eulogies on the life, character, and services of Gen. BINGHAM.

TO AMEND AND REENACT SECTION 5241, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 541 (H. Rept. 737).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of H. R. 24153.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, what is the bill?

The SPEAKER. To amend the national banking law.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is the Pujo bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill, H. R. 24153, to amend and reenact section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5241. No association shall be subject to any visitatorial powers other than such as are authorized by this title, or are vested in the courts of justice, or such as shall be or shall have been exercised or directed by the Congress or either branch thereof."

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House, I would like to have the report upon this bill read, to be included as a part of my remarks.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Do I understand the bill is now up for consideration?

Mr. PUJO. For one hour. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I will yield one-half of the time to anyone who is opposed to the amendment, and that at the end of one hour I shall move the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know that I shall want any time, but it may be a very important matter, and I would like to understand thoroughly what is being done. This is an amendment to the law?

Mr. PUJO. An amendment to section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. And unanimous consent has been given to consider it?

Mr. PUJO. Oh, no; we have a rule from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CANNON. And the rule has been adopted?

Mr. PUJO. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And the bill is to be considered for an hour, and then under the five-minute rule?

Mr. PUJO. I take it that under the rule the question will come to a final vote at the end of one hour without any intervening motion or amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I have been very busy about other matters, and I did not even know that a rule had been adopted. I apprehend I shall have no objection to the bill, but I would like to understand what it does. It amends a national-bank law?

Mr. PUJO. Yes; section 5421 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, adopted in 1864.

The SPEAKER. The parliamentary situation is this: The gentleman from Louisiana has one hour, and if he consumes it all and any gentleman gets the floor, then that gentleman will have an hour, and that may be kept up until Members become tired.

Mr. GARNER. But if the gentleman from Louisiana moves the previous question and the previous question is adopted that will end it.

The SPEAKER. But the previous question has not yet been ordered.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, I announced in obtaining recognition that at the end of an hour I would move the previous question. I shall be very glad to divide one-half of that time with anyone who desires to discuss the bill.

Mr. CANNON. It might develop that perhaps more time ought to be had. I have great confidence in the judgment of the gentleman in amending the act, but still it affects so many banks and is so important to the business interests of the country that I would like to know what it is about.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, I repeat my request for unanimous consent that the report upon the bill be read in my time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the report. (H. Rept. 665.)

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred H. R. 24153, to amend and reenact section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, having had the same under consideration, beg to report the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The purpose of this bill is to amend and reenact section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. This section now reads as follows:

"No association shall be subject to any visitorial powers other than such as are authorized by this title or are vested in the courts of justice."

The Committee on Banking and Currency, under the provisions of House resolution No. 429, as amended by No. 504, has been directed to investigate the financial and monetary conditions in this country, particularly with a view to ascertaining whether or not there is an undue and improper concentration of money, the uses to which and the manner in which its influence has been exercised, and the result of such exercise.

In view of the wording of the section referred to, a doubt has arisen as to whether any national banking association would deny the right of a committee of Congress to investigate its affairs or its relations to other financial institutions. No information has come to the committee officially that any national bank would take that position, but in order to remove the doubt and to prevent the investigation from becoming abortive by being tied up in litigation, the committee deems it advisable that the amendment offered in the bill be adopted, to wit:

"Or such as shall be or shall have been exercised or directed by the Congress or either branch thereof."

The section, if the amendment is carried, will then read as follows:

"No association shall be subject to any visitorial powers other than such as are authorized by this title or are vested in the courts of justice, or such as shall be or shall have been exercised or directed by the Congress or either branch thereof."

The committee does not believe that it was the intention of Congress, when this section was originally enacted in 1864, to strip itself of its power to investigate national banking associations, authorized by Federal law, and to merge and concentrate such power into the hands of the comptroller and such examiners as he might appoint for that purpose.

The scope of the present amendment will be to reinstate in the Congress—the House of Representatives and the Senate—the right to investigate national banking associations.

The committee does not concede, as a legal proposition, that this right can not be exercised under the iniquisitorial power of Congress, yet because of the doubt expressed by eminent attorneys in that behalf and of the affirmative argument that the statute, as it now reads, operates as a bar to an investigation except through the comptroller's office and examiners, it is considered best to submit the matter to the judgment of the Congress, so that there will be no legal interference with the work of the committee, acting within constitutional and legal authority.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the report I have but little to add. I prepared that report under the direction of the committee, and I want to say further that this is a unanimous report. It is believed by the committee, and it has been, as stated in the report, suggested to the committee that the doubt of power in the committee is just as fatal as if that power did not vest in the committee to make the investigation.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PUJO. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it the purpose of the committee to publish the hearings and to expose to the public all of the information that it received in reference to the conduct of national banks?

Mr. PUJO. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Tennessee, I desire to say that the committee has not taken formal action; but expressing my individual views, the reports from the financial institutions will be official documents, and it is not intended that they shall be published ad libitum so that rival institutions may take advantage of one another in the way of information which may be thereby obtained.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will not the hearings of this committee be published, similar to the hearings of the other investigating committees, and is not that practically giving the information to the press of the country?

Mr. PUJO. The hearings will be published, but the information obtained from financial institutions, unless it is of a public character, ought not to be made public.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will not the committee have the right, if this law is amended as the gentleman proposes to amend it in this bill, to publish and expose to the public all of the private or confidential business transactions of every national bank in the United States?

Mr. PUJO. I do not so understand it. Under the Constitution our power is limited. We can not invade personal or private rights, but it would be a very extreme statement to say that a national banking association, a creature of the Congress, could not be investigated by a committee of either branch of the Congress. Under the law as it now reads it is a question, and eminent counsel have expressed doubt whether, under the provisions of section 5241 of the Revised Statutes adopted in 1864, the entire power of Congress was not converged and concentrated in the Comptroller of the Currency, with power to administer oaths, to appoint examiners, and order visitations of national banking associations.

Now, this is a serious question. The Congress of the United States has ordered this committee, under two resolutions, by almost unanimous action, to investigate the financial and monetary system of this country, with a view of determining whether there is an undue and improper concentration of money or credits, so that proper laws may be enacted to correct the evils, if any exist. A few years ago, in New York, an investigation of the insurance companies was had, and many good laws have been enacted since that time protecting the policy holders; and, in my judgment, it was now the intention of Congress, in vesting the power to make this investigation, that the committee should have full power. Now, if the Congress is in earnest, if it desires the information, and wants a fair and full investigation, it should add strength to the arm of the committee and take back the power that should never have been parted with when the national banking act was adopted.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PUJO. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I most heartily agree with the gentleman from Louisiana that this committee ought to have all the power it desires. This is the third effort the committee has made to secure that power. Does the gentleman from Louisiana think this will be the last time he will have to ask Congress to assist him to get power?

Mr. PUJO. I do not know; but I will answer the gentleman from Texas by saying this: I do not know from whence the influence has come, but there is powerful influence being exercised and pressure brought to bear to prevent the investigation of this question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman, in that connection, tell us where the demand and the pressure comes from demanding this investigation or asking this investigation?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The House of Representatives.

Mr. PUJO. The House of Representatives, and by virtue of the provisions of resolution 429, as amended by 504 and originally inaugurated by a colleague of yours, a fellow-Republican, Mr. LINDBERGH.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us where this wonderful pressure is coming from against this investigation?

Mr. PUJO. Oh, those things are intangible; you can not place them. I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that unless we have this power this inquiry should not be continued. We have no right to spend the money of this Government in a futile and useless inquiry, as has sometimes been done in the past.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PUJO. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. I have great confidence in the gentleman from Louisiana. This is an investigation touching important business institutions of the country and it might become very mischievous unless conducted in good faith, with an eye to enacting legislation for the benefit of the country and for the benefit of our banking system, which dovetails into all business relations. I could conceive, if the investigation is conducted merely for the purpose of headlines in the newspapers, a "suppressio veri" or "suggestio falsi," if that is the quotation of the maxim, that it might do harm. I do not recall the personality of the committee. The House of Representatives has undertaken an investigation. I am not intimately acquainted with the gentleman from Louisiana, but I have been his colleague, and I would be perfectly willing to concede, so far as he is concerned, that any investigation he would control would be conducted in the best of faith; not for political advantage, to be used in a presidential campaign, but in good faith to ascertain the facts. In the ascertainment of those facts, however, concerning many, many thousands of banks having relation to many other thousands of banks carrying on the business of the country you might put such a bank or banks, touching their private business, at a disadvantage by furnishing information that might be used by their competitors.

I apprehend that a majority of this House will agree to the legislation, but in agreeing to it as one Member of the House, after hastily examining the bill, I do so with the expectation that this will be an investigation in good faith, for the purpose of using the information so as not to harm improperly men engaged in a business dovetailing with all other businesses and embarrass them at the hands of some competitor or competitors who would seek to use the information to overthrow legitimate competition.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield right there?

Mr. CANNON. One moment, if the gentleman will allow me?

Mr. PUJO. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Therefore, having the confidence which I have in the gentleman who is the chairman of this committee, it seems to me that I am prepared to support the bill.

Mr. PUJO. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a question.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman from Illinois believe that any Member of this House could assume for a moment that a committee of this House was going into an investigation of this character for any other purpose than for the good of the General Government and for the purpose of ascertaining facts upon which to base legislation?

Mr. CANNON. Is the gentleman on the committee?

Mr. GARNER. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that I would be slow to so believe, and yet I will say to the gentleman that in almost 40 years' service in this House I have seen, time and again, investigations conducted to suppress the truth or to defeat half of it, and seen it dwelt upon in headlines of sensational papers, and I trust that this investigation will not be so conducted.

Mr. GARNER. Have not most of those investigations been made by the Republicans of this House?

Mr. CANNON. This is a Government of the people through organizations called parties, and in hot blood and in campaigns sometimes—and I do not claim that either side could be convicted of a monopoly under the antitrust act—the investigation sometimes becomes a farce, and sometimes is conducted in good faith.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I suggest to the gentleman that sometimes when started in good faith they are stopped by very high authority? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; by forces that operate; but neither great party organization can claim a monopoly. The great mass of the people in both parties want to be fair.

I thank the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] for his courtesy.

Mr. PUJO. Resuming my remarks, I will say to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who has just concluded, and who made inquiries touching the nature, character, scope, and purpose of this investigation, and entertaining for him that great respect which every Member of Congress feels for him personally as an able legislator, that I reflect the views of the subcommittee having in charge this investigation—that it will be conducted in good faith, with an eye single to the discovery of abuses, so that we may have legislation in the future to protect the interests of the people.

Mr. CANNON. That is, if legislation is needed.

Mr. PUJO. If legislation should be needed. I desire to say further, Mr. Speaker, and in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr CANNON], that I have been on this committee for nearly 10 years, having had the honor of being appointed by the gentleman from Illinois, when he was Speaker of the House, a member of that committee. I have always taken the position that the question of financial and monetary conditions is not political but scientific. However, I realize that all matters that have to be passed upon and thrashed out by the Houses of Congress are apt to be tinged sometimes with politics.

But it is the purpose of this investigation, as I understand it, to find if additional legislation be necessary. It might be suggested, for instance, that a law should be passed that would prevent trust companies from owning a majority of the stock in a national banking association, to prevent the control of deposits, so that ventures might not be underwritten with the money of depositors. There may be many instances of that character developed by such an investigation. It is a question of doubt whether we have the power, and I want to be frank and free with this House, that unless this power be granted the inquiry ought not to be continued We may be stopped at any time—that is, a witness can decline to testify. He may be brought before the bar of the House, and then may take advantage, if held for contempt, of habeas corpus, and take the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, and thus retard the investigation.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ELLERBE). Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. PUJO. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. I notice in the report here that from the language, in view of the wording of the section referred to, a doubt has arisen as to whether any national banking association would deny the right of a committee of Congress to investigate its affairs or its relations to other financial institutions.

Mr. PUJO. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. And no information has come to the committee officially that any national bank would take that position, and so forth. Now, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not any attempt has been made yet by the committee to investigate the affairs of any national bank?

Mr. PUJO. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS], that we have sent out, with the assistance of experts, to every financial institution in the United States, 30,000 of them, inquiries far beyond the form used by the Comptroller of the Currency. These returns are coming in daily. They are being analyzed and classified in order that the committee might have some data with which to start the investigation. They are not all in yet. It is a large undertaking, but we expect to have them all tabulated in a little while, as soon as all the returns are in.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. PUJO. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, referring to the resolution under which the gentleman's committee is proceeding, and for which I voted in the caucus, and for which I voted in this House—a proper resolution—the gentleman understands that by this bill, which has been reported, he is simply authorized to pursue, as a matter of course, further inquiries of the business of the national banks than the present law gives you power to investigate? Under the present law there is no right of inquiry or visitation allowed, so far as national banks are concerned, except that stated in the act to be exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Comptroller of the Currency, by certain designated and appointed agents known as bank examiners.

The purpose of this act is to permit Congress, or either House, in an investigation to inquire into the business of the national banks, a thing which it would not have authority to do by reason of the existing statute, referring solely to the national banks.

Now, the resolution under which the gentleman's committee is proceeding, leaving out the long string of high-sounding "whereases" contained in it, authorizes the committee to inquire into other businesses than the national banks, as, for example, the business of trust companies and insurance companies. The gentleman, of course, does not think that this gives him or his committee any additional powers over those State-organized institutions than that he has without this bill.

Mr. PUJO. Not at all, sir. It applies only to the national banking associations.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; and I apprehend—that is, if we stand by what we know to be the law at the present time—Congress could not empower you to investigate a State-organized institution, such as a trust company or banking company, unless it came in some way within the jurisdiction of matters concerning which the Congress had the right to legislate. So that as to this bill—for which I will vote, because I have the utmost confidence in the gentleman and his committee—the gentleman will not get any additional authority over any financial institutions except over the national banks, and it is known in the business world that large business undertakings and enterprises, such as the building of railroads and various other things, steam and electric railroads, and the issuance of bonds, and all those things, are financed not by the national banks, but by the trust companies that are organized under State laws. That is true as a general thing, is it not?

Mr. PUJO. That is generally true.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the resolution gives you no power over them, and the resolution authorizing the investigation can give you no power over them?

Mr. PUJO. That is true; and in further reply to the gentleman from Georgia I will say that the purpose and intention is that there will be no legal interference with the work of the committee when acting within constitutional and legal authority.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am perfectly willing to leave that to the gentleman from Louisiana and his subcommittee.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. JACKSON rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield?

Mr. PUJO. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] for a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the gentleman yielding to the gentleman from Kansas first.

Mr. PUJO. I leave it to you gentlemen to determine.

Mr. JACKSON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to a matter in connection with what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has said. This bill would confer upon the committee inquisitorial power as to a national bank—that is, as to the corporate entity—but it would not give the gentleman's committee any additional authority to compel witnesses to testify.

Might it not be true that, having the power to investigate into the business affairs of the corporate entity, you would still lack the power to compel individual witnesses to testify? It seems to me that is a matter to which the gentleman's committee should give special attention, for the reason that, as I understand the law at the present time, there is no power in the hands of this committee to compel any individual person in the country to testify, if he claims immunity, because he would make himself liable to criminal prosecution. I understand that this House is without power to confer that authority upon a committee, except by a law passed through both House of Congress. Ought not the committee now, as a part of this bill, or by a separate bill if it be found necessary, to prepare for the time when some individual will refuse to testify on the ground that he will make himself liable to prosecution for a criminal offense?

Mr. PUJO. In reply to the gentleman, I will state that the resolutions referring this matter to the committee for investigation have given us all the power that can be given under the Constitution of the United States—the right to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and examine them. Now, it is hornbook law that you can not make a man criminate himself, and we would have to amend the Constitution of the United States in order to bring a witness before a committee and make him criminate himself.

Mr. BUTLER. You would have to change the Bill of Rights.

Mr. PUJO. I say, we would have to amend the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. JACKSON. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. PUJO. In my judgment as a lawyer we have all the power in this committee that can be vested by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. JACKSON. Oh, no.

Mr. PUJO. I want to say further, in answer to the gentleman, and somewhat in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that I am not a financier. I am a banker only in a very relative sense. I have been able to gain a subsistence by the practice of the law, and it is my belief that we have all the power in this resolution that can be given to us under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. JACKSON. If the gentleman will permit me, I think he is somewhat in error in his statement of the law, that it would be unconstitutional to compel a witness to testify.

Mr. PUJO. You must give him an equivalent.

Mr. JACKSON. You must give him immunity.

Mr. PUJO. Judge Humphreys decided in the packers' case that you can not get something for nothing. You must give a man an equivalent. If he comes and gives you information that would punish him in the courts, you must give him freedom for that as an equivalent.

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly.

Mr. PUJO. That is horn-book law.

Mr. JACKSON. That is the point to which I am trying to call the gentleman's attention, that the general statute which attempted to give that immunity to witnesses before congressional committees has been set aside by the Supreme Court of the United States as being insufficient.

Mr. PUJO. Yes.

Mr. JACKSON. Believing that the gentleman's committee wants to get at the bottom of this entire subject, ought not the committee to bring in a bill at this time conferring upon all congressional committees of the House full authority to examine witnesses under complete immunity from prosecution? I notice in the press that the Steel Trust investigation committee is already up against this question. It is subpœnaing witnesses now who refuse to testify on the ground that they would become liable for criminal offenses.

Mr. PUJO. I will state in answer to the gentleman that that matter was fully considered when resolution 504 was reported to the House. We had an immunity clause in it; but in order to get through with this investigation we realized that there was no possible chance of passing it, because it had to be the joint action of both Houses of the Congress of the United States and approved by the President.

Mr. JACKSON. So will this bill have to be signed by the President.

Mr. PUJO. Yes; but we take it that if the House of Representatives passes a bill which seems so obviously fair, giving the power to the creator to examine what its creatures are doing, no one will raise any objection to it.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman will understand me as not complaining about this bill.

Mr. PUJO. I understand that.

Mr. JACKSON. I am only suggesting to the gentleman why it would be the best thing to have a similar bill put through both Houses at the same time upon a matter which may be so important before this investigation is concluded.

Mr. PUJO. It might be well, but we have no steering committee to whom we can refer matters of this kind. It was hard enough to get the simple proposition through.

Mr. JACKSON. Is not the gentleman himself a steering committee on this proposition?

Mr. PUJO. Only in so far as it relates to our power. I think, as a legal proposition, that we have the right to bring a witness here. I believe we have all the power that can be vested in a committee by resolution of the House in one of its agencies under the Constitution of the United States. We can not get more power without going through the procedure that the gentleman suggests.

Mr. JACKSON. The only thing I sought to call the gentleman's attention to was that if this bill is important why not make a clean sweep of it and put through both bills?

Mr. PUJO. We can not take up but one matter at a time; the other matter is one that affects many committees.

Mr. JACKSON. I think the gentleman will find that it affects his committee and his witnesses before he gets through.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 27 minutes.

Mr. PUJO. I desire to give time to anyone opposed to the bill. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. If it is not improper, I would like to ask a question about the pending bill. Is the primary object of this bill to obtain information from the comptroller?

Mr. PUJO. No; we have that power now.

Mr. MANN. The comptroller is entitled to obtain information from national banks.

Mr. PUJO. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Have you a right to acquire that information to lay before the committee?

Mr. PUJO. We have; but investigations by bank examiners are published in the newspapers, and we do not need that, but we feel that there are many other things that we do need.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the comptroller has the power to obtain a great deal of information which he has no power to make public.

Mr. PUJO. That is a mooted question.

Mr. MANN. Is it the intention of the gentleman's committee to have these investigations carried on in the shape of public hearings?

Mr. PUJO. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And give this information out to the world?

Mr. PUJO. I can only speak for myself. I would think it very improper to give private information, information relating to private affairs, to the public.

Mr. MANN. How can the gentleman's committee avoid giving it to the public? It is secured through public hearings.

Mr. PUJO. There is no desire to avoid giving it to the public.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman says that he considers that it may be improper to give certain private information to the public, and yet how can he avoid giving it to the public? That is the very essence of the proposition.

Mr. LLOYD. If the gentleman will pardon me, is it not a fact at the present time that you are seeking valuable information—not in public hearings—and that the information you will gather under this law, if enacted into law, will be information which will not appear in public hearings and will not be published in the proceedings of the committee?

Mr. PUJO. The committee can make that an executive document.

Mr. LLOYD. Is not the information already obtained information which is not in the form of hearings?

Mr. PUJO. Certainly; we have only had one witness examined.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but you have not got the inquisitorial powers in reference to banks; and when you secure information it belongs to the House; it does not belong to the committee. I have no objection to the gentleman's committee having full power, but have gentlemen on the committee worked out a scheme by which they can obtain information with reference to national banks, which can be made public in such a way as not to identify a particular bank? Is it not the purpose of the gentleman's committee to go into the financial negotiations with particular banks and make that public?

Mr. PUJO. The committee has expressed no purpose as a committee. As a legislative proposition, as an agency of the House, in anything the committee does, the House can control.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a formal suggestion to him about the bill?

Mr. PUJO. Yes; if the gentleman pleases.

Mr. MANN. The bill refers to Congress, "or either branch thereof." I suggest that he make it read "either House."

Mr. PUJO. The Constitution, I know, says either House, but it is my opinion that it is wrong.

Mr. MANN. The Constitution refers in a dozen places to the "two Houses of Congress." There is a question as to what a branch of Congress is.

Mr. PUJO. I would not think so, but I have no objection. I saw it after it was framed, and I objected to the word "House" being used, because I thought it was a misnomer, and I so consider it. The "Senate" is not a House.

Mr. MANN. The House of Representatives is one House of Congress and the Senate is the other House of Congress. The distinguished gentleman who wrote the Constitution continually refers to "both Houses of Congress," "each House of Congress," and to "the other House of Congress," referring to the Senate.

Mr. PUJO. I think he knew more about it than I do, and as the gentleman from Illinois is his particular representative here to-day, I will ask unanimous consent to make the change. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Besides, I do not want to see the gentleman have the comeback again.

Mr. PUJO. I thank the gentleman. Does the gentleman from Nebraska wish me to yield to him?

Mr. NORRIS. I shall not now go back to what I had in mind. The gentleman has entered upon another subject.

Mr. PUJO. If there is no one else who desires to speak upon the bill, I shall ask unanimous consent to move the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the bill as it now stands, in line 10, by striking out the word "branch" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "house."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 10, strike out the word "branch" and insert the word "house."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not support either one of the previous propositions looking to this investigation, and on the passage of this bill I expect to be counted in a hopeless minority; but I believe in a man having the courage of his convictions on all public questions, and while practically a new Member, I have never dodged a responsibility in this House. I have never failed to go on record on every vote or roll call. There is no demand for this investigation as far as the district I represent is concerned; and while the statement has been made here this morning that the House of Representatives ordered this investigation by practically a unanimous vote, where is the Member who can state that he had an appeal from his constituents to enter upon this investigation? It is no answer to me to say that an insurgent Member of Congress favored or introduced this bill. Is there a demand for it? And if so, where does the demand emanate? Where does it come from?

Mr. EDWARDS. Is the gentleman in favor of the initiative?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not in national affairs. I am a stand-pat Republican and believe in the old-time Republican principles. [Applause.]

The gentleman having this investigation in charge confesses to this House that he is not a banker. Is there a banker on this committee that is going to engage in the most far-reaching and important of the many investigations ordered by this House? Is there a trained and experienced banker on this committee which is intrusted with this important work?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will state to the gentleman that there are 2 of the 11.

Mr. AUSTIN. Two out of twenty-one! There are 21 members on the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. PUJO. The gentleman from New York, Mr. VREELAND, is the president of one of the big banks, but I will state that he is not on the subcommittee.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. DAUGHERTY, and the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. BROWN.

Mr. PUJO. And the gentleman from Delaware, Mr. HEALD, is an old banker.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then we have 4 bankers out of 21 members on the committee.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in the first place I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that your Secretary of the Treasury has demanded an investigation of the Money Trust.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes; and our Secretary of the Treasury is reported in a public speech in New York as favoring ultimate free trade in this country, and yet that does not commit me or the balance of us to that political heresy. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I did not mean to make the gentleman attack one of the officials of his administration.

Mr. AUSTIN. And I do not want the Secretary of the Treasury held up to me as an example of what I shall do here as a sworn representative of the people.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Then I shall hold somebody else up to the gentleman as an example.

Mr. AUSTIN. And, besides, the Secretary is too fresh from the Democratic Party to be quoted to me as to what I should do on this proposition. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman will yield further, I shall give him some more information, because it is evident that he needs information.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want information touching the qualification of this committee as to bankers upon it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will tell the gentleman about that later, but first want to say that if he will come to my committee room I will show him numbers of letters from bankers throughout this country who want to get from under the domination of the Money Trust in New York City; and in the next place I will show the gentleman numerous telegrams and letters and petitions from people all over the United States who want to get from under the domination of the Money Trust.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman tell me how many letters and telegrams he has received from his own constituents upon this subject?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, I do not know. Many hundreds of them. Again, I assume that the representatives of the people are qualified to investigate the affairs of the national banks of the country, the mere creatures of the Government under the law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, we are going into an investigation affecting the credit, the public confidence in the financial system of this country, and involving the weal and happiness of every class and condition of our people. We are touching a subject that may involve us at any time in a disastrous business panic, and we are asked to go headlong into it without limit or restriction.

We are being urged to do it, not from our districts, not from the bankers or business men of any district in the United States, and I challenge any Member of this Congress to state here that this demand comes from any business element of this country. You are not only touching the vital business interests of this country in this investigation, but you are fooling——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken on this subject——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I thought, under the rule, I had an opportunity, being in oppositon to this bill, to speak just as long as the gentleman having the bill in charge.

The SPEAKER. No; the rule is when the gentleman from Louisiana exhausted his hour, if he does not move the previous question, then the gentleman from Tennessee, or any other gentleman who can catch the Speaker's eye, will be recognized for an hour.

Mr. PUJO. I have never yielded the floor, but I yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee five minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit I was interrupted by the gentleman from Texas and other gentlemen——

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left of the hour?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 15 minutes left.

Mr. PUJO. I will yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Tennessee, and then move the previous question——

Mr. NORRIS. I would like for the gentleman to yield me five minutes if he can do so.

Mr. PUJO. I will yield five minutes, then, to the gentleman from Nebraska, but I do not surrender the floor. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish in my statement about the personality of this committee to reflect upon the patriotism or the ability or the good faith of any member of that committee, but I do claim that in dealing with an interest affecting every national bank in this country, an interest affecting every stockholder in every national bank in this country, an interest affecting countless thousands of American citizens who are depositors in every national bank in this country, we ought to stop, we ought to hesitate, pause, and consider where we are going in this investigation.

Why, we have had investigations by the Monetary Commission for years, costing thousands of dollars, yet we are asked for another investigation, with the expenditure of additional thousands of dollars, when we have already piled up here in numerous volumes the findings and the hearings of the Monetary Commission. Every particle of information this committee ought to have in this investigation can be found in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and if not found there can be obtained there through the comptroller. I have no interest in any bank, never owned a share of stock in one, but I want here and now to enter a protest against this investigation that does not mean anything good or valuable to the business interests of this country. I hope this House will not intrust any committee with the power carried in this bill, especially when that committee has employed two lawyers who have, I understand, stated their position in the public press and who, in my opinion, are not seeking and will not seek as the representatives of that committee to guard and protect the vast interests involved in the daily hearings that will come before this committee and the public hearings that are open to the public press of the country.

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say for myself and on behalf of the committee that the policy of this investigation has been directed by Congress. I have never seen any statement of counsel associated along the line suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, and I think if such publications have appeared that they are absolutely erroneous.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, I am glad to hear the gentleman say for the attorneys employed by the committee that the public reports do not correctly state their position or their opinions in reference to this investigation.

Mr. PUJO. I do not know what the public reports are, and I could state better if they were before me. Now I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield back whatever time I may have remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee yields back one minute.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], in my judgment, has given some good reasons why this bill ought to be passed and this investigation ought to take place, but he has departed from his usual course. He has forgotten that this investigation will cost some money, and it is the first time I recall the gentleman from Tennessee opposing any resolution that will take money out of the Public Treasury. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I want to use this money in another direction.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, the gentleman has evidently lost sight of the fact that this investigation is going to cost some money. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that it is not the first time the suggestion has been made. It has been made here and in the public press that an investigation of this kind will have a tendency to bring on a panic; that the control of the business of the country and the money of the country are now in the hands of men who, if you undertake to investigate them, will bring on a panic. If that be true, then surely we ought to have the investigation. [Applause.]

If that be true——

Mr. CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I prefer not to yield, inasmuch as I have only five minutes. If that be true, then we certainly ought to know who it is that controls the finances of the country and how they control them. There has been a demand for this investigation. I have seen letters by the hundreds, not only from ordinary individuals and business men, but from bankers themselves, who are under the control of financial influences that they know are not right, and who want to get from under that control.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] can supply the gentleman from Tennessee with demands for this investigation from almost every post office in the United States that will take him months to read.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. In connection with what has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] and what is being said by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], what might afford an additional reason for this investigation is that the Republican Party is not controlled by a trust. Is there anything in that?

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman brings in a question that I would like to discuss for an hour. He has brought into this a partisan proposition that his own colleague, Mr. PUJO, wisely and patriotically said he wanted to keep out. There are trusts controlled by men who are Republicans, and there are trusts controlled by Democrats. Does the gentleman think for a moment that the Republican Party has a monopoly of all the trust men?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not want to cause any trouble in the Republican Party.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not afraid of trouble in the Republican Party, either. I have seen a good deal of it and made some of it [laughter and applause], and it has resulted in good, in my judgment, both to the Republican Party and to the country. I want to say to the gentleman that when it comes to the proposition of a man being in favor of a monopoly or being a criminal, or anything of that kind, you can not consider partisan politics, and the man who undertakes to make this investigation along partisan lines is not doing his patriotic duty; I do not care whether he is a Democrat or a Republican. If there is something wrong, let us find it out and let us go to the bottom of it, whether it hurts a Democrat or whether it hurts a Republican. [Applause.] If there is nothing wrong, it will hurt nobody; and if there is, this committee ought to make such an investigation to develop what the facts are. [Applause.]

Mr. PUJO. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question on the bill (H. R. 24153) to amend and reenact section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. JACKSON. To inquire how much the gentleman has left of the hour.

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] yield me a minute?

Mr. PUJO. I was going to make a further request—that anyone who desires to print on this question have that privilege.

Mr. JACKSON. I do not desire to print. I want to make an observation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PUJO] moves the previous question on the bill as amended.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PUJO, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, and, pending that, I wish to make a further request. Under the agreement we made when we reached sections 5 and 11, in considering the bill under the five-minute rule, they will pass to the end of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is all understood.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to make one request, in accordance with the agreement, that when we reach those sections the gentlemen who want to offer amendments may file those amendments.

Mr. MANN. That will be done in committee.

The SPEAKER. That will be done in the committee.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all amendments to be offered to sections 5 and 11 be printed, so that the gentlemen may inform themselves concerning them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] asks unanimous consent that amendments to sections 5 and 11 be printed.

Mr. BROUSSARD. My request is to have those amendments printed separately, so that a Member might understand the different amendments.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly the question the Chair was going to put.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I take it that the two requests made indicate that it is not the purpose to make a final disposition to-day of sections 5 and 11; and if it is the purpose to let them go over, I would suggest that the gentlemen be authorized to propose amendments to be printed in bill form as proposed amendments—if that is the purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] that I hope this bill will be completed to-day. [Applause.] I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana, but if his request contemplates that the bill shall not be considered to-day I shall certainly oppose it—that is, if the bill can be concluded in the regular order. As I understand the proposition, there are only two paragraphs to this bill about which there is any real contention, and it seems to me that it is possible for the House, by sitting a little late to-night, to dispose of the bill in Committee of the Whole and give the right of way to an appropriation bill on Tuesday, and I hope very much that that will be carried out.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I can not tell—and no living man can tell—just exactly what this day or any other day may bring forth. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and I agreed, inasmuch as we had secured unanimous consent about passing over the two contested sections—5 and 11—to the end of the bill, that when those two sections were reached in their order gentlemen could offer amendments to these two sections and have them pending to inform the House what they were; and I asked unanimous consent for that purpose. I did not intend and do not intend to intimate a foreclosure of the question to-day as to when we can finish the consideration of the bill. So far as I am concerned, I have done my duty and am ready to vote now, but do not wish to take advantage of anybody. I want everybody to have a full chance and opportunity and to vote just as I do—just as he pleases—when we get through. The object of my request for unanimous consent is equally applicable, no matter how far we may travel to-day. I agree with the wish expressed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I would like to get through as soon as we can.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, if the amendments are disposed of to-day, there is no object in asking unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD, because they will be printed in the RECORD when offered. I can see no object in making the request at this time. Now, I suggest to the gentleman, if the amendments are undisposed of when the House adjourns to-night, that after the committee rises this afternoon is time enough to make the request that any proposed amendments may be printed in the RECORD or in bill form.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I did not mention the printing in the RECORD, because I thought of this possible contingency: Inasmuch as all the speakers have indicated that there is little matter of contest on the other sections, we may reach No. 5 in a few minutes, and even if it is reached again at the heel of the bill and considered to-day before we adjourn, we would like to have information when it is reached so that we would know, when we are considering them, what the amendments are.

The SPEAKER. The day's RECORD will not be printed until night.

Mr. ADAMSON. I did not say printed to-night. I said that when the sections are reached Members may offer them, and we will have them pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent that, when sections 5 and 11 are reached, anybody having an amendment to them can have the privilege of offering it then and there, and have it pending.

Mr. MANN. But that would not require the offering of the amendment at that time.

Mr. ADAMSON. No; not at all. It would not shut out anybody.

The SPEAKER. Of course, those two things have no connection with each other. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] please make his request over again?

Mr. BROUSSARD. My request, Mr. Speaker, is for unanimous consent to have these amendments printed in the RECORD, and separately, so that Members may have the use of them, provided, of course, we do not conclude the consideration of the bill to-day.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] for unanimous consent is this: That in the event this bill is not disposed of to-day, including sections 5 and 11, all pending amendments be printed in the RECORD——

Mr. ADAMSON. They will be printed, anyhow——

The SPEAKER. And separately as a document. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in the form in which the request comes, if the bill is not disposed of, I see no objection to printing the amendments; but I hope the bill will be disposed of to-night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Panama Canal bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, with Mr. LLOYD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 21969, and the Clerk will read the title to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and I have arranged to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and I now yield to him 45 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire at present to consume so much time, and I ask the Chairman to notify me at the end of 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it is a source of gratification to me personally that I was in at the beginning, and am in practically at the end, of the legislation for the construction and the operation of the Panama Canal. I entered the House in the Fifty-fifth Congress, went on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and found on that committee that one of the questions which was of greatest importance was providing some method for the construction of an Isthmian Canal.

The Maritime Canal Co., which had proposed to construct the canal at Nicaragua, was then asking for assistance from the Government. There had been prior to that time no proposition that the Government should construct the canal, and the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 specifically prohibited the Government from constructing the canal or from operating it.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] stated the other day that, in his opinion, the canal would not have been constructed in the course of a century, possibly, if it had not been for the celebrated trip of the battleship Oregon. I do not agree with him in regard to that, but I have no doubt that that trip made the country realize more closely than ever before the advantage it might be to our country from a military standpoint to have the canal constructed.

With the Clayton-Bulwer treaty still pending, prohibiting the construction of the canal by the Government, in December, 1898, Col. Hepburn, of Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, introduced a bill providing that the Government of the United States should construct and defend a canal, he taking the position that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty had been abrogated by the action of Great Britain shortly after the treaty went into force.

The committee had a good many hearings and discussions on the subject, and finally decided that a canal should be constructed and protected by the Government. At the next Congress Col. Hepburn again introduced his bill. It was reported favorably and was passed by the House, and the State Department of the United States had brought home to it directly the proposition that Congress was likely to pass a bill in flat violation of the terms of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty unless that treaty were abrogated or modified by a new treaty.

Mr. Hay, the then Secretary of State, proceeded to negotiate the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which expressly provided that no fortification should be constructed on the canal. That treaty was rejected or withdrawn, and the Hay-Pauncefote treaty now in force was agreed upon and confirmed and published to the world.

That treaty did not specifically provide that no fortification should be erected. When it was before the House for determination as to whether we would fortify the canal I happened to be the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I was required to pass on the point of order whether we were authorized to make an appropriation for the fortification of the canal.

Mr. Chairman, as I hope I shall not speak very long and as I do not propose to go very extensively into the papers which could be produced, and many of which have been produced, I desire to say, both in connection with the toll question and in connection with the fortification question, that I think I have read and studied every document which has ever been put in print on the subject and some which have not. I reached the conclusion that the Government of the United States under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty had the right to fortify the canal, and I reached the conclusion that under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty the Government of the United States had the right to prefer in toll charges the American merchant marine, whether it be in coastwise or foreign trade. [Applause.]

The treaty provides:

The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation or its citizens or subjects in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

"The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules on terms of entire equality."

Gentlemen will notice that there is no exception from the language used that the vessels of all nations, both of commerce and of war, shall be treated on entire equality. And the question involved is whether the term "all nations" means all other nations except the United States and the country in which the canal is constructed or whether it includes the United States and the now Republic of Panama or the then Republic of Colombia.

It must be perfectly patent to anyone that the language used in the treaty was not intended to cover all war vessels of all nations alike. It must be perfectly patent to anyone that the term in the treaty was not intended to cover vessels owned by the Government of the United States or under its lease for the carrying of coal through the canal for future use. It must be perfectly patent to anyone that the terms of the treaty did not intend to cover all vessels owned by the Government for the operation of the canal itself.

Immediately following this treaty we negotiated a treaty with the Republic of Colombia. That treaty never went into effect, but we negotiated it, and afterwards we negotiated a treaty with the Republic of Panama, providing as to the treaty with Panama—

The Government of the Republic of Panama shall have the right to transport over the canal its vessels and its troops and munitions of war in such vessels at all times without paying charges of any kind.

That was our construction of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty when we immediately thereafter made the treaty with the Republic of Colombia and afterwards with the Republic of Panama; in other words, that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which said that vessels of all nations should be treated alike, did not refer to vessels owned by the Republic of Panama or which were engaged in transporting its troops or munitions of war.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MANN. I should prefer to go ahead, if I may.

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

Mr. MANN. That was one exception to the general provision of the treaty which it was perfectly patent to everybody ought to be made; and no nation, much less Great Britain, has ever filed any suggestion that under the original Hay-Pauncefote treaty we did not have the right to give a preference, or no charges at all, to the vessels of the Republic of Panama.

Then, as to war vessels, the treaty provides that the vessels of all nations in commerce or war shall be treated alike. There is no distinction between the two. And yet no one has the hardihood to-day to claim that the war vessels of the United States passing through the Panama Canal must pay the tolls the same as the war vessels of other nations. My distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] attempted to relieve that situation by saying that we were authorized to protect the canal by policing it. It is perfectly patent that there is an exception as to war vessels of the United States going through the canal, differentiating the war vessels of the United States from the war vessels of other countries. And yet the language of the treaty is:

The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules on terms of entire equality.

There is no distinction between war vessels and merchant marine; and if we have the right to except the war vessels of the United States from the terms of that provision of the treaty, by a parity of reasoning we would have the right to except the merchant marine of the United States or of its citizens.

The question arose early in this matter as to whether, even if we were bound by the terms of the treaty to collect the same rate of tolls upon our own merchant marine that we required of the merchant marine of other nations, we might not rebate that and pay it back.

Some of the European Governments pay the tolls of their merchant marine passing through the Suez Canal, and no nation has ever suggested that under the terms of the international agreement a nation could not pay the tolls directly to a vessel of its own merchant marine passing through the canal, thereby practically relieving that vessel from the payment of tolls. It was suggested that the United States might adopt that course, and I think it was generally concluded that we had the power, if we desired, to grant a subsidy directly in money to repay to a merchant vessel the amount of tolls it had paid to go through the canal.

But we own the canal. The money that comes in tolls comes to our Treasury. The money which would be paid out in that way would come out of our Treasury. What object is there in requiring one of our war vessels to pay tolls going through the canal into the treasury down there, to be turned into the Treasury of the United States with one hand and taking the money out with the other hand and placing it on the warship with which it may pay the tolls? And yet with a strict construction of the treaty that would be necessary. It is so absurd on its face that no one pretends that we need to go through the rigmarole of taking money out of the Treasury, placing it in the hands of the paymaster on board a naval vessel, letting him turn it into the hands of the collecting officer on the canal, and letting the collecting officer turn it into the Treasury of the United States, to keep going round and round in the same manner, accomplishing nothing. The same would be true of the merchant marine if we have the power to pay back to the merchant vessel which has paid the toll. It is different from the situation that would be presented if a corporation owned the canal. We are the owners of the canal. That which we have the right to do in one manner indirectly we have the right to do in another manner directly. [Applause.]

I took the position, after as careful an investigation as it was possible to make, that we had the right to give the preference to the American marine. [Applause.] I was present at a conference at the White House, where was President Taft; the Secretary of War, Mr. Dickinson; the Secretary of State, Mr. Knox; and some other Members of the House and Senate. At the end of that conference I undertook the preparation of a proposition to be enacted into law.

The Secretary of War, Mr. Dickinson, undertook the preparation of a similar proposition. At that time the House had passed a bill providing for the government of the Canal Zone and other purposes. That bill was pending in the Senate, last winter a year ago, and the proposition was to amend the House bill pending in the Senate so that the operation of the canal might be included in that bill. Mr. Dickinson prepared his draft of the bill and I prepared my draft.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that he has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I shall take 10 minutes more. Mr. Dickinson submitted his draft to me and I submitted my draft to him and the President, and I am frank to say, with some degree of modesty, I hope, that I approved the judgment of the Secretary of War—Mr. Dickinson—and of the President—Mr. Taft—when they both said they thought that my draft of the bill was the one to be agreed upon. [Applause and laughter.]

I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of War—Mr. Dickinson—which I shall insert in the RECORD, which referred to a letter that he had transmitted to me with his original draft of a bill:

> Referring to my letter to you of January 3, 1911, suggesting certain amendments to the bill to provide for the government of the Canal Zone and for the construction of the Panama Canal, I have to advise that I had a further conference to-day with the President and that it will be satisfactory to him if the bill is amended as follows.

And what follows is the draft of the bill which I had drawn. On January 14 I received this letter from the Secretary of State concerning the same draft of bill:

> In accordance with your suggestion, I have conferred with the Ssecretary of War with reference to the amendments to the canal bill to which you referred, and agree with the judgment already expressed to you by the President and the Secretary of War, that they improve the bill.

Upon that, on the same day, I introduced a bill in reference to the tolls on the canal and for the furnishing of supplies. My proposition was, as expressed in the bill, that the Government of the United States, by legislation through Congress, assume that it had the right to give preferential rates or no charges at all to the American merchant marine, or any vessels owned by the Government, its citizens, or subjects. [Applause.] My bill proposed to limit the rate of tolls to $1.50 at the highest and 50 cents at the lowest, other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens and vessels of the Republic of Panama, with the further right to make lower rates for vessels of the United States engaged in the coastwise trade, subject to the provision that no rate should be made lower than the estimated cost of operation of the canal. [Applause.] In other words, that any coastwise vessel should pay the cost of locking it through the canal. The bill also reserved the power to fix rates on the same basis for our foreign merchant marine. My bill further provided that in fixing the coastwise rates at the estimated cost of locking through the canal, that that lower rate should not apply to any vessel owned or controlled directly or indirectly by any railroad or any combination to control rates.

Mr. Chairman, if I am called upon to vote in the House as between the proposition in the bill which in my judgment practically declares that we construe the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to forbid us making preferential rates, I shall vote against the proposition in favor of the proposition of no tolls for coastwise trade. [Applause.] However, this matter, being a matter involving treaty rights made between the United States and Great Britain, in the end may have to go to some tribunal like The Hague tribunal for final determination. We would not, and neither would Great Britain, desire to have a war—the suggestion is impossible—over a matter of this kind. We would not desire on our side to violate any faith involved in a treaty with Great Britain or any other power [applause], but the bill which I introduced assumes that we had that power. We construed it that we had the power. We did not assume that we did not have the power. We left it with the President to determine the rates, thereby leaving it, if necessary, for diplomatic negotiations before the rates were determined. If we declare that we will give preferential rates to our coastwise trade and Great Britain objects to that construction of the treaty with any force it may become necessary to let some international tribunal determine that construction. I do not believe, myself, that Great Britain would make any objection. We have expended and will have expended before the canal is completed $400,000,000 out of the National Treasury. It is our money. For 400 years the people of the world had desired the construction of the Isthmian Canal. Private enterprise was wrecked in attempting to provide the canal. We undertook it. Who will say that it was not practically making a Christmas present to the world? I always looked at the construction of the canal, not as a matter of military necessity, not as a matter of commercial necessity, but as a tribute which this young, powerful, and rich Nation had made to the civilization of other nations which have contributed so much to our civilization and our happiness. [Applause.] And yet when we have constructed the canal at our expense I think no nation in the world would say for a moment that we did not have the right to grant a preference to our own vessels and the vessels of our own citizens. What other nation in the world would have constructed the canal and expected that its own citizens could get no preference? For what reason should we charge the same rate of toll for vessels passing from New Orleans to Los Angeles that we charge for vessels passing from Liverpool to Australia? It is a part now practically of our internal waterways. We have a right, and I do not believe that Great Britain would make any protest so long as we treat all foreign nations and their vessels upon equal terms and with equal rights. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Illinois used?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say to gentlemen on the other side it is understood we will reserve 40 minutes for concluding general debate, and I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is now to be recognized.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It is understood that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] should have some time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by making some insertions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by making some insertions. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Under leave to extend my remarks, I herewith insert letters from Secretary of War Dickinson and Secretary of State Knox:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 6, 1911.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to my letter to you of January 3, 1911, suggesting certain amendments to the bill to provide for the government of the Canal Zone and the construction of the Panama Canal (H. R. 12316), I have to advise that I had a further conference to-day with the President and that it will be satisfactory to him if the bill is amended as follows:

First. In the caption, after the word "construction," add the words "and operation."

Second. On page 3, line 19, strike out the word "and" before the word "completed" and insert after the word "completed" the words "and operated."

Third. On page 3, lines 22 and 23, strike out the words "who shall be learned and skilled in the science of engineering."

Fourth. Insert after section 4, as new sections, the following:

"SEC. 5. The President is hereby authorized to prescribe and, from time to time, change charges for the use of the canal. Charges may be based upon registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, cargo tonnage, or otherwise, and when based upon registered tonnage shall not exceed $1.50 per net ton, American measurement, nor be less (other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens and vessels of the Republic of Panama) than 50 cents per net ton; nor shall any rate of charge be prescribed which is less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual operation of the canal, subject, however, to the provisions of article 19 of the convention between the United States and the Republic of Panama entered into November 18, 1903, and the right of the United States to pass its own vessels, troops, materials, merchandise, and supplies without the payment of any charge: Provided, however, That in fixing the charges for the use of the canal the President may prescribe that any vessel engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States which is owned in whole or in part by any railroad company, or which is owned by any company, the stock of which is owned in whole or in part by any railroad company, or which is controlled directly or indirectly by any railroad company, or the rates of which for freight or passenger traffic are under the direct or indirect control of any railroad company or the directors or stockholders of any railroad company who are acting in the interest thereof, or who are seeking to avoid or reduce the effect of competition of ocean traffic between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States upon railway rates, or which is owned or controlled by any company or person who has entered into any agreement with any railroad company, either directly or indirectly, as to the rates to be charged, shall pay the highest charges prescribed for any vessel, and that the determination of the question of fact in each case shall be made in such manner and by such person or persons as the President may by general or specific order require: And provided further, That the foregoing proviso shall not apply to the Panama Railroad Co. or vessels owned by it. No preference shall be given to the vessels of any nation, its citizens or subjects (other than the United States and the Republic of Panama) observing the rules set forth in article 3 of the treaty entered into by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain on November 18, 1901, and confirmed by article 18 of the said convention of November 18, 1903, over the vessels of any other nation observing such rules, its citizens or subjects.

"SEC. 6. The President is further authorized to establish, maintain, and operate dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary appurtenances for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies to passing vessels, in accordance with appropriations made from time to time by Congress, as a part of the operation of the said canal, and moneys received in the ordinary course of business from the conduct of such business may be expended and reinvested for such purposes without being covered into the Treasury of the United States, and such moneys are hereby appropriated for such purposes, and monthly reports of such receipts and expenditures shall be made to the President by the person or persons in charge, and annual reports shall be made to the Congress."

Fifth. Renumber sections 5 to 9, inclusive, making them numbers 7 to 11, inclusive, respectively.

This supersedes my letter to you of January 3, 1911.

I have written a similar letter to Senator Flint.

Very respectfully,

J. M. DICKINSON,
Secretary of War.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 14, 1911.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MANN: In accordance with your suggestion, I have conferred with the Secretary of War with respect to the amendments to the canal bill to which you referred, and agree with the judgment already expressed to you by the President and the Secretary of War that they improve the bill.

Very sincerely yours, P. C. KNOX.

I also insert H. R. 31436, introduced by me January 14, 1911, which bill was introduced for the purpose of putting in print the propositions prepared by me and referred to in the letters from Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Knox as amendments to the Mann bill for the government of the Canal Zone and the construction of the Panama Canal (H. R. 12316), which had passed the House and was then pending in the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 31436) to provide for the operation of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President, through one of the executive departments of the Government to be designated by him, or otherwise, in his discretion, shall provide for the operation of the Panama Canal, now being constructed by the United States to connect the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to prescribe and from time to time change charges for the use of the canal. Charges may be based upon registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, cargo tonnage, or otherwise, and when based upon registered tonnage shall not exceed $1.50 per net ton, American measurement, nor be less (other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens and vessels of the Republic of Panama) than 50 cents per net ton; nor shall any rate of charge be prescribed which is less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual operation of the canal, subject, however, to the provisions of article 19 of the convention between the United States and the Republic of Panama entered into November 18, 1903, and the right of the United States to pass its own vessels, troops, materials, merchandise, and supplies without the payment of any charge: Provided, however, That in fixing the charges for the use of the canal the President may prescribe that any vessel engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States which is owned in whole or in part by any railroad company, or which is owned by any company the stock of which is owned in whole or in part by any railroad company, or which is controlled directly or indirectly by any railroad company, or the rates of which for freight or passenger traffic are under the direct or indirect control of any railroad company, or the directors or stockholders of any railroad company who are acting in the interest thereof, or who are seeking to avoid or reduce the effect of competition of ocean traffic between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States upon railway rates, or which is owned or controlled by any company or person who has entered into any agreement with any railroad company, either directly or indirectly, as to the rates to be charged, shall pay the highest charges prescribed for any vessel, and that the determination of the question of fact in each case shall be made in such manner and by such person or persons as the President may by general or specific order require: And provided further, That the foregoing proviso shall not apply to the Panama Railroad Co. or vessels owned by it. No preference shall be given to the vessels of any nation, its citizens or subjects (other than the United States and the Republic of Panama), observing the rules set forth in article 3 of the treaty entered into by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain on November 18, 1901, and confirmed by article 18 of the said convention of November 18, 1903, over the vessels of any other nation observing such rules, its citizens or subjects.

SEC. 3. That the President is further authorized to establish, maintain, and operate dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary appurtenances for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies to passing vessels, in accordance with appropriations made from time to time by Congress, as a part of the operation of the said canal; and moneys received in the ordinary course of business from the conduct of such business may be expended and reinvested for such purposes without being covered into the Treasury of the United States; and such moneys are hereby appropriated for such purposes, and monthly reports of such receipts and expenditures shall be made to the President by the person or persons in charge, and annual reports shall be made to the Congress.

I also insert, as a matter of historic interest, copy of the bill introduced by Hon. William P. Hepburn, then chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, on December 12, 1898, providing for the construction by the Government of the United States of an isthmian canal:

A bill (H. R. 11095) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua full ownership, right, title, and jurisdiction to such portion of territory now belonging to said States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and defend a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Breto, on the Pacific Ocean, and such sum as may be necessary to make such purchase is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That when the President has secured full and complete title to and jurisdiction and sovereignty over the territory in section 1 referred to he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea near Greytown by way of Lake Nicaragua to a point near Breto, on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Greytown to Breto, and the Secretary of War shall construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal and such fortifications for defense as will be required for the convenience and safety of all vessels desiring the use of said canal.

SEC. 3. That in making surveys for said canal and harbors the Secretary of War shall detail such number of engineer officers of the Army as may be necessary and may require of them the performance of such professional duties as he may desire.

SEC. 4. That in the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be available, shall be used.

SEC. 5. That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors upon such terms as may be agreed upon for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $140,000,000, or so much as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the completion of the work herein authorized, said money to be drawn from the Treasury from time to time as the same shall be needed upon the warrants of the President, based on estimates made and verified by the chief engineer in charge of the work and approved by the Secretary of War.

I also insert extracts from minutes of meetings of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of the Fifty-fifth Congress relating to the construction of an isthmian canal:

MINUTES OF MEETINGS OF COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE, FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1898.

Committee met in regular session, Mr. Hepburn in the chair. Informal discussion of the Nicaragua Canal was had, but no official action was taken, as a quorum of the committee was not present. Adjourned.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1898.

The committee met in regular session, Mr. Hepburn in the chair. Called to order at 11 a. m.

Members present: Messrs. FLETCHER, SHERMAN, Corliss, Bennett, Barham, Hawley, MANN, McAleer, Hinrichsen, ADAMSON, and Mr. Chairman—11. Absent, Wanger, Joy, Stewart, Lovering, Davey, and DAVIS—6.

Mr. Corliss moved that the committee proceed to the consideration of the subject of a Nicaragua Canal.

Mr. Hawley offered as an amendment, that the second Tuesday of January, 1899, being the 10th of January, be set apart for the consideration of a bill to be prepared by the Subcommittee on Canals, providing for the construction of a canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and that said bill shall have the right of way until disposed of.

Mr. Bennett moved as a substitute for the original motion and amendment, that the general subject of the Nicaragua Canal be taken and considered.

After extended discussion, the original motion and amendment, together with the substitute therefor, having been withdrawn, on motion of Mr. Corliss it was agreed that the committee take up for consideration the entire subject of the Nicaragua Canal, including all bills relating thereto, before the committee, and that it be made a special order for Tuesday, January 10, 1899, and it was so ordered.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 10, 1899.

Committee met in regular session, Mr. Hepburn in the chair.

Members present: Messrs. FLETCHER, SHERMAN, Joy, Corliss, Bennett, Barham, Hawley, MANN, Lovering, Davey, Hinrichsen, ADAMSON, and Mr. Chairman—13.

Tuesday, January 10, being named as the time for considering the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, the chairman announced that this being a special order, it would be the first business taken up.

The following resolution was offered by Mr. Hepburn:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this committee:

First. A canal and waterway from the Atlantic to the Pacific should at once be secured.

Second. That said waterway should be constructed by the United States.

Third. That it should be constructed upon territory over which the United States has ownership and sovereignty.

Fourth. That it should be constructed as works of rivers and harbors are, by a commission such as is charged with the improvement of the Mississippi River.

The above resolutions were taken up and considered by sections. Part 1 was unanimously agreed to. Part 2, after discussion, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, proposition 2 was amended by adding thereto the words: "Or under its supervision and control."

The yeas and nays being demanded on the adoption of the amendment: The yeas were, Messrs. SHERMAN, Joy, Bennett, Lovering, Barham, Hawley, and Davey—7. The nays were, Messrs. FLETCHER, Corliss, Hinrichsen, ADAMSON, DAVIS, and Mr. Chairman—6, and so the amendment was adopted.

Pending the discussion of part three, Mr. Corliss moved that the committee adjourn until 10.30 a. m., Wednesday, the 11th. Motion lost.

Mr. Bennett moved that when the committee adjourn it be until 10.30 a. m., Friday, January 13, and that the further consideration of the construction of the Nicaragua Canal be continued as a special order. Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FLETCHER, the committee adjourned.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 13, 1899.

Committee met in regular session, Mr. Hepburn in the chair.

Members present: Messrs. FLETCHER, SHERMAN, Joy, Corliss, Bennett, Stewart, Barham, Hawley, MANN, Lovering, McAleer, Davey, Hinrichsen, ADAMSON, Davis, and Mr. Chairman—16.

* * * * * * *

A letter from Britton & Gray, of counsel for the "New Panama Canal Co.," asking that a hearing be granted the representatives of said company, was laid before the committee by the chairman.

On motion of Mr. Corliss, Tuesday, January 17, was agreed upon for hearing of representatives of above-named company.

On motion of Mr. Bennett, Wednesday, January 18, was fixed for hearing of the Grace Syndicate for building the Nicaragua Canal and Thursday for a hearing by the Maritime Canal Co.; thereafter the hearings on the Nicaragua Canal project were to close, and the committee proceed to formulate a bill for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 17, 1899.

Committee met in regular session, Mr. Hepburn in the chair.

Members present: Messrs. FLETCHER, SHERMAN, Corliss, Bennett, Stewart, Barham, Hawley, MANN, McAleer, Davey, Hinrichsen, ADAMSON, Davis, and Mr. Chairman—14.

The chairman announced that the committee were ready to hear the representatives of the New Panama Canal Co. who desired to be heard.

William Nelson Cromwell, general counsel of the New Panama Canal Co., being introduced, addressed the committee. At the conclusion of his address, Col. Henry L. Abbott, United States Army, retired, being sworn, gave the committee information concerning the engineering department and construction of the canal.

The hour of 12 o'clock, the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock, when Col. Abbott resumed his statement. He was followed by Mr. Curtis, counsel for the company. Pending the discussion, the committee adjourned until Wednesday, January 18, at 10.30 a. m.

Wednesday, January 18, committee met pursuant to adjournment. Mr. Bennett stated this meeting was especially called for a hearing on the part of Messrs. Edward and Edward F. Cragin, representing the construction of the Interoceanic Canal.

Mr. David McClure, counsel for the so-called Grace Syndicate, was introduced and made a statement in behalf of the concessionaires. Pending the hearing the committee adjourned until Thursday, January 19, at 10.30 a. m.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 19.

This being the day set apart for hearing of representatives of the Maritime Canal Co., of Nicaragua, Mr. Hiram Hitchcock, president of the company, was introduced and proceeded to make his statement concerning the affairs of his company. He was followed by Prof. Lewis M. Haupt, and at the conclusion of his statement the committee adjourned until Friday, January 20, at 10.30 a. m.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 20.

Mr. Cragin, representing the so-called Grace Syndicate, resumed his statement before the committee and introduced Mr. Frank H. Washburn, who proceeded to give a detailed account of the operations of the company, their relation to Nicaragua and the United States. He was followed by Mr. Cragin, who submitted printed extracts showing the position of Nicaragua. Also message of the President of Nicaragua, together with a translation (typewritten) of the contract between the Government of Nicaragua and the Atlas Steamship Co. (Ltd.), dated at the city of Managua, September 30, 1897, all to be attached to and become a part of the hearings had before the committee.

Hon. Warner Miller, being present, was invited to give the committee any information he deemed proper touching the operations of the Maritime Canal Co. He was followed by J. W. Miller, of New York, whose statement closed the hearings on the subject of the Panama and Nicaragua Canal, and, at 3.30 p. m., the committee adjourned.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 24, 1899.

Committee met in regular session, Mr. Hepburn in the chair.

Members present: Messrs. FLETCHER, SHERMAN, Corliss, Bennett, Stewart, Barham, HAWLEY, MANN, Lovering, McAleer, Davey, Hinrichsen, ADAMSON, Davis, and the Chairman—15.

Committee proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11095) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Pending the discussion, Senate act 4792 was read for the information of the committee.

Part 4 of the resolutions previously submitted by the chairman, Mr. Barham moved to strike out the words "by purchase," in line 4 in bill. No vote having been taken, Mr. Davis asked leave to have the bill H. R. 11599 considered; and after a brief statement from him in explanation thereof, the matter was submitted to the whole committee.

On motion of Mr. Bennett, the committee adjourned.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 27, 1899.

Committee met in regular session at 11 a. m., Mr. Hepburn in the chair.

Members present: Messrs. Joy, Bennett, Stewart, Barham, HAWLEY, MANN, Lovering, McAleer, Davey, Hinrichsen, ADAMSON, Davis, and the Chairman—14.

Hon. Joseph H. Walker, Representative in Congress from the State of Massachusetts, being present, was invited to address the committee on the general subject of the construction of the Nicaragua Canal. He opposed the construction of the canal by the Government and strongly urged that the work could be done quicker, cheaper, and better by individuals working through a corporation.

* * * * * * *

The motion pending to strike out the words "by purchase," in line 4, section 1, of the bill (H. R. 11095) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans—motion by Mr. Barham to amend the motion by also striking out the words "full ownership, jurisdiction, and sovereignty," in lines 5 and 6 in same section. No vote having been reached on Mr. Barham's motion, and pending a general discussion of the different measures before the committee on the subject of constructing Isthmian Canal, a motion to adjourn was agreed to.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 31, 1899.

Committee met in regular meeting, Mr. Hepburn in the chair.

Members present: Messrs. FLETCHER, SHERMAN, Corliss, Stewart, Barham, HAWLEY, MANN, Lovering, Hinrichsen, ADAMSON, Davis, and the Chairman—12.

The bill (H. R. 11095) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, being the regular business pending, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the same.

Mr. ADAMSON offered the following amendment to section 1 of the bill as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. Barham on January 27, in line 5, after the word "Nicaragua": "For and in behalf of the United States, such portion of territory now belonging to Nicaragua and Costa Rica, or either of them, as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, control, and defend." Agreed to and adopted. To which Mr. SHERMAN gave notice that he would offer the following amendment:

"Fifth. That authority is hereby given the President to negotiate, by commission or otherwise, with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, or with any individual company or association, for the purchase or use of lands, water rights, privileges, contracts, concessions, or other property deemed necessary or expedient to facilitate the immediate construction of an interoceanic canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific."

The hour of 12 o'clock m. having arrived, the committee adjourned, under the rules, the pending business being the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11095.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1899.

Committee met in regular session, Mr. Hepburn in the chair.

Members present: Messrs. Fletcher, Sherman, Wanger, Joy, Corliss, Bennett, Stewart, Barham, Hawley, MANN, Lovering, McAleer, Hinrichsen, ADAMSON, and Mr. Chairman.

* * * * * * *

The bill (H. R. 11095) providing for the construction of a canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans was called up, and Mr. Barham offered the following amendment: "Amend by striking out on page 2, in lines 1 and 2, the words 'full and complete title to and jurisdiction and sovereignty over.'" The amendment was agreed to.

According to notice given at the regular meeting of the committee, Mr. Sherman called up the amendment proposed by him:

"Fifth. That authority is hereby given the President to negotiate by commission or otherwise with any individual company or association for the purchase or use of any lands, waters, rights, privileges, contracts, concessions, or other property deemed necessary or expedient to facilitate the immediate construction of an interoceanic canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific."

On the question being put on this amendment, it was rejected by viva voce vote.

Mr. Hawley offered the following amendment:

"And the President is further authorized and empowered to acquire such interests in the property, rights, and franchises as are now held by the Maritime Canal Association, under a concession from the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, or any subsequent concessionaires, if in his judgment they are necessary to the construction of the canal under said concessions."

The question being put on this amendment, it was rejected by a viva voce vote. Mr. ADAMSON offered the following amendment:

"That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase from the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica for and in behalf of the United States such portion of territory now belonging to Nicaragua and Costa Rica, or other of them, as may be necessary or desirable on which to excavate, construct, control, and defend."

On the question being put on the adoption of the amendment, it was agreed to.

I also insert a copy of the bill H. R. 2538, introduced December 7, 1899, at the beginning of the Fifty-sixth Congress, by Col.

Hepburn, then chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House:

A bill (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and defend a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Breto, on the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That when the President has secured full control over the territory in section 1 referred to he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea, near Greytown, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Breto, on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Greytown to Breto; and the Secretary of War also shall construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and such fortifications for defense, as will be required for the convenience of all vessels desiring the use of said canal.

SEC. 3. That in making surveys for said canal and harbors, and in constructing the same, the President shall detail such number of engineer officers of the Army and Navy and shall employ such civil engineers as may be necessary, and may require of them the performance of such professional duties as he may desire.

SEC. 4. That in the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be made available, shall be used.

SEC. 5. That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have, the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $140,000,000, or so much as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the completion of the work herein authorized, said money to be drawn from the Treasury from time to time, as the same shall be needed, upon the warrants of the President, based on estimates made and verified by the chief engineer in charge of the work and approved by the Secretary of War.

I also insert copy of the bill H. R. 2538, providing for the construction by the United States of an isthmian canal by the Nicaraguan route as it passed the House on May 2, 1900:

An act (H. R. 2538) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary, on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Breto, on the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such control is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That when the President has secured full control over the territory in section 1 referred to he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea near Greytown, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Breto, on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest depth now in use and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Greytown to Breto; and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and such provisions for defense, as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors.

SEC. 3. That the President shall cause such surveys as may be necessary for said canal and harbors and in the constructing of the same and employ such persons as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 4. That in the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be made available, shall be used.

SEC. 5. That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, toward the project herein contemplated; and the Secretary of War is further hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for materials and work that may be deemed necessary for the proper excavation, construction, defense, and completion of said canal, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be hereafter made, not to exceed in the aggregate $140,000,000.

I also insert my ruling as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union of the House of Representatives on February 25, 1911, on the subject of the right of the United States, under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, to fortify the canal.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MANN). The Chair is prepared to rule. The Clayton-Bulwer treaty of April 19, 1850, contains this provision in article 1:

"The Governments of Great Britain and the United States hereby declare that neither the one nor the other will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship canal; agreeing that neither will ever erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same or in the vicinity thereof, or occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume or exercise dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America," etc.

For many years there were bills pending, some of which were reported, in reference to the construction of an isthmian canal, a number of them relating in recent years to the Nicaraguan Canal in aid of the Maritime Canal Co. On December 12, 1898, the Hon. William P. Hepburn, who was then the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the committee of this House which had jurisdiction of legislation relating to the Isthmian Canal, introduced a bill which for the first time proposed that the Government itself should construct the canal. That bill provided, among other things, that the President of the United States "be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua full ownership * * * of certain territory on which to excavate, construct, and defend a canal of such depth and capacity," etc.

That was at the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress. At the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, on December 7, 1899, Mr. Hepburn introduced another bill to the same effect, that the President, etc., be authorized to acquire territory on which to excavate, construct, and defend a canal of such depth and capacity. Following the introduction of that bill on the 5th of February, 1900, a treaty was signed by Mr. Hay and Sir Julian Pauncefote, commonly known as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which referred to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, as follows:

"The United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, etc., being desirous to facilitate the construction of a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and to that end to remove any objections that may arise out of the convention of the 19th of April, 1850, commonly called the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, to the construction of such canal under the auspices of the Government of the United States, without impairing the 'general principle' of neutralization established in article 8 of that convention," etc.

Among other provisions in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was this in article 2:

"The high contracting parties, desiring to preserve and maintain the 'general principle' of neutralization established in article 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer convention, adopt as the basis of such neutralization the following rules."

It will be noticed that this article places the responsibility for maintaining the principle of neutralization not upon the United States alone, but upon the United States and Great Britain. Paragraph 7 of article 2 of that treaty contains this provision:

"No fortification shall be erected commanding the canal or the waters adjacent. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder."

When that treaty was submitted to the Senate of the United States various amendments were suggested in the Senate, but in the end the treaty was not ratified by either party. Following the sending of that message to the Senate of the United States and its consideration in the Senate on May 3, 1900, Col. Hepburn introduced this bill:

"A bill to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity," etc.

Here were bills pending in Congress, one of which was reported before the treaty had been agreed upon and ratified between the United States and Great Britain abrogating the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, providing that the United States should construct and defend or protect a canal. The first Hay-Pauncefote treaty did not contain a provision directly abrogating the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. There was then before the two countries a proposition presented by a legislative committee of this House having control of the subject, a proposition that the United States should construct and defend or protect an Isthmian canal and a provision that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty could be, if not abrogated, changed to allow that.

The Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which was finally ratified, contained a provision that the high contracting parties agree that the present treaty—that is, the last Hay-Pauncefote treaty—shall supersede the aforementioned convention of the 19th of April, 1850, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

The Clayton-Bulwer treaty, therefore, is entirely abrogated. Article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty provides that the United States, not the United States and Great Britain, but the United States adopts as a basis of neutralization of such ship canal the following rules substantially as embodied in the convention of Constantinople of October 28, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Canal. That is to say, the canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation or its citizens or subjects in respect to the conditions, of charges of traffic, or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

And there are various other rules. Article II of that treaty provides that—

"The canal may be constructed under the auspices of the Government of the United States, either directly at its own cost or by gift or loan of money by individuals," etc.

And that—

"subject to the provisions of the present treaty, the United States shall have and enjoy the rights incident to such construction, as well as the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal."

Paragraph 2 of article 3 provides:

"The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder."

And the provision which was in the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty, "that no fortification shall be erected commanding the canal or the waters adjacent," was deliberately left out of the treaty which was ratified.

The present occupant of the chair has endeavored to read all of the correspondence which has been published in any form upon this subject, and has no hesitation in saying that, in his opinion, it was the design in the treaty to leave to the Government of the United States the right to determine how it should police the canal and what regulations it should make.

Following the ratification of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which was ratified in November, 1901, came an act of Congress based upon the Hepburn bill, which had passed the House and for which a substitute was made in the Senate. That act, commonly known as the Spooner Act, is the act of June 28, 1902. It provided:

"That the President is hereby authorized to acquire from the Republic of Colombia, for and on behalf of the United States, upon such terms as he may deem reasonable, perpetual control of a strip of land, the territory of the Republic of Colombia, not less than 6 miles in width, and extending from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, and the right to use and dispose of the waters thereon, and to excavate, construct, and to perpetually maintain, operate, and protect thereon, a canal of such depth and capacity," etc.

Another provision of that act is section 5, reading:

"That the President is hereby authorized to cause to be entered into such contract or contracts as may be deemed necessary for the proper excavation, construction, completion, and defense of said canal, harbors, and defenses, by the route finally determined upon under the provisions of this act."

The route finally determined upon was the Panama Canal route, and it is said that the convention or treaty entered into between the United States and Panama would permit the United States to fortify the canal.

Article 18 of the treaty between the United States and Panama provides:

"The canal, when constructed, and the entrances thereto shall be neutral in perpetuity, and shall be opened under the terms provided for in section 1 of article 3 of, and in conformity with all the stipulations of, the treaty entered into by Great Britain and the Government of the United States October 18, 1901."

But the neutralization under the treaty (the Hay-Pauncefote treaty) to be maintained by the United States, not by the United States and Great Britain.

It is said that the limit of cost has been exceeded. The original limit of cost for the canal was based upon the estimate of the engineers, but when Congress adopted the lock-type of canal at the time it did, it was well known that the original limit of cost would be exceeded.

The chairman is not now certain what provision was made at that time in reference to the limit of cost, but in the Payne tariff bill it was provided, among other things, in reference to the issuance of bonds, that there might be issued the additional sum of $290,569,000 of bonds, which sum, together with the $84,631,900 already borrowed by the issuance of 2 per cent bonds under section 8 of the act of June 28, 1902, equals the estimate of the Isthmian Canal Commission of the amount required to cover the entire cost of the canal from its inception to its completion; and if there be no other change of authorization it is quite certain that the adoption of this estimate by the authority to issue bonds to cover the estimate of cost would be, of itself, an adoption of the estimate.

The Chair personally has been very much at sea in reference to the desirability of fortifying the canal, but in deciding the point of order the Chair does not pass upon that in any respect. It seems to the Chair that whereas it is provided that the United States shall preserve the neutrality of the canal for the benefit of all nations alike, and that the United States shall provide military police upon the canal to preserve it from disorder, and whereas Congress has provided that the Government shall construct, maintain, operate, and protect the canal, it is quite within the power of the House to determine in what way it should be protected, and whether fortifications are necessary. If fortifications are necessary for protection, then the items in the bill are in order. [Applause.] The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois want?

Mr. CANNON. Twenty minutes; and I may want a little more.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The gentleman from Georgia has made arrangement as to time——

Mr. ADAMSON. Let the gentleman from Illinois begin with 20 minutes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield the gentleman from Illinois 20 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not undertake to discuss how far we may go under the treaty in saying that in the coastwise trade all ships flying the American flag may pass through the canal without the payment of toll. I quite agree with the gentleman, my colleague [Mr. MANN], touching the construction of that treaty, and I am gratified that I had the pleasure of listening to his remarks and that the House also had an opportunity of hearing his views. The United States is a great big country, and domestic affairs, during my service in the House, have kept me so busy that I have not had much time to devote to our foreign relations, so that I do not profess to be fully competent to discuss our foreign relations and I am not an expert regarding the treaties we have made with other countries of the world. But I want to inquire, in the first place, as to toll on our ships in the coastwise trade when they pass through the Panama Canal. I want also to inquire regarding the amendment in section 11 amending section 5 of the commerce act and prohibiting any railway or other common carrier from having any interest in any other common carrier by water when the railway or other carrier is a competitor with any other carrier by water. Now, there is a cleavage between the gentleman from California, Representative KNOWLAND, and the gentleman from Minnesota, Representative STEVENS. They agree in some respects and in others they disagree. I listened with great pleasure yesterday to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] make one of the most admirable speeches that I have ever heard in the House, but after all it seemed to me that the speech rested upon a shadow for a foundation. And what a magnificent building he did build considering the foundation. [Laughter and applause.] Ours is a representative Government. We all respond to public sentiment and the interests primarily of our constituency. Therefore I can see how the gentleman who represents St. Paul, Minn.—and it is ably and patriotically represented—would hold a different view as to the real or supposed interest of the gentleman who represents the Golden Gate than is held by that gentleman himself. The gentleman who represents the Golden Gate ably and interestingly insists that the coastwise trade of the United States is barred to all the flags of all the world; that we own the Panama Canal and that the people on the Pacific coast are interested in having coastwise trade pass through that canal without the payment of tolls.

I was greatly interested and I applauded when he said that the waterways of the great Republic were without toll for American ships in the coastwise trade and interstate-commerce trade. I was aware that that was the case, and I am glad it is. They will always be free so far as my vote is concerned. I followed him when he spoke about the dollar a ton that this bill would levy on our ships passing through the canal, and the burden that would impose on that part of our interstate trade which will go by water from Cairo, from the upper Mississippi River, and from the Ohio down to the Gulf, and in fullness of time pass through the canal and to the Pacific coast, and how that additional burden, if imposed, would protect the transcontinental railways which run through the district represented so ably by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS]. That is to say, that in the competition with the transcontinental railways that dollar a ton on water-borne commerce would cut some figure that would affect all the interstate commerce of this great country.

Do gentlemen stop to think that this great country—I have frequently made this statement, but it is apt to make it again—has an annual production of thirty thousand millions of dollars, more than 90 per cent of which is consumed and goes to market by water and by railway in the United States? Out of that thirty thousand million dollars' worth of products only two thousand million dollars' worth goes to foreign markets. We produce in the United States more than one-third of all the products of all the civilized world; and when you put an exceptional burden of a dollar a ton on the coastwise trade it affects every ton substantially that goes into our internal commerce, whether it goes by rail or by water. [Applause.]

I will drop that part of it right there and come to one other thing. The first amendment in section 11 prohibits any competing railway or common carrier from having any interest in a common carrier by water; that may be wise and it may not.

I never owned a share of stock in a railway in my life, so that I think I may be permitted to discuss very briefly that matter without somebody saying that I stand for the interests; that I stand for the railroads, and so forth, and so forth. I do not stand for them except as they are necessary to our civilization and development. I want to utilize them.

Now, a ship in the coastwise trade, flying the American flag, is a ship without regard to who owns it. Here are several transcontinental railways running from one ocean to the other, great corporations engaged in a great commerce. If, perchance, they are competitors with carriers by water, it is, under the provisions of the proposed amendment, a misdemeanor, with a severe penalty, for them to own any interest, directly or indirectly, in any such water carrier. Suppose that provision goes on the statute books—carriers by rail do not have all the money in the world—and there enters into the coastwise trade some one who by superior ships and superior service should succeed in monopolizing the great bulk of freight passing from one coast to the other. Where is your remedy? You could not prosecute under the Sherman Antitrust Act unless you could show there was a combination in restraint of trade. If the interstate-commerce law does not do so now, it ought to be amended so as to cover our coastwise trade. I do not believe it covers that trade now. The railways in the United States, one-half of those in all the world, conducting our great transportation business must charge reasonable rates. Why? The law says so. We have the power to require them to do so. Well, what are reasonable rates? We have created a commission to determine what are reasonable rates; otherwise, we would not get along very well. There is no reason, in my judgment, why that legislation should not cover the coastwise trade as well. The Constitution is broad enough. It gives Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

Now, what does this amendment do? Let us come down now to brass tacks, as we used to say when we were schoolboys,

Canada has ports on the Pacific—Vancouver and Prince Rupert, farther north, and others yet to come, no doubt—and she will soon have three or four transcontinental lines connecting the Pacific and the Atlantic. Under existing treaties you can not shut Canada out from passing through the Panama Canal.

True, she would have to pay the tolls; but, mind you, our own transcontinental railway people—who are just as wicked and no more wicked than similar people in Canada—will not be permitted, without a daily penalty, to own any vessel that passes through the canal or have any interest in any vessel which would constitute a competing line. Does the same prohibition apply in the case of the Canadian railways?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. CANNON. I will yield for just a question.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact—that the act provides that any railroad subject to the act to regulate commerce——

Mr. CANNON. Precisely——

Mr. KNOWLAND. Every Canadian railroad comes under the interstate-commerce act of the United States, and consequently they would be barred.

Mr. CANNON. Is it possible——

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from California first.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will give the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. By virtue of what treaty, by virtue of what sovereign power can we subject the railways of Canada to our legislation?

Mr. KNOWLAND. They have already submitted themselves by coming under the interstate-commerce act of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. How long would it take them to get out?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Then they would have to cease doing business in the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Let me give you a case. The Canadian Pacific Railway owns a fleet of steamers. So do other railways. Here is Seattle and here is Vancouver and a little farther down is San Francisco. Our transcontinental railways can not own or operate ships on water routes that compete with railroad routes. Canada is a foreign country and under existing treaties can engage in commerce from Vancouver, say, or any other Canadian port, with all ports in the United States. The Canadian railways own great fleets of steamers which could take on cargoes in Canada, pass through the Panama Canal, and distribute them in every harbor of the United States. That would be foreign commerce, and I apprehend would result in building up Vancouver, the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and other railway terminal points on the Canadian coast, as the Canadian railway-owned ships could carry not only Canadian products but American products which seek Canadian ports for shipment, while under the provisions of this bill our railroads are prohibited from owning or operating vessels that could engage in such trade. So if this provision is retained in amendment 11 Canada and Canadian railways can do something in our coastwise trade which our railways can not do.

I merely suggest whether it is wise, after all, to enact that clause. I tell you now that, in my judgment, all the common carriers engaged in interstate commerce upon land or water must be placed under the administration of the Interstate Commerce Commission or some other power created by Congress. [Applause.] That is the only remedy, in my judgment. Therefore I am willing to see this provision amended to that effect.

Now, I want to discuss just for a minute before I sit down one other matter in section 11. There are quite a number of valuable provisions in this section. It amends section 6 of the commerce act. Now, a, b, and c, in section 11, are very desirable amendments, because they provide for the connection between the railways and the waterways. The language is well drawn, as it seems to me, and I can support them very cheerfully.

Now, let us come to a in the amendment. I shall support that very cheerfully. It is a regulation of foreign commerce, and is as follows:

> If any rail carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce enters into an arrangement with any water carrier operating from a port in the United States to a foreign country, through the Panama Canal or otherwise—

And I am glad the words "or otherwise" are inserted there—> for the handling of through business between interior points of the United States and such foreign country, the Interstate Commerce Commission may require such railway to enter into similar arrangements with any or all other lines of steamships operating from said port to the same foreign country.

We could go further in regulating commerce with foreign nations and declare that the rate should be reasonable and put in a condition that that commerce should not be entered upon unless the rate charged conforms with what is found to be a reasonable rate by our Interstate Commerce Commission.

Now, I think that I have said about all I desire to say touching this matter.

I have been amused at the majority report. It is an able report, ably defended by the distinguished chairman of that great committee [Mr. ADAMSON], Smiling Jim, whose ability is greater than he knows. [Applause.] I listened to his speech with great pleasure; but, bless my soul, he says that under the treaty you can not let our coastwise trade go through our canal without payment of toll. Oh, no, gentlemen say, that would be a violation of the equality provision of the treaty. Then in the next breath they say, "Yes, you must make our ships pay tolls, and then you can legislate the money back to them by way of a rebate." But when you come to that legislation, here comes old Subsidy. [Laughter.] It reminds me of the old chestnut about the doctor throwing his patient into fits and then curing the fits. The gentleman from Georgia throws the House into a subsidy fit. He knows how one shall put 10,000 to flight, and that if you cry "subsidy" many will run.

But that argument has been substantially answered. If it is a subsidy in this case, it is a subsidy in the case of that great commerce which passes through the Soo Canal, which some one has said is of greater tonnage than all the foreign commerce of the world. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says it is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I should like about three minutes more.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], to whom I promised 5 minutes, does not desire the time, and I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois 3 minutes more, which makes 26 minutes in all. I did not want the gentleman to stop at 23.

Mr. CANNON. I am just 26, so the 26 minutes agrees exactly with the number of years old that I am. [Applause and laughter.]

I am not afraid of subsidy. I would subsidize our foreign tonnage if I thought we could do it successfully. The practical difficulty is this: If without a cent of expense to us for their construction ships were given to us to sail under the American flag, how long could we run them, when it costs twice as much to run an American vessel as it costs our foreign competitors for similar service on the great highway of the ocean? Still I am willing to venture along the coast of South America, as that is near by, and the Panama Canal is to be opened. I would even, aliunde this legislation, give a subsidy to ships engaged in that trade; but we monopolize, of course, our coastwise trade, in which a great and growing tonnage is employed and will continue to be employed. It is pretty important that we have somewhere ships upon the sea that will train the seamen who in the event of trouble can man our battleships. Therefore, as we are supreme concerning our own coastwise trade, it is important that it should be maintained as it is, and not burdened, because it gives enough employment in large part to beget the construction of ships at our shipyards. It is necessary for us to have shipyards, and, thank God, we have them. I am a friend of the coastwise trade, and from the standpoint of a great public policy, touching the building of ships, touching the commerce in our coastwise trade, I will not vote to burden it as has been suggested by my friend [Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota], whose outlook, as it seems to me, is a little narrower than the one I happen to have now. I think very likely if I lived at St. Paul I might have the same sentiment, even if I could not build so magnificent a foundation upon a shadow as my friend did. I do not believe this House of Representatives will do otherwise than let ships engaged in our coastwise trade go through the Panama Canal as they go into the harbors of New York and San Francisco and upon the Sound and into New Orleans and into all our seacoast harbors, free—without tax. That is only simple justice and sound public policy. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MALBY] 20 minutes, and that is all there is for him and he need not ask for more.

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Chairman, while I know at this day and age that a public official courts suspicion of his motives even if he suggests a fair deal for railroad companies, yet in the general interest of the public itself I desire to point out why section 11 of H. R. 21969 should not be adopted. This bill is entitled:

An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

The constitutions of many States in the Union, upon the ground of public policy and justice, would absolutely prohibit any other subject from being considered in this bill than that stated in the title, and it could not embrace more than one subject.

The fact that the Constitution of the United States does not contain this prohibition does not, in my opinion, in any degree lessen the impropriety of loading down various bills with several different subjects not in any manner related to the main proposition. Such legislation is absolutely indefensible upon any ground and should never be tolerated except as a last expedient.

I have been led to believe from the boastful expressions frequently reiterated by our friends on the other side that when they got into power there would be such liberty of legislation under the rules that everyone would have an opportunity, as a matter of personal right, to secure a hearing upon any subject at all worthy of consideration.

I have therefore been pained to observe that almost every important bill is now brought before us under a special rule reported by the Rules Committee. These rules have prohibited any amendments and limit consideration to a point where adequate consideration is impossible and legislation almost a farce. In addition to that, the real subject embraced in a bill is disfigured with boils and carbuncles, so that it is difficult to determine which is the major premise in the bill under consideration.

Certainly the subject embraced in the title of this bill alone is large enough, and important and difficult enough of solution, to call for our very best efforts without still further complicating the questions therein contained by the introduction of another subject entirely foreign to the one embraced in this bill, and in particular when the new matter relates to one of the most complicated and difficult subjects which this Congress can be called upon to deal with. I refer to section 11, which proposes to amend the interstate commerce law, which has not relation whatsoever to the subject matter dealt with in any other portion of the bill and which from its very great importance nevertheless affects every portion of this country and directly and indirectly all of the people and many their personal interests.

This provision of the bill is still further complicated by an amendment proposed yesterday, the effect of which it is difficult to determine, and upon which, as I am advised, no representatives of the railroad companies have had an opportunity to be heard. From a brief examination of its provisions, it would seem to provide, and it does state—

That section 5 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding thereto a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"From and after the 1st day of July, 1913, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly, indirectly, through any holding company, or in any other manner) in any common carrier by water with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic; and in case of the violation of this provision each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense."

The bill also provides that no railroad company shall charge a domestic common carrier by water any greater sum for the carrying and forwarding of their freight than that charged to the carriers of any foreign country, which is entirely a new departure and contrary to present practices. The amendment offered yesterday also provides that all railroads shall, under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, establish physical connections between the lines of the rail carriers and the dock of the water carriers by making suitable connections, and that this provision shall extend to cases where the dock is owned by those who are not common carriers, either by rail or water; and establish through routes over rail and water lines; and provides further that if any rail carrier now subject to the act to regulate commerce enters into arrangements with any water carrier, operating from a port in the United States to a foreign country, that the Interstate Commerce Commission may require such railroads to enter into similar arrangements with any and all other lines of steamships operating from said port to the same foreign country.

That is to say, part of section 11 provides that any and all railroads which now own or have any stock or other interest in a company or corporation which is engaged in water transportation, or who lease, operate or control, or have any other interest whatsoever, either directly or indirectly, in any such water transportation company, shall be guilty of a violation of law for each day such relations may exist after July 1, 1913; in other words, such railroad companies must at any cost and sacrifice, however great, separate themselves from the ownership and control of any and all interests in any water transportation company whatsoever.

Neither does it matter whether the railroad company proposes to use the Panama Canal or not; in fact, most of the railroad companies of the country to which the bill applies will never make use of the Panama Canal.

The other portions of the bill to which I have called attention are likewise of the greatest and most far-reaching importance, the extent and effect of which it is difficult and impossible, without further information, to determine, or even approximate.

When it is attempted to inject a subject of such importance as this is into a bill which has absolutely nothing to do with this matter, it becomes necessary to inquire why it is attempted to force this provision into the Panama bill, where it has no proper place.

If the matter embraced in this amendment is a proper subject for legislation, why is it not treated as it should be, in a separate bill, where it could be given that careful consideration which its importance to the various interests affected thereby demands?

We are told by the gentleman from California, and the proponent of this amendment, that he fears that the great continental railroad lines will destroy independent competition in the use of the Panama Canal, and if he is correct in this, and I by no means concede that he is, why has he not confined his amendment to those railroad companies who may use the Panama Canal, and not have it apply to all the railroads of the country, who will never use it, and who are not interested in its operation in any way? I think, however, that he scarcely appreciates how far-reaching his amendment is, or how injurious to commerce it might prove to be if enacted into law.

All the great trunk lines of the East which have connections north, south, and west throughout the land would be affected by it, for I believe it to be true that all of the great trunk lines of the country, east and west, would be affected by the provisions contained in his amendment.

I know that the New York Central, the Erie, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, the Lehigh Valley, and the Pennsylvania are each interested in water transportation in such a way as to be affected by this proposed measure. Each of these lines has extensive and costly terminals upon the Atlantic seaboard and at Buffalo, N. Y., as well as at most of the other important ports on the Great Lakes, consisting of extensive docks, warehouses, elevators, and lines of steamboats and canal boats, which act as feeders and greatly assist the railroad companies in the handling of their immense traffic, both east and west, and without which it would be impossible for them to handle it at all, and the portion which they could handle without the assistance of their water transportation would be at an increased expense to the general public, and result in a great and unnecessary delay in the transaction of their transportation business.

These eastern railroad lines are now wholly unable to handle all traffic which now comes to them without the aid of their steamship lines and other connections. Most of the wheat, corn, oats, barley, and rye, as well as large quantities of iron ore and coal, is now of necessity handled very largely and more cheaply by their water transportation than it could be possibly done by the railroad companies.

All will appreciate the necessity of the railroad companies, in a measure at least, having such control and ownership over water transportation which is operated in connection with its own lines, and where it must and does assume responsibility to insure to the general public the safe, immediate, and economical transportation and handling of its passengers and freight.

It must be able to say what freight it shall carry and be able to direct its operations so that it will be in harmony with the general business conducted by the railroad in order to produce satisfactory, as well as the best, results. To separate the railroad companies from their water lines with which their general transportation business has been intimately connected and conducted from the beginning would seriously interfere with their business affairs and result in great inconvenience and loss to the general public, as well as financial loss to their stockholders; and all of this to no good purpose. Besides, there is no demand for this legislation from anyone, East or West, who is interested in transportation. Those who are interested in transportation, as most every one is sooner or later and in one way or another, desire all the facilities which they now enjoy for that purpose.

So far as competition is concerned between the railroads and the various steamboat lines plying upon the Great Lakes and the River St. Lawrence and the Atlantic Seaboard, the competition is at all times very keen and sharp, which results in the carrying of freight as cheaply as, if not cheaper than, anywhere else in the world, and to the general satisfaction of those who do not want their freight carried at less than cost.

There is a limit to the capacity of our trunk lines running east and west in the carrying of freight, and it would be utterly impossible for them to handle the great mass of freight moving eastward were it not for the assistance of the water transportation on the Great Lakes.

The ownership of the railroads and their connection with water transportation has not in the slightest degree, so far as I have ever heard or been advised, interfered with competition among independent shippers in these waters, and besides all this, there is not a single Canadian railroad which does not have connections with inland water transportation companies, as well as the high seas, for the Canadian Pacific Railroad Co. and its steamship lines nearly encircles the earth, and it would be manifestly unfair and place our railroad companies under great disadvantage if they were denied by law this same privilege.

Just to illustrate how the provisions of this bill might act in an unjust and foolish as well as most harmful manner, I will call your attention to the fact that the Ogdensburg & Lake Champlain Railroad is a small line of railroad constructed from Rouses Point, at the head of Lake Champlain, to Ogdensburg, on the river St. Lawrence, having a length of 120 miles. It to-day owns and operates a line of steamships between Ogdensburg and Chicago and intermediate points, from which it derives substantially all its freight traffic. It has large elevators and warehouses constructed at Ogdensburg, which are filled up with corn and other produce during the wintertime, which is distributed throughout New England by its railroad connections during both the summer and the winter. It is a great convenience to the general public in northern New York and throughout all New England; but if it were obliged to abandon its steamboat lines it would undoubtedly pass into the hands of a receiver, and a great and necessary public service be completely destroyed, and besides all this an active competitor of the other great trunk lines would have been eliminated.

Another case which I have in mind is that of the Delaware & Hudson River Railroad, running from Pennsylvania through New York to Montreal, which some years ago constructed a line of railroad from Albany to Rouses Point, N. Y., a distance of about 200 miles, for the most part along the foothills of the Adirondack Mountains. There is little or no freight or passenger traffic over a large portion of this route. The income received would not and did not pay the running expenses of this portion of their line, and nothing whatsoever was earned for dividends, or interest, either to the stockholders or the bondholders. It sought to remedy these conditions, and so purchased a small steamboat line, doing business between Whitehall and Plattsburg, N. Y., and Burlington, Vt., which was then doing an interstate-commerce business. The steamboat business did not pay, neither did the railroad business, until after their combination. The railroad company not only rebuilt its steamboat line, but materially added to it, so that it became an effective means of transportation in connection with the railroad, as well as a paying one. Still further to help develop the enterprise into a paying one, the railroad built a hotel on the banks of Lake Champlain at a cost of more than $300,000, with the result that to-day these joint enterprises are paying a moderate interest on the investment; but as separate-going concerns neither of them would pay. Just why these relations should be thoughtlessly and ruthlessly destroyed I can not imagine. Certainly no public interest is to be served; but, on the contrary, great damage would result to the general public and much property deprived of its present productiveness and finally destroyed.

I understand that it is claimed that section 11 attempts to remedy such evils as I have specified, in that it confers jurisdiction on the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine questions of fact as to whether competition between railroads and steamboat lines is beneficial or detrimental to the public interest; and if found beneficial and not harmful, that they may continue to exist and be jointly operated as heretofore.

An examination, however, of the bill will clearly demonstrate that this is not so, for the only power conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission is to determine the question of fact as to competition or the possibility of competition between railroad companies and water carriers; and if it appears that there was or could be competition between such lines, then their existing relations, whether detrimental to the public interest or not, must be dissolved, and hence no discretion is vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission whatsoever.

Neither, in my judgment, should the Panama Canal be made free to American ships doing a coasting trade or a transportation business wholly within the United States. I know that it tickles the fancy and arouses thoughtless enthusiasm to proclaim that the American flag must be restored to the seas, and that hence no tax should be levied upon its use of the Panama Canal; but might I modestly inquire upon what theory those who use the Panama Canal for the transportation of their trade demand a free use of the canal, when it is estimated that it will cost the people of this country $25,000,000 a year to maintain it? Why should the people pay the shipper's transportation instead of his paying for it himself, for is it not apparent that for every dollar which the Government fails to collect from those who ship through the Panama Canal it must of necessity take a dollar out of the Treasury of the United States to defray that expense; in other words, why should the people pay for private use and private transportation?

Is there any more reason why the Government should construct a canal which has cost $400,000,000, and will cost $25,000,000 a year to maintain, to be free to shippers, than it would be for the Government to construct, own, and operate at its own proper cost and expense a railroad from San Francisco to New York, which would cost no more to either construct or operate than it has and will the Panama Canal? My judgment is that neither proposition can be justified upon any principle, and in particular to favor water transportation as against railroad transportation, for it is known to all that no railroad company can carry freight as cheaply by rail as it can be carried by water. It would simply and necessarily result in the railroad companies being obliged to make good their losses by overcharging some one else who now pays much more than those who now enjoy water transportation. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the chairman of our committee for yielding to me so much time, and to say that if you will give me your attention I will try and close my remarks in less time than has been granted me.

In this debate a very large proportion of the time has been consumed in the discussion of section 5, mostly in the consideration of the legal or international question. I do not propose to spend any time on that or on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty or the Hay-Pauncefote treaty or anything that pertains to them. When the matter was up before the committee and the form of the bill was being considered, I was one of those who, while I favored the tolls on coastwise commerce as provided in the bill, was strongly opposed to any reference to the treaties. I did not want to foreclose our Government in the future [applause] from regulating the tolls in case it wants to do so.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Does the gentleman think we do it in the bill?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I do not think so. At least the gentleman knows that direct reference to those treaties was stricken out of the bill.

Mr. KNOWLAND. No; I did not.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit, did not the committee offer to strike out that very portion and it was objected to by the gentleman from California?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Yes; that is as I recollect it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is not a fair statement.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The majority—I mean the 16 out of the 21 members who were in favor of tolls—were disposed to strike out of the bill any reference to the treaties and any part of the bill which might indicate that this Government is bound by treaty to give the same rights through the canal to foreign ships as to our ships. I am one of those who was in favor of leaving that out of the bill, and therefore do not propose to discuss it here. I will confine myself to this question of tolls on the merits, just as if we have as much power, as a Government, to regulate the tolls, to discriminate between nations, as we have power over this Capitol Building. I will confine my remarks to the fairness and equity of this bill on the question of tolls between the shipowners and shippers, on the one side, and the people, on the other, who have paid for the construction of the canal and who will have to pay for its protection.

Gentlemen who oppose the tolls say that it is a departure from the policy of this country to levy tolls or any other charges against our commerce. My answer is that it is a new proposition. It is the first time the Government has been called upon to face a question like this; and since it is new and different from any other question which the Government has been called upon to consider, we must meet it with judgment and fairness to all and in the interests of the whole people, as against the demands of a few who are especially interested.

Let me now refer to the remarks of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] and the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], my colleague on the committee. They both said and repeated over and over again that this is a question of the railroads versus the people. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] yesterday opened his speech with an emphatic declaration that it is a question of the railroads against the people, and that the 5 men who signed the minority views are with the people, and the 16 who approved the majority report are in favor of the railroads and against the people.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I do not think the gentleman is hardly fair as far as any statement I made is concerned.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman was not as bold about it as was the gentleman from Washington, but both tried to give that impression.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I do not think it was necessary to put it in at all.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. There are degrees of gall and cheek in this Pacific coast crowd and a few others who are not willing to pay even $1 a net registered ton, which is the necessary expense of passing their ships through the canal when they once reach the locks, but insist on putting that burden on the people in addition to the $400,000,000 for the construction of the canal, and $20,000,000 a year in addition for its protection. I say there are different degrees of greed and selfishness, and my friend from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] is not quite as nervy as my other friend from the Pacific coast [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Let me refer in a few words to the personnel of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that the Members may judge for themselves whether the 16 who favor tolls or the 5 who oppose them are really the friends of the people. I will not individually consider the 16 members for the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] did that yesterday in a very able manner; and I leave it to the membership of this House to say whether, by reason of their records in the House and in the districts they represent, they would be inclined to favor the railroads or any other special interests as against the interests of the country at large.

Now, let us consider the five gentlemen who signed the minority report. Mr. BROUSSARD is from Louisiana, the most overwhelmingly Democratic State in the Union. Only yesterday I noticed in the papers that the Republicans had not cast enough votes to entitle the party's name or emblem to be placed on the ticket; that there is not even a skeleton of the Republican organization now in existence in that State. The gentleman is a Senator now, or is soon to be, and, although from this very strong Democratic State, according to my recollection, has generally voted for Republican tariff bills simply because the sugar business is a very large interest in his State and he wants to protect sugar. Steamship people and shippers of New Orleans are against tolls, and Mr. BROUSSARD is for a free canal. I find no fault with him for this. It is human nature. Syracuse was built around the salt wells of Onondaga and the manufacture of salt was its largest industry in its early days. Every Member of Congress who ever represented that district favored as high tariff duties as he could get on salt for the benefit of his district.

My colleague Mr. GOLDFOGLE resides in Manhattan and my colleague Mr. CALDER in Brooklyn. One is a Democrat and the other a Republican. Both are Representatives from Greater New York, the largest commercial center in the world. Its chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and transportation companies adopted resolutions for a free canal, and these gentlemen signed the minority views. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] comes from Detroit, a great and prosperous city, whose commercial bodies very likely are opposed to any tolls on the canal. In his remarks he said that it would be political suicide for any party to favor such tolls. It is fair to assume, therefore, that it is not policy for him to favor the tolls provided for in this bill.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] represents the aggressive shipowners and shippers of his State who were strong advocates of an Isthmian Canal and demanded that San Francisco be selected as the city in which to celebrate the completion of that great project, and had their way. They now are very much interested in shifting all of the burden and expense of maintaining and operating the canal on the Government, while they will be special beneficiaries of this waterway.

Would it not be a fair statement to say that the question before us is one of a coastwise shipping monopoly versus the people, and that those five gentlemen are the friends and advocates of this shipping monopoly and that the sixteen are trying to protect the rights and interests of all the people?

Our opponents repeatedly inquire why we insist on tolls on coastwise traffic through the canal when nobody appeared before our committee and asked for it. It is true that nobody representing the ninety-odd millions of people in this country who pay for the construction of the canal did come before the committee, but representatives of the steamship companies and the shippers did appear before the committee and demand that no tolls be imposed. The toiling millions of the country are busy trying to earn a living to support their families and pay their taxes and have no time to appear before committees of Congress. They send their representatives to this body to look after their interests and expect them to do it; and it seemed to us that it was our duty to protect their rights against the representatives of aggressive and greedy special interests who came before the committee and demanded that they get a gratuity at the expense of the whole people.

I will now explain to you how we arrived at the rates to be charged for the use of the canal as recommended in this bill. The committee went to the Canal Zone during the Christmas holidays, viewed the great work in progress, held many hearings, acquired much information from Col. Goethals and other able men who are engaged in the construction of the canal, and listened to advice from many people. After that we gave hearings from day to day to shipowners, shippers, and representatives of commercial organizations and several Government officials and experts. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] yesterday delivered a very instructive and interesting address, embodying the substance of the evidence taken before the committee on the comparative advantages of the Suez and Panama Canals and the sources of the traffic which may be reasonably expected to patronize our canal in case of low rates and convenient supplies of coal and other ship necessaries. As a result of that thorough and comprehensive investigation, and on advice of experts, the committee recommended this maximum rate of $1.25 per net ton. That is about 6 cents per ton less than the rates now charged on the Suez Canal, but it is expected that the rates on the Suez Canal will be lowered in the near future.

Our rate was made low in order that we may get as large a proportion as possible of the traffic from what is known as competitive territory between the Suez and Panama Canals. As explained by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], that embraces the coast of Asia from Hongkong easterly and northerly, Japan, a part of Australia, and New Zealand and the islands of the Pacific east of the Philippines, and as far south on the west coast of South America as ships can afford to go by way of the Panama Canal and pay the tolls. Our canal would be sure of the traffic between the eastern part of North America and the western coast of South America to a considerable distance to the southward at much higher rates than proposed in this bill. It would also be sure of all the traffic between the western coast of North America, including the British possessions, United States, Mexico, and Central America, and the eastern coast of North America and Europe if the tolls were several times those proposed.

To explain a little more fully with reference to our coastwise trade. Ship companies are now competing with the transcontinental railroads between our eastern and western coasts and are doing a considerable part of the traffic, especially in heavy materials. But at present they are at very great disadvantage because when a ship sails from San Francisco to the Isthmus her cargo must be unloaded, transported across the Isthmus by rail, and reloaded onto a ship on the Atlantic coast, and thence to New York. According to the evidence of Mr. Dearborn, representative of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., it costs $4 a ton to transfer the freight from one coast to the other by rail. In addition to this expense, which is deducted from the ship's total freight receipts, she is tied up 10 days during the unloading of one cargo and the loading of another. When she will pass through the canal she will save that 10 days and do from one-fourth to one-third more business in a year. My own judgment is that a ship company will be able, when the canal is completed, to transport freight from San Francisco to New York for one-half the rates per ton she receives now. But I will not base my argument on any doubtful statement of facts. She will save the $4 per ton cargo now paid for unloading, transporting across the Isthmus by rail, and reloading. The rates we propose amount to just about half a dollar per cargo ton, which is necessary to pay the expense of putting the ship through the locks and canal from ocean to ocean. Therefore after paying those rates she will save $3.50 per cargo ton. That ship competes now quite successfully with the transcontinental railroads under her present disadvantages. When the canal is completed and in operation she will, after paying the tolls proposed, save $3.50 on every ton of cargo from coast to coast, and will be able to transport freight from our western to our eastern coast for less than the actual cost of transportation by the railroad companies.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], in his statement before our committee, distinctly admitted that. If this ship and all others will not absorb this benefit of $3.50 per ton, but will allow it to pass on and the merchants will allow it to pass through to the ultimate consumers, they will be well satisfied. I myself am not quite optimistic enough to believe that will be done. The ship companies will absorb all they can, and the shippers and merchants, wholesale and retail, will absorb a large part of the remainder; and it is doubtful if a very large proportion of this $3.50 profit on each ton will go to the benefit of the people generally.

If the canal were owned by a corporation which owed no obligations to anyone or to any country, and could fix such rates as the traffic would bear, and was bent on making all the money it could, it would charge at least $4 a ton on cargo freight on all traffic from the western coast of North America to the eastern coast of North America and to Europe and vice versa; and the ship companies would pay it because they would have to. They could pay it and transport this freight very much cheaper than they do now. But since the rates provided in the bill are the same to all and very low, in the hope of getting traffic in competition with the Suez, the trade from coast to coast in our country is in great luck, because the rates are only a trifle compared with what it costs now to transfer the cargoes across the Isthmus by rail.

Aside from the cost of construction of the canal and its protection, it will cost at least $5,000,000 a year to maintain and operate it, sanitate the zone, and maintain a civil government on it. It is estimated that the rates proposed in this bill will be about enough to pay the necessary expense of passing the ships through the canal, leaving no surplus for the protection of the zone or for the interest on our bonded indebtedness for its construction. Our opponents urge that since the Government improves rivers and harbors and charges no tolls for the benefits received by our coastwise vessels, therefore it should not charge tolls on the canal, which they claim will be a part of our coast line. To that we answer that after the rivers and harbors are improved no further expense of maintenance and operation on the part of the Government is required, whereas with respect to the canal the Government will have incurred the expense of its construction and fortification, and will continually incur the expense of its protection by detachments of our Army and Navy for which it expects no return at all events for many years to come. But it will be required to bear the running expenses of the canal and of passing ships through it. That process may not be generally understood. When a ship enters the canal, say, from the Atlantic side, and moves up to the Gatun locks, three in number, she is then taken in charge by the canal officials and put through the locks by electrical machinery and appliances and out into Gatun Lake. She then sails under her own steam to the first lock on the Pacific side, of which there are three. The canal officials again take her in charge and pass her through the locks until she is in the canal on the Pacific side, when she puts on her own steam and passes out into the ocean. It is estimated that this service of passing the ship through the canal and all attendant expenses will amount to about $1 per net registered ton, the rate which will probably be fixed by the administrative officers under this bill if enacted into law. It is proposed to charge this rate on all ships, foreign and domestic.

We submit that it is only fair that the ship, which gets this special benefit in putting her through the canal, should pay the expense of that service. That expense must be paid in one way or another, either out of the Treasury of the United States or by the ship that gets the benefit of the service; and we contend that the ship should pay this trifling expense for that service and the great benefit and advantage she gets from the canal over present conditions, rather than that all the people should pay it in taxes.

Our adversaries admit that this will be a great benefit to coastwise ships. They admit that with the canal they will be able to transport freight from coast to coast cheaper than the actual cost to the railroad companies, but they say if this toll is collected it will be added to the cost of the freight and will come out of the people who consume the commodities. The toll of half a dollar a ton of cargo freight is 2½ cents on the 100 pounds, and we believe that all of that will be absorbed before it gets to the ultimate consumer.

But suppose the shipowners and merchants will be as honest and fair as their advocates here promise and will allow all of this 2½ cents per hundred pounds of freight to go to the ultimate consumers, we contend that those who get that benefit should pay for it. Since it must be paid either by all the people in the way of tax through the Federal Treasury or by the particular people who live along the coast line and get the benefit of that little reduction of freight, those who get the direct benefit should pay for it and not the people throughout the balance of the country who do not get such benefit.

I am in favor of a parcel post and have been for years; but I believe that, if established, it should be made to pay expenses; that if the expense must be paid by all the people in the form of tax to make up the deficit caused by a parcel post in the Post Office Department or by the people who patronize it and get the direct benefit from it, every man should be required to pay the actual expense of the service which he gets, thus saving the department from a deficit and the masses of the people from additional taxation.

Again and again our opponents have spoken emphatically against what they are pleased to call a tollgate on this great national waterway. They refer to it as a tollgate, because ordinary tollgates on country roads, maintained by private corporations, are not popular with the masses. But let me remind gentlemen that they should not speak with derision just now of the tollgate, because only a few days ago this House, by a substantial majority, established a tollgate on every rural free-delivery route in the whole country, and placed at every such tollgate a local collector who will exact from the Government from $15 to $25 a mile a year for the use of the road for one horse and wagon. Verily our old Uncle Samuel is in hard luck. Last week the grangers picked one pocket by establishing tollgates against his rural free-delivery carriers, and now it is proposed to pick another of his pockets by refusing to permit a tollgate on the Panama Canal.

Mr. KNOWLAND and Mr. GOLDFOGLE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will yield first to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am one of those who joined in the minority report, as my colleague will remember.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. You were very quiet about it, though. I think it is a half-hearted support that my friend gives it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I give it my support fully, because I believe the coastwise trade ought to be exempted from the payment of tolls. I want to ask my colleague if he does not believe that if we provide for free toll to the coastwise vessels flying the American flag and plying only between American ports, the consumer will get the benefit of that exemption?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will answer that now.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It is not the coastwise vessel but the ultimate consumer that will get the benefit.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. That is the stock argument of the shipowners and great merchants who do the shipping. They all say that the benefit they will get by not paying any tolls will all percolate down through the shipowners, shippers, and merchants to the ultimate consumers. As I have explained heretofore, I do not believe that will happen. If the shippers and merchants pass on to the ultimate consumers the $3.50 per cargo ton which they will receive in addition to other advantages, I think the public will be satisfied. I do not believe they will do that, and if they get this additional gratuity of 50 cents a ton, they will absorb the most of that.

Mr. NYE and Mr. KNOWLAND rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will first yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. KNOWLAND. I want to correct the gentleman in one statement.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Now, excuse me. If the gentleman wishes to ask me a question I will yield, otherwise not.

Mr. KNOWLAND. This is in regard to a statement the gentleman made. He spoke of the gentlemen from the Pacific coast as if they were the only ones. Every leading commercial organization in New York have passed resolutions to that effect.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The Pacific coast people are the nerviest ones, the greediest ones, and the most selfish.

The coastwise ships now have a complete monopoly of coastwise trade. Foreign ships are not allowed to compete with them and they do not compete among themselves. There are many coastwise ship companies between which the coast and the business are divided. I do not say that they are organized into a trust, or that they have an express agreement to let each other alone and not interfere in each others' territory; but that is what happens. Each line has a monopoly of the trade of the ports between which its ships ply. What is true of the ship companies on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts is equally true of the Pacific coast. There is no competition between them. They do not interfere with or compete with each other. Each has its own territory and its own business, and I here make the prediction that when the canal is open, and whether absolutely free to them or not, they will not compete. They will divide the territory and business between them, as they are doing now, and make tremendous profits by reason of the great benefit and advantage which the canal will give them.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I want to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE] first.

Mr. NYE. I was going to ask the gentleman if he would allow me to suggest what his colleague from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] said about the consumer. I might suggest that there is no reason why the consumer of goods should want something for nothing. I must expect to pay the legitimate cost of the transportation of what I buy, just as much as I pay for the article itself, and all men ought to be willing to do that. If the cost of the canal is a legitimate tax upon commerce, every man who enjoys the benefit of that commerce ought to be willing to pay.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. That is exactly the gist of our side of this contention.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. The question I wanted to ask the gentleman from New York was this: Was there ever anything in the hearings developed before the committee to show that the coastwise ship companies always have a representative at any meeting held by the railroad companies at which rates are fixed?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I would not want to say as to that.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not a fact that they always do have a representative at such meetings, and that they always fix their rates about 20 per cent below the railroad rates?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Somebody said that all the steamship lines now are connected with railroads in business. The statement was made here. I do not know whether it is correct or not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I will say I made that statement, and it is true. I think, however, so far as the Pacific coast is concerned, after looking up the matter, I did overstate it there.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Then, that is another reason why you should not favor giving them any more advantage by way of subsidy than they now have.

I will restate some of the facts I have been over before, and try to make the argument so clear that gentlemen who have not read the evidence will see the absolute fairness of our contention. It now costs $4 per ton of freight to transfer it from ship to ship across the Isthmus. This expense will be saved when the ship floats through the canal, and the goods will not be damaged by breaking bulk twice; and the ship will do nearly one-third more business in the year by reason of not being tied up at the Isthmus during the process of loading and unloading. There are two tons of cargo freight in one net registered ton. This bill provides for tolls not to exceed $1.25 per net registered ton. That is the maximum. The chances are that the administrative officers will, on the start, fix a rate not exceeding $1 per net registered ton, which is equivalent to not more than half a dollar per ton cargo on the average.

All of the people built the canal and will fortify and protect it. We might as well charge off the $400,000,000 to profit and loss or to national defense, also the interest on the money, and the $20,000,000 a year that it will cost to protect it by detachments of our Army and Navy. It will cost, at a fair estimate, not less than $5,000,000 a year to maintain the canal, operate it, and sanitate and maintain a civil government on the zone. It will require 5,000,000 net registered tons at $1 a ton to pay this $5,000,000 expense. Since the Government will give the shipowners and shippers the benefit of $400,000,000 for the construction of the canal and $20,000,000 a year for its protection, we submit that the shipowners should pay the actual cost of passing their ships through the canal. That is all we ask, and we believe our contention is fair and just. While the canal will be as free as the rivers and harbors improved by the Government, we believe that the ship companies, the shippers, and people who get the greatest and most direct benefit of this cheap transportation at the expense of all the people should pay this trifling expense toward the maintenance and operation of the canal.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The gentleman's State of New York has built the Erie Canal at a cost of $130,000,000. Do they charge any dues for the use of that canal?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will answer that question, and I will differentiate the Erie Canal on principle from this proposition.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I do not object to yielding to the gentleman, but I can not run along on several lines at the same time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I knew the gentleman would not object, because I yielded to him yesterday.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will yield to the gentleman now, since he insists.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have been trying to follow the gentleman's line of argument, and if I understand it correctly it is that the ships will pay the tolls; that is, that they will bear the burden. As the gentleman knows, the coastwise trade of the United States is a monopoly.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman admits that, does he not?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do. No foreign ships can engage in our coastwise trade, and all the ships in the coastwise trade are kept upon a level, regardless of whether the tolls are charged or not. Under those circumstances, the coastwise trade being a monopoly, does the gentleman think the shipowner is going to bear that burden himself? Will he be that much of a philanthropist or will he pass it on?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will get to that. That is substantially the same argument that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] made.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to remind the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] that his time is very limited. I do not object to his losing time to gentlemen who want information, but I am well acquainted with the two gentlemen who are interrupting him, and I wish to say that they can not learn anything from him, and do not intend to, but they want to confuse his argument.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think that is a very unkind statement on the part of the gentleman from Georgia, considering the way in which I yielded to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will answer the gentleman's question by and by. I have already answered it once in reply to my colleague [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then I withdraw the question. I have not been here all the time.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. And now I will refer to the question submitted by the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], who says that the State of New York, where I was born and raised, and which I, in part, represent here, took off the tolls on the Erie Canal.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Expended $130,000,000 and took off the toll.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. We have expended a much larger sum on canals in the State of New York, and at present we are charging no tolls. But why? The Erie Canal was opened up to navigation in the year 1826. At that time the railroads were not very far developed. What is now the New York Central consisted of several short railroads operated by several different companies. After awhile Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was a genius in railroading, connected these various parts of track between Albany and Buffalo, and made them into the New York Central. After a few years a double track was laid, then four tracks. Later on the West Shore Road was built parallel with the New York Central and parallel with the canal. Those two roads and the canal run from Buffalo to Albany in a strip not anywhere I think over a mile wide, and in most cases not more than half a mile apart. The two railroads and the canal are right close together.

Mr. AKIN of New York. And within a few feet of each other in some places.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. What was the result? At first the boatmen on the canal made money and business was very lively, but as the New York Central developed its road and reduced the cost of carrying freight it cut into the canal business and by degrees drove the boatmen out of business, and as their old boats rotted down they could not afford to buy new ones, and so the canal was practically abandoned. Then it was up to the State of New York to do one of two things—to entirely abandon the canal and not take care of the feeders that pour the water into it—let it become an open, miasmatic, disease-breeding ditch, an eyesore to the whole State—or take off the tolls in the hope that the boatmen would still continue to use it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The tolls were not an obstruction to commerce, were they?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. They could not compete with the New York Central and pay tolls.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The tolls amounted to a very small sum, did they not?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. They were not heavy. What did they do next? They took off the tolls in 1883 in order to help the boatmen and keep the canal in existence. Then, along in the nineties, we appropriated $9,000,000 to improve the canal, to deepen it where it needed deepening, in order that the boatmen might haul larger loads and compete in business with the New York Central.

And yet they got the worst of it. They were not the kind of competitors to the New York Central lines which Buffalo and New York wanted; and a few years ago our State bonded itself for $101,000,000 to build what is known as the barge canal, which will float steam barges and carry larger cargoes and compete with the New York Central lines.

You people in the West, let me say right here, owe to New York a great obligation, greater than you are willing to recognize, because we paid for the canals, paid for keeping them up, and they have tended to reduce the freight rates not only on the New York Central, but on all the trunk lines running to the Atlantic seaboard, and the western people have gotten the benefit of these reduced rates for business in the Mississippi Valley and even farther on.

Now, why did we take off the tolls? Because the canal could not run without this help, and the boatmen needed it. I would not be in favor of putting any tolls on the commerce going through the Panama Canal if it were really a burden on the shippers—if they needed it to compete with the railroads. But they are now competing without the canal. In one lump they will get $4 a ton benefit. Out of that, all we ask them is to pay one-half dollar a ton on their freight for putting them through the canal.

Mr. POWERS. If the gentleman will pardon me, they not only compete with the $4 they have, but they are delivering the goods at cheaper rates.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Yes; so they can reduce the cost of transportation of freight from coast to coast $4 a ton and make a much bigger profit than they make now, because every ship will do from a quarter to a third more business than she is now doing, for the reason that she is tied up now nearly one-third of the time at the Isthmus.

Now, is that a parallel case with our Erie Canal? We took off the tolls on the Erie because the boats needed the help. We help in the Panama Canal the shippers and the shipowners to the extent of $4 a ton, which they meet now, and only ask them to pay the half dollar for the expense of running their ships through the canal, and this they refuse.

Mr. WARBURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. WARBURTON. The State of New York has spent very large sums to build the canals which they now give over to the use of the shippers. If the State of New York can afford to do that, can not the Government of the United States afford to spend $4,000,000 and give the shipping free tolls?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The State of New York has built the canals and sustained them in order to keep them in existence.

Mr. WARBURTON. The gentleman says the State makes them free.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I can not say about what it will do with the barge canal; that will be for the wisdom and judgment of the State. But if the barge owners can make a big profit and pay tolls and compete with the railroads I have no doubt the people will require them to pay tolls. We do not want to drive the railroads out of business any more than we want to drive the canals out of business. What we want is healthy, genuine competition. We did not give the canal boatmen the benefits of no tolls in the first instance for the simple reason that they did not need it. They tried to live and compete with the railroads, but could not do it, and then we took off the tolls, for it was necessary to do so to keep them in existence.

Mr. HILL. And that will not bring it back. The largest part of the business has everlastingly gone from the gentleman's canal—that is, the lumber trade—which has been entirely diverted to the extreme west and to the south, and the taking off of the tolls or the putting of them on will never in this world bring back that trade, which was more than half of the entire trade of the Erie Canal.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. That may be true. Mr. Chairman, to refer to what I started to say at the outset, when I was sidetracked by many questions, because the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is here, I recall that he made the statement that this is a question of the railroads against the people, and that he is for the people and we are for the railroads. My friends at home would smile if they heard anybody say that I am for the railroads as against the people. I have never in my life ridden a mile on a pass. I have never received a penny worth of favor, directly or indirectly, from any railroad. I have never received a dollar in fee from any railroad, nor do I own a share of stock in any one of them. I have tried many cases against the railroads, and when I get out of Congress I expect to try more if I get them. That is my relation with the railroads, and yet I am told that I am for them. I am not their friend in the sense that I would give them any undue advantage over shipowners, shippers, or anyone else. Neither am I their enemy in the sense that I would favor legislation that would tend to destroy or cripple them. I have never joined the anvil chorus against them for temporary popularity and votes. They have done much to extend our civilization and develop the magnificent resources of all our country. Were it not for the transcontinental railroads the most of your Pacific coast would yet be an unexplored wilderness and a sunburned and useless desert.

You are making this cry and appealing to the prejudice of the Congress and the country against the railroads in order to graft for your steamships and your shippers and your Pacific coast. [Applause.] This graft would inure to the benefit of only a small proportion of our coastwise ships. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] stated that only about 10 per cent of the ships engaged in our coastwise trade will pass through the canal, and that statement has not been challenged. You assert that this bill is in the interest of Wall Street parasites, and yet Mr. GOLDFOGLE and Mr. CALDER, the two gentlemen from New York City on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, are persistently against it. You are masquerading under the American flag in order to get this extra gratuity for your little crowd of selfish shipowners and shippers. [Applause.]

During this debate we have been entertained by a stream of patriotic declamations, largely from Pacific coast orators, about the American people, the American canal, the American flag, and American ships. You are trying to snuggle up to the American people that you may the more easily deceive and take advantage of them. You are trying to conceal your little coterie of shipowners and shippers in the ample folds of Old Glory that their bristles may not be discovered. You ring the changes on the canal, the crowning glory of engineering and scientific skill. You iterate and reiterate that it was built by American money, American genius, and American enterprise and that the American people should get the benefit of it. We quite agree with you, with the qualification that the ninety-odd millions of the American people who will have to pay for this grand canal should get a little of that benefit and that a small fraction of 1 per cent of the American people should not get it all. You are indeed generous as well as patriotic. You would concede to the American people all the glory of this great project if you could get all the gold.

If you are really patriotic and would like to have our flag survive on the ocean, why have you not said a word for our ships that are trying to continue in foreign commerce in competition with the ships of other nations? Why have you not urged the remission of tolls for them? They are sadly in need of help and our coastwise vessels are not. They will do all the business there is to be done. When the canal is open they will take nearly all the coast-to-coast traffic from the railroads if they care to do so.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] stated, with tears in his voice, that only 9 per cent of our foreign commerce is carried in American ships, and yet with equal earnestness he demands that the Pacific Mail steamships, which have been carrying most of this 9 per cent of our foreign commerce and struggling with fierce foreign competition to keep our flag on the high seas, be denied the use of the canal on any terms, for the owners of those vessels do not object to the rates of tolls proposed in this bill, and only ask that they be permitted to use the canal on equal terms with all other ship companies, foreign and domestic. Is this your brand of patriotism, and does this illustrate your anxiety to keep the American flag on our merchant marine on the high seas?

The issue between those who are supporting this bill and those who are opposing it is simply this: Its advocates insist that since the people at large pay for the construction, fortification, and protection of the canal those who use it should pay the necessary expenses to the Government of passing their ships through it; that this expense is properly a part of the freight charges and should be paid by those who buy and consume the goods, and should not be shifted onto the Government and ultimately on all the people in an additional tax.

We repeat that the shipowners who propose to use the canal now have a monopoly of coastwise trade and will have it after the canal is in operation; that they can afford to pay this trifling charge of about half a dollar on a ton of freight and make enormous profits; that if these tolls are remitted they will be absorbed before they get to the ultimate consumers; that the expense of putting ships through the canal must be paid either out of the Federal Treasury or by the ship companies. If paid from the Treasury, all the people will have to pay it in the form of tax. If paid by the ship companies, it will fall on those who get the immediate and direct benefit. We say that the ship companies should pay this moderate expense in the form of tolls. Our opponents say that all the people should pay it in the form of taxes. The vote will indicate who are the friends of the people and who are the friends of the selfish coastwise shipping monopoly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Not all of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the zone of land and land under water of the width of 10 miles extending to the distance of 5 miles on each side of the center line of the route of the canal now being constructed thereon, which zone begins in the Caribbean Sea 3 marine miles from mean low-water mark and extends to and across the Isthmus of Panama into the Pacific Ocean to the distance of 3 marine miles from mean low-water mark, excepting and excluding therefrom the cities of Panama and Colon and their adjacent harbors located within said zone, as excepted in the treaty with the Republic of Panama dated November 18, 1903, but including all islands within said described zone, and in addition thereto the group of islands in the Bay of Panama named Perico, Naos, Culebra, and Falmenco, and any lands and waters outside of said limits above described which are necessary or convenient, or from time to time may become necessary or convenient, for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation or protection of the said canal or of any auxiliary canals, lakes, or other works necessary or convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of said canal, the use, occupancy, or control whereof were granted to the United States by the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama, the ratifications of which were exchanged on the 26th day of February, 1904, shall be known and designated as the Canal Zone, and the canal now being constructed thereon shall hereafter be known and designated as the Panama Canal. The President is authorized to acquire by treaty with the Republic of Panama any additional land or land under water not already granted, or which was excepted from the grant, that he may deem necessary for the operation, maintenance, sanitation, or protection of the Panama Canal, and may, in like manner, exchange any land or land under water not deemed necessary for such purposes for other land or land under water which may be deemed necessary for such purposes, which additional land or land under water so acquired shall become part of the Canal Zone.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like the attention of the chairman of the committee to ask a question. Whether in his judgment it is wise to give the President of the United States authority to dispose of in any way land belonging to the United States without any restriction by Congress or some other power?

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, it is not our intention by this section to provide he can do that. There are two reasons for that last sentence of the section, which is, I suppose, what the gentleman alludes to.

Mr. WEEKS. I do.

Mr. ADAMSON. One is, the northern terminus of the canal at Colon is mighty closely mixed up with our town of Cristobal there. The harbors up to this time have been so near that we have never finally adjusted just exactly the harbor lines and boundaries. We do not know but we might need a little treaty work or purchase or exchange of a little land. The other reason is that the present arrangement for paying for this land we condemn is not satisfactory, and we hope the President will fix a treaty to provide better means as to that.

Mr. WEEKS. One more question. Is it proposed to exchange the land fronting on the Pacific south of the city of Panama in the Canal Zone for the frontage which it is desired to obtain in Colon?

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, there has been rumored such a tale to that effect, but I do not know there is any contemplation of it myself. That was not the purpose of putting this in the bill. It may be, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, desirable to the Republic of Panama we should aid them to secure another port in the territorial limits of their Republic, and we may want to help them do that.

Mr. WEEKS. One other question. Would the chairman of the committee object to striking out the words "in like manner," line 1, page 3, and insert "except with the consent of Congress"?

Mr. MANN. That would be impracticable.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not see how that is practicable. We want him to do whatever is necessary without any unnecessary specifying. Sometimes he can do better without making too much publicity and noise and discussion. I do not think there is any danger in authorizing him to do this. It is rather a small matter, but it may be large in consequences. We discussed this pretty thoroughly in the committee and fixed it in this way.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is recognized.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD? Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL. May I submit, just a moment? Night before last I asked the chairman of the committee a question, whether a railroad owning a steamship line starting from Halifax and going through the canal to Victoria, owned by the Grand Trunk Railroad, could not go under the terms of this bill where a steamship line owned by a railroad in the United States—could not start from Boston and go to Seattle. He gave me no reply then, but since then he has told me both roads are under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Now, I ask him as supplemental to that question if that is true of that traffic—in other words, has the Interstate Commerce Commission any control whatever over a steamship line starting from Halifax and going to Victoria, purely a Canadian trunk line in direct competition with an American trunk line, or if they only have control over such traffic as comes on their lines through the United States?

Mr. ADAMSON. My understanding was that the railroad section has not yet been reached, and it will be postponed when it is reached, and I do not understand that it will be in order to discuss this subject under this section of the bill.

Mr. HILL. I understand that; but I wanted to get the information before I extended my remarks. I will postpone it, however.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to say to the gentleman, though, by unanimous consent, that the highly esteemed Associated Press said that I snapped the gentleman off. I did not snap anybody off.

Mr. HILL. I wanted certain information. I do not understand that there was any discourtesy. I will say, furthermore, that on that evening after the House adjourned the gentleman kindly indicated the information to me.

Mr. ADAMSON. I then told the gentleman privately that the transactions of those railroads were subject to the act to regulate commerce, which they are. They have filed schedules and prices and rates, just like our railroads, and if they have any American connections they are all subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WEEKS. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] a question? I direct his attention to line 21, page 2, and inquire if that would necessitate that any treaty which the President made relating to this subject be submitted to the Senate for ratification?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. I think he could go ahead and make the treaty without our telling him to do so and submit it to the Senate.

Mr. WEEKS. Could he make a treaty without it being ratified by the Senate?

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir; not without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. You answered the other way a moment ago.

Mr. ADAMSON. I said he could proceed to negotiate a treaty without our expressing it in a statute. But he would have to submit it to the Senate in either event.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this last provision of section 1, not about the treaty, but about the exchange of land, it is for the purpose of permitting the President to acquire practically all the land in the Canal Zone which would be affected in any way whatever by the operation of the canal.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is another section that more fully provides for it than that. The object of this section, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, was twofold. One to authorize the President to change the harbor limits around the city of Colon and the other was we would like for him to modify that treaty under which we have been condemning the land.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the condition as to the treaty is one thing. That has to be ratified by the Senate in any event, and I am not sure but it would have to be ratified by the House. But the provision as to the exchange of land or land under water is by itself and must be for some purpose.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is it. That is a prudential provision.

Mr. MANN. It would authorize the President to exchange land which we own in Colon, as the owner of the Panama Railroad, for land on the Canal Zone which we need in operation of the canal but do not now own.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is right. It is to perfect the use of our property.

Mr. MANN. The language of this bill is not to exchange land or land under water in Panama, but I suppose it is not intended to permit the President to exchange any land in the United States, such as the Capitol Building, for instance, for land in the Canal Zone?

Mr. ADAMSON. Hardly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does this cover the situation on the Pacific end, where under a so-called modus vivendi the President and Secretary of War made some suggestion by which, if I recall correctly, Panama has now possession of certain lands which the United States needs and must pay for?

Mr. MANN. This, of course, will permit an exchange of titles.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will it ratify the action of the administration in that respect? There was a situation, if I recall correctly, although I have not looked the matter up, on the Pacific side. There were some lands under adjustment, and Panama got the best of the trade, and now we wish them back and will have to pay for something we originally had.

Mr. ADAMSON. We were endeavoring to draw language to authorize the adjustment of such things as that. If we did not do it accurately, it was our misfortune to draw it in that way.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the section. Under a misunderstanding the time in which I was to address the committee this afternoon was given elsewhere, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to address the committee at this time for 10 minutes on the general bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will ask the gentleman if he desires to discuss the bill generally or any particular section?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. In general.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent that he may address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, no citizen of the United States asks that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty be violated or abrogated. No patriotic citizen would sanction its violation. Hence the absorbing question to-day is, Will the Hay-Pauncefote treaty be violated if we give free passage through the Panama Canal to our own coastwise ships?

It was claimed yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota that Article X of the Constantinople convention gave to Turkey the right of free tolls through the Suez Canal for her Government and commercial vessels, and that if the convention had not so stated such free passage would have been in direct violation of the agreement.

If nothing could be done unless stipulated in the articles of agreement, in the clauses of the identical instrument itself, did not the United States violate the Hay-Pauncefote treaty within a short time after its proclamation by agreeing to give free passage through the canal to Panaman Government vessels when no mention of such possibility had been made in our treaty with Great Britain?

Did we again violate the Hay-Pauncefote treaty when Congress passed the necessary legislation and appropriations for fortifying the canal, no mention of our right to do so having been made in the treaty? These were matters in which England and the balance of the world were vitally interested, yet no real objection was made by any power on earth, for all recognized the territorial rights and responsibilities of the United States. If England and the world could find no valid objection to the free passage through our canal of the Government vessels of the United States and Panama, laden with soldiers, munitions of war, and supplies; if they could not and did not enter complaint when we made ready to fortify the canal, then indeed have we every right to assume that neither England nor any other nation will every seriously question our right to pass free our own coastwise merchantmen through our own canal, dug in our own soil, paid for with our own money, owned in detail and in toto by the United States, and to be operated and maintained for all time to come by the United States alone.

If England raised no objection to our doing certain things not mentioned in the treaty in which she is vitally interested, she can never object to granting free tolls to that part of our own commerce of which she never can under any circumstances have a part.

If we have any moral or legal right to fortify the canal, or to give free passage to vessels belonging to the United States or to Panama, then have we equal or even greater right to give free tolls to at least that part of our own commerce in which no ship of any other nation can ever participate? We have the right and it is our duty to exercise it.

Gentlemen on the floor have said that the question of free tolls was purely local and was interesting and beneficial to Pacific coast people only.

The transportation of the products of this country should and does benefit the grower, the transportation company, the consumer, and all those connected directly and indirectly with the labor and the marketing thereof. The Atlantic coast, the Pacific coast, the Gulf coast, the Lake shores, the Middle East, and the Middle West will all benefit by a reduction in transportation rates.

Low water rates can not long obtain without causing some similar reduction in rail rates, and whether a blanket scheme or zone plan of railroad rates is in existence, the effect of low water rates from coast to coast will be felt throughout the length and breadth of the land.

I believe that free tolls will not only add greatly to the prosperity of those who live and do business beside or near our seashores and great rivers, but that it will be of even greater benefit, individually and collectively, to those who live in interior communities, far removed from either ocean or great river.

The West and the Middle West will not only gain through reduced blanket or zone rates following low water rates, but will be an extraordinary gainer through the quick development of every square mile of territory adjacent or tributary to the overland railroads.

When the volume of through overland business is lessened, because of coast-to-coast water competition, then the great transcontinental railways will hasten into intense cultivation and promotion of their own territorial resources. Farmers and factories and new communities will be encouraged, new railroad lines—feeders to the main lines—will be built, and a prosperity greater than any yet seen will come to those who now are mistakenly fearful.

The building of the second transcontinental railway did not lessen or stop the growth along the first one, nor did the third one injure either the second or the first, nor the fourth one decrease the prosperity in territories adjacent to either of the others; indeed, the coming of each new road really and truly added to the business and the general welfare and prosperity of all communities near the previously built overland lines.

Low-rate interoceanic communication will develop the interior as well as the coast sections of our country.

AS TO OWNERSHIP OF STEAMSHIP LINES.

We of the Pacific coast know what railroad-owned steamships mean. We have lived for more than 30 years under railroad domination. We long to be free, and we will be free. The Southern Pacific Railroad Co. owns a little more than half of the stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. and has controlled it absolutely.

For many years the Pacific Mail steamships were the only ones carrying freight or pasesngers between Panama and the United States. Whenever another line was organized the Pacific Mail would at once reduce its rates one-half or two-thirds and starve out its competitor. For 20 years the Pacific Mail steamers stopped at only one port in the United States—San Francisco. It did not and would not stop at Port Harford, Hueneme, Santa Barbara, San Pedro, Los Angeles, Redondo, or San Diego—all United States Pacific ports between San Francisco and our southern boundary.

"Not enough business to warrant" was the excuse it made; yet Los Angeles territory in 1911 produced: Citrus fruits, 46,400 carloads; vegetables (carloads), celery, 2,000; cabbage, 600; tomatoes, 250; potatoes, 1,200; onions, 400; cauliflower, 700; lettuce, 150; sweet potatoes, 50; assorted, 1,000. Nuts, 9,000 tons; cantaloupes, 1,625 carloads; raisins and dried fruits, 6,000 tons; canned goods, 760,000 cases; olives, pickled, 1,000,000 gallons; olive oil, 500,000 gallons; beet sugar, 200,000,000 pounds; wine and brandy, 3,500,000 gallons; petroleum, 74,000,000 barrels; beans, 65,000 tons; cotton, 8,000 bales; barley, 45,000 tons; and received from the East thousands of carloads of building and general supplies of every kind.

"Not enough business" at Los Angeles, a city having 102,000 people in 1900, 201,000 in 1905, 319,000 in April, 1910, and 400,000 in December, 1911!

"Not enough business" at Los Angeles, a city whose building permits amounted in value to more than $1,000,000 monthly for 10 years past, and totaled more than $23,000,000 in 1911!

"Not enough business" at Los Angeles, a city whose postoffice receipts grew from $260,000 in 1900 to $1,646,000 in 1911, and whose bank clearings advanced from $114,993,000 in 1900 to $946,000,000 in 1911!

"Not enough business" at the American ports above mentioned! Yet from 15 to 25 stops were made at places and ports having from a few hundred to a very few thousand people along the west coast of Mexico, between the United States and Panama, that had no Southern Pacific rail lines.

"Not enough business" was only an excuse; the reason for not stopping was that the Southern Pacific Railway owned and controlled the Pacific Mail steamships, and it was far more profitable to the Southern Pacific Railroad to decrease the tonnage by water and increase it by rail from United States ports, so long as other steamship lines could be kept off the ocean.

I will place in the RECORD a telegram dated March 12 from and resolutions adopted March 14, 1912, by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, an organization with a membership of 3,300 of the best business men in southern California:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., March 12, 1912.

Hon. WM. D. STEPHENS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce reiterates its earnest and solemn protest to placing a tollgate at entrance to Panama Canal to collect tax in name of toll against American commerce and shipping engaged in coastwise trade, thus discriminating against people of Pacific coast by levying tax that is not exacted against vessels or craft engaged in similar coastwise commerce in Soo Canal, Erie Canal, and various rivers made navigable at Government's expense, in which Pacific coast bears its proportionate share. This chamber is also absolutely opposed to permitting ships owned or controlled wholly or in part by railway companies to engage in coastwise traffic through Panama Canal.

THE LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
H. Z. OSBORNE, President.

RESOLUTION IN RE PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Los Angeles, Cal., March 14, 1912.

Resolved by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, That we reaffirm the statement of the principles and policy involved in the resolutions adopted by this chamber as a member of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast, October 2, 1911, as follows:

"Whereas the building of the Panama Canal was undertaken by the people of the United States in pursuance of a great national policy, amongst other things, of providing for the national defense, of opening up the shortest possible water route between the respective coasts of the United States and foreign countries, to provide through natural methods and to prevent monopoly of transportation and means for transportation between the various sections of the Union at the lowest possible cost, to build up and expand our commerce with foreign nations, and incidentally to encourage the upbuilding of a now decadent merchant marine: Be it

"Resolved, That there should be no tolls charged through the Panama Canal to vessels coastwise flying the American flag; and be it further

"Resolved, That we heartily approve of the legislation recommended by President Taft in his message to Congress of December 6, 1910, reading as follows:

"'I can not close this reference to the canal without suggesting as a wise amendment to the interstate-commerce law a provision prohibiting interstate-commerce railroads from owning or controlling ships engaged in the trade through the Panama Canal. I believe such a provision may be needed to save to the people of the United States the benefit of the competition in trade between the eastern and western seaboards, which this canal was constructed to secure.'

"Resolved, That the recent action of the majority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives in relation to Panama Canal tolls is at variance in all essential particulars with the foregoing statement of the principles and policy which, in our opinion, should govern legislation on this subject, and we desire to emphasize the protest which this chamber has heretofore made to this proposed action of Congress by transmitting a copy of this resolution to every Member of the House of Representatives and to every United States Senator."

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of the resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce at the regular meeting held Wednesday, March 13, 1912.

H. Z. OSBORNE, President.

Attest:

FRANK WIGGINS, Secretary.

And now I beg to read to you the following letter and recommendations of the Railroad Commission of California:

RAILROAD COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, March 16, 1912.

Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: Inclosed herewith you will find a copy of a resolution which was passed by the railroad commission at a meeting this morning with reference to the Panama Canal bill which is now pending before Congress. Before taking action the commission held a public hearing and made a careful investigation, on its own initiative, into the law and the facts. We believe that all three recommendations are sound in law and policy alike and would urge you strongly to do whatever you can to secure their incorporation into the Panama Canal bill.

Thanking you very much for your assistance in this matter, we remain,

Respectfully,

RAILROAD COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
By MAX THELEN, Commissioner.

RAILROAD COMMISSION OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, March 16, 1912.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA IN RE PANAMA CANAL BILL.

After a public hearing and a careful investigation into the law and the facts, the Railroad Commission of the State of California makes the following recommendations in the matter of the Panama Canal bill now pending before Congress:

(1) We recommend that vessels owned, operated, or controlled by railroads and engaged in whole or in part in coastwise trade be barred from the Panama Canal and suggest the advisability of extending this principle so as to make it unlawful for any railroad to own, operate, or control any common carrier by water with which such railroad does or may compete for traffic between points within the United States.

Under the decision of the United States Supreme Court on the so-called commodities clause in the interstate-commerce act, in the case of United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co. (213 U. S., 366), we believe there can be no doubt as to the legal right of the Government to compel a railroad to sell its holdings in a steamship line. We can find no valid reason in governmental policy against this recommendation. The inevitable result of permitting railroads to own, operate, or control competing steamship lines through the Panama Canal, as shown by the history of the coastwise traffic of this country, will be to crush out every independent line, to give to the railroads the control of the Panama Canal, and consequently to keep freight rates higher than they normally would be. We would refer in this connection to the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the case of Railroad Commission of Nevada v. Southern Pacific Co. (21 I. C. C. R., 329), decided on June 22, 1911, in which case the history of steamship competition in this country is fully explained.

(2) We recommend that American shipping engaged in coastwise trade through the canal be exempt from the payment of tolls.

Under the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Olsen v. Smith (195 U. S., 332), it is clear that the United States may carry out this recommendation. The provision in section 1 of article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to the effect that "The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect to the conditions of charges of traffic or otherwise," whatever the full effect thereof may be, certainly does not apply to coastwise traffic, for the reason that as American vessels may alone engage in such traffic there can be no question of discrimination as against the vessels of other nations. The Olsen case squarely sustains this position.

The remission of tolls on vessels engaged in the coastwise trade will make it possible for them to lower to that extent the freight rates which they would otherwise have to charge, and in this way the American people will secure a reduction in freight rates to which they are clearly entitled as the result of the tremendous sums which they have expended in the construction of the canal.

We use the words "American people" advisedly. We do not concede that the lower freight rates between coast points, brought about by water competition through the canal, can in any wise injure interior localities. On the one hand, the free movement of traffic between coast points not only will operate for the benefit of these localities, but such benefit will be reflected far inland and the general prosperity of the country will necessarily result. On the other hand, lower freight rates to coast points will not operate disadvantageously to the interior by increasing rates to and from interior points. It is well established that railroads may not lower their rates to meet competition to such an extent as to burden other traffic. If rightly regulated the railroads of the United States must give reasonable rates to all points, and reasonable rates are all that they can be forced to give. The fact that a less than reasonable rate is put in by railroad companies voluntarily to meet water competition does not justify such railroad in putting any different rate in effect elsewhere than it could legally put in if it did not meet such competition. The result, then, of free competition through the canal will be a lower rate to coast points than would otherwise prevail, which lower rate to the coast points will have its effect to that point in the interior where the local freight rate from the coast to such point plus the steamship rates equals the transcontinental rate from the opposite coast point. Much of the interior, therefore, will be better off than it now is and none of it can be worse off because, as we have stated, the railroads must accord the same reasonable rate when they meet competition as they are allowed under the law to give when they do not meet such competition.

(3) We recommend that American shipping engaged in foreign trade and using the Panama Canal be likewise exempted from the payment of tolls, or that subsidies equivalent in amount at least to those paid by other Governments to their ships using the canal be provided by the United States.

Otherwise the United States, which built the canal at a tremendous outlay, will be the only Nation whose vessels are sailing through the canal without Government assistance. We do not believe that there is anything in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to prevent such action on the part of the United States. The treaty provides that the rules of neutralization to govern the canal are to be substantially the same as those which govern the use of the Suez Canal. The vessels of Great Britain and other nations using the Suez Canal receive subsidies from their governments and no one has ever contended that the principle of equality in the use of the canal is thereby violated. In the same way the United States can clearly pay subsidies to her vessels using the Panama Canal, and what she can do directly by the payment of subsidies she certainly can do indirectly by the remission of tolls in the same amount.

We respectfully direct the attention of California's Representatives in Congress to these recommendations, and urge that they do all in their power to secure their adoption in the Panama Canal bill.

JOHN M. ESHLEMAN,
H. D. LOVELAND,
ALEX GORDON,
MAX THELEN,
E. O. EDGERTON,
Railroad Commission of California.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, free tolls and free oceans for coastwise shipping is the wish of the people. You and I know the American people well enough to believe that nothing short of free tolls and free oceans will ever satisfy them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. I ask permission, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS] and other remarks from time to time from gentlemen from all over the country, and I have read a great many editorials and press dispatches on this subject of the railroads and the Panama Canal. I think we are making pretty good progress in this country. I am in harmony with the gentleman on the question of tolls, but sometimes I wonder, as I have lived somewhat beyond the generation in which I grew up, whether gentlemen forget what has been done in this country.

I recollect when in the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad they halted when the work was half finished, and it was a burning question in this House whether there was not some way to compel them to finish. There had come a touch of hard times, but they did finish, and I recollect very well when the golden spike was driven that gave us the first transcontinental railroad. I recollect that away back in 1850 that man was said to be a dreamer who expected to see the two oceans united by rail. I have seen land grants made, although I was not in Congress when they were first made, to the transcontinental railroads. I have seen land grants given to the Illinois Central Railroad when those magnificent black acres were not even located with 70-cent military land warrants. The value came to those lands with the construction of the railroad.

Then, in my recollection, I have seen the United States grow in population from 20,000,000 to nearly 100,000,000 people. How anxious we were to get the railroads! How we agonized! Now we see them cross the deserts and tunnel the mountains.

I have great respect for the men who had the courage and for the country that had the good sense and the courage to support them in the days of their infancy. They would not do everything that we all wanted them to do, but, after all, they did dead work for a long time. It is one thing to sell a cent or a half-cent commutation ticket and make a trip every 15 minutes and quite another thing to have the work of the tracks and the trains three-quarters dead work.

With all the magnificent progress we have made, looking backward as well as forward, and imagining what the future of the country may be, I am not inclined to criticize much what this railroad may have done or what that railroad may have done when struggling for existence. I am glad that they have done well, but they could only have done well through the development of the country.

I am glad that the Golden Gate and Los Angeles are now connected by the great bands of iron with 90,000,000 other people in the United States. I am glad the citrus fruits come to us. I am glad that they come cheaply. We might get them a little cheaper if we were not broad enough in our citizenship and legislation to protect them from competition by a very round rate of duty. It is all right, I presume, but once in a while I grow weary when some people, who are younger than I am, think they can obtain political advantage in abusing the "wicked railroads." When the time came to regulate the freight charges and the passenger charges, as the population increased, when they did things we thought they ought not to have done and charged too much, we passed an interstate-commerce law, and our respective States are now legislating on that subject.

I just wondered whether my California friend, whom I have heard once or twice criticize pretty severely the existing conditions, would be willing or glad to tear up the railroad tracks that reach from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I am with him as to the canal, and I am with him as to tolls, but let us give a little credit to that generation that has crossed over, which led in making all these things possible. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is recognized.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the discussion that has been heard here, relative to the power of this Government to grant free tolls to American shipping, or as to whether by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty it has deprived itself of all power in the premises, even to grant free tolls or reduced rates of toll——

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want the distinguished gentleman from Ohio to have opportunity to debate this subject, but under the agreement we had we thought we would try to get along with the uncontested sections, and then when we have finished them, have some debate on the others.

Mr. WILLIS. I was temporarily absent from the Chamber, and did not know that such an arrangement had been made. If the gentleman desires I can postpone my remarks.

Mr. ADAMSON. We thought we would get along with the uncontested portions of the bill, and have more liberal debate when we reach these sections.

Mr. GARNER. Do I understand the gentleman from Georgia to mean that when we reach section 5 and section 11, he intends to tail them at the end of the docket, and take them up after the so-called uncontested sections have been disposed of?

Mr. ADAMSON. It has already been ordered that when these two sections are reached they be passed without prejudice and come up last in the consideration of the bill. I think it is right that there should be a little more liberality of debate on those two sections.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not object, and if it is desirable I will withhold my remarks until we reach that page in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all laws, orders, regulations, and ordinances adopted and promulgated in the Canal Zone by order of the President for the government and sanitation of the Canal Zone and the construction of the Panama Canal are hereby ratified and confirmed as valid and binding until Congress shall otherwise provide. The existing courts established in the Canal Zone by Executive order are recognized and confirmed to continue in operation until Congress shall otherwise provide.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This section confirms and ratifies the laws, orders, regulations, and ordinances heretofore adopted and promulgated in the Canal Zone and makes them binding until Congress shall otherwise provide.

It seems to me that if we ratify the laws which have been already promulgated in the Canal Zone by order of the President, and propose practically to give the President the responsibility of managing the canal and the Canal Zone, he ought to have authority to change these laws, orders, regulations, and ordinances from time to time. It is practically impossible for Congress to do it.

Now, I understand the objection to letting the President run the zone as he pleases, and yet it is not a mere personal matter. There will be, from time to time, the necessity of making minor changes in the ordinances, orders, regulations, and perhaps the laws upon the Canal Zone. It is not proposed here to give the parties responsible for the government there even the power that the District Commissioners have now in the District of Columbia while Congress itself is in session. You could not make a change of a police order. You could not make a change of an order in reference to licensing saloons or anything of the sort. You can not make any change of any kind. The laws, ordinances, regulations, and orders now in force will become in practice what the laws of the Medes and Persians were in theory. Theoretically they changed not. They have been changed, but practically these Canal Zone laws and regulations can not be changed unless you confer power upon somebody to make the changes, because it is not practically possible for Congress to make police regulations or to change police regulations from time to time on the Canal Zone.

Mr. WEEKS. Before the gentleman from Illinois takes his seat I should like to ask him why it is not as practicable for Congress to make laws for the Canal Zone as it is to make laws for Alaska?

Mr. MANN. Well, because it is not practicable for Congress to make laws for Alaska we have just provided a Territorial legislature for Alaska, and everyone knows that the management of the government of Alaska has never been satisfactory, certainly not since people were there.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And even then they had an extension of the Oregon Code in relation to Alaska.

Mr. ADAMSON. Exactly what you have here. You have a confirmation and extension of every law that is now in existence there.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Illinois contends that it is not practicable for Congress to make laws for the Canal Zone. The impracticability in the past has consisted of a jealousy on the part of the friends of the Panama Canal Commission, both in the Senate and in the House. There is no difficulty in the way of our making the laws for the Panama Canal Zone, and I welcome section 2 in this bill as a resumption by Congress of its constitutional duty of making the laws. Ever since the expiration of the Fifty-eighth Congress there has been no legal government on the Panama Canal Zone. The President has been legislating by Executive order. There is serious doubt whether Congress has the right to direct the President expressly to perform its functions of enacting laws. There is no doubt in my mind that we have been to blame for leaving the situation as it is. The President has been less to blame than Congress. He could perhaps do no more and no less than he has done, but Congress has been to blame in failing to enact laws for the Panama Canal Zone. I doubt whether in the history of international law there has been any other de facto government, such as has existed for six or seven years on the Canal Zone, except perhaps one which was called into existence by some military necessity.

That this extralegal government has existed on the Canal Zone is the fault of Congress. We have permitted the government down there to be a government of man and not a government by law, and section 2 of the bill proposes to cure that defect. I welcome, as I say, a resumption by Congress of its constitutional duty of passing the laws.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to concur with the gentleman from New York in regard to section 2, confirming these Executive orders and existing courts. The first idea seems to have been on the Canal Zone that the Canal Commission would act as a sort of legislative body, and would pass necessary ordinances to govern the population that was there. The commission actually did for about six months enact what they called ordinances, that are now published in book form, running from No. 1 to No. 24, ordinances of the commission. Thereafter, for some reason or other, the enactment of these ordinances by the commission ceased—whether because they could not go on as a legislative body, or because of some disagreement between the administrative officers, or for some other reason—but thereafter they began to have Executive orders, issued by the President, presumably at the suggestion of the chief engineer of the canal as he saw, from time to time, some necessity for a legal abyss that must be filled.

These Executive orders, if gentlemen have taken the time to examine them, will be found to be fragmentary statutes, torn out of the statute books of every State in the Union that happened to seem to fit the case, upon all questions of civil rights, from the right to practice a profession to the administration of estates of deceased persons. They are the most chaotic, ill-digested mass of legislation that any section of the world is laboring under to-day. We are undertaking to confirm those, because the people are now living under them. Where there is a gap and a question comes up in one of the local courts, and there is a gap in that particular in the chain of Executive orders, the principle of international law is supposed to apply, that where one nation acquires territory that is under a code of laws established by a civilized government, that code of law is supposed to continue until it is superseded by the express legislation of the new sovereign State. So these gaps are supposed to be filled up by the Colombian law. But it does not fill the gaps at all, because it is a diverse system of jurisprudence, as we all know.

So the American judge down there can not administer the Colombian law. I do not know but one case where he ever tried to do it, and that was a recent case where a passenger was injured on the Panama Railroad and he undertook to sue the railroad company, and they held that he could not, because he had proved the express negligence of the engineer, and under the Colombian law there was no doctrine of respondeat superior and the negligence of an employee was not chargeable to the employer.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Did that case go to the supreme court?

Mr. BORLAND. It is in the supreme court of the zone now. The duty of Congress will be, under this section, to provide a form of legislation down there. If we are going to have a military zone, with everybody excluded except by the express permission of the military governor, we will not need any code of laws; but if we are not to have a military zone, as I hope we are not, if we are going to have commercial towns there and independent American trades, as I hope we will, we will have to have a commercial code. We will have to have some such code as England made for the Empire of India; we will have to provide a codification of laws, with perhaps the aid of the American Bar Association, or some other body, and have a codification of American laws and pass them as England made the evidence act applicable to the commercial cities of India. There is no reason why Congress could not and should not legislate for the Canal Zone as it does legislate for the District of Columbia.

Therefore for the time being there seems to be nothing else for the committee at present in presenting the bill to do but to ratify the fragmentary legislation, the Executive orders that have been issued, applicable to the zone.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of making a slight contribution to history I rise to oppose the gentleman's motion. When we acquired the Canal Zone we passed a law which was practically the duplicate of the law for the first government of the Louisiana Purchase, authorizing the President to exercise the civil, military, and judicial functions on the zone until the end of the then Congress. That Congress expired; but before its expiration I had introduced a bill for the government of the Panama Canal Zone. That bill went through the House, passed the Senate with an amendment, and was in conference. The conferees on the part of the House and the conferees on the part of the Senate were deadlocked. There did not seem to be very much chance for an agreement. In the closing hours of that Congress President Roosevelt sent for the conferees on the part of the House and the conferees on the part of the Senate, or a portion of them, and a consultation was had with reference to the conference. Neither side seemed willing to concede. I asked the President, "Suppose there is no agreement and no law passed providing for government on the Panama Canal Zone, and the existing law which ends with this Congress expires, what will be done upon the Canal Zone? Will you have nerve to have order preserved there under your directions or will you let chaos reign there because the two Houses of Congress do not agree on the methods to be prescribed?" The President said that if Congress did not provide any law for the continuation of the government on the Canal Zone he would take the responsibility as President of the United States and supreme over the Isthmian Canal Commission and in charge of the construction of the canal and preserve order and government on the Canal Zone. a position which it was entirely proper for him to take and which showed that he was willing to meet a responsibility when it came before him.

On several occasions since then the House has passed a bill providing for the government of the Canal Zone, and on every occasion, when my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. HARRISON] was a Member of the House, he opposed the bill, not because he did not believe in having a government on the Canal Zone, but because he believed in a different method of providing for the government. We now have a government there, and they have had it ever since. Some people call it—as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] did on yesterday—absolutism.

Mr. ADAMSON. I said it had been so denominated. I justify the conduct of the President myself in continuing the government.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I have always agreed in reference to it, that the President could do nothing else. At first, under the original authority, the Isthmian Canal Commission made ordinances and laws, but when the authority of Congress had expired and the President assumed jurisdiction, whenever they made orders after that it was by order of the President, because that was the only responsibility they have. The criticism that I made a moment ago was that while we ratify all those orders we make no provision whatever for any change, slight or otherwise, in those laws or orders on the Canal Zone until Congress shall hereafter provide.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the President is authorized to declare by Executive order that all land and land under water within the limits of the Canal Zone is necessary for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of the Panama Canal, and to extinguish, by agreement when advisable, all claims and titles of adverse claimants and occupants. Upon failure to secure by agreement title to any such parcel of land or land under water the adverse claim or occupancy shall be disposed of and title thereto secured in the United States and compensation therefor fixed and paid in the manner provided in the aforesaid treaty with the Republic of Panama, or such modification of such treaty as may hereafter be made.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. That section is not very long and its purpose is very clear. It is to permit the President, without any further legislation, to acquire all of the land we do not now own in the Canal Zone. I call attention to the map which is here before us, showing in colors the Canal Zone. As I understand it, that map shows in pink the land that was formerly Government land of the Republic of Colombia which became the public land of the Government of Panama after the revolution. The land which is marked in yellow is claimed to be concessions belonging to the New Panama Canal Co., which passed by its sale to the United States Government; and the land shown in red, as I understand it, is land expressly acquired since by treaty, by condemnation, or purchase from private owners for various purposes, for the cuts and fills, and so on, of the canal. So that the United States Government claims now to be the owner, either as assignee of the New Panama Canal Co. or by the treaty with the Panama Republic, of all of the land which is not colored green. In other words, it claims to be the owner of about 60 per cent of the land now in the zone. About 40 per cent of the land in the zone the United States admits is in the ownership of private individuals, but a great deal of that in pink and yellow is under private occupation. The treaty provides for a commission to be appointed, composed one-half of citizens of Panama and one-half of citizens of the United States.

There has been only one of those commissions held so far as I know—I think that is correct—which is known as the Denby Commission, which passed upon a number of claims and paid out a large amount of money in awards, much larger than American officials thought was right and much smaller than the claimants were asking. The results of that commission were so unsatisfactory to the Canal Commission and the chief engineer that he bitterly opposed any more commissions under treaty, and I understand that he has followed the good old soldierly way of taking the land needed and leaving the parties to litigate. A great many of the claims on litigation will probably have to be paid. How much they will involve nobody knows. It is certain there is one place where we paid $90,000 for the claim of a mere occupier after the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone said the party in possession had no title to the land whatever. How much those other claims are I am not able from memory or from data in my possession at present to say, but I do know that the 40 per cent to be acquired will cost an immense amount of money for which no possible justification can be urged at this time. We have acquired all the land necessary for the construction of the canal, for cuts and fills, and borrow pits and overflows, and all necessary results of construction. Now, of whatever land we did own, none has been sold. We passed an act of Congress in 1909 providing that 25-year leases might be made on Government land down there under certain conditions. It is provided that the man desiring a farming lease must be a householder, a head of a family, and it must be for agricultural purposes, and there are other conditions, but there is no provision for the sale. There has been an insistent demand there among discharged employees or employees about to leave the canal for the right to buy this Government land, and not having that right they have been going outside the line of the Canal Zone in every direction and buying it there; that is, the white American employees. It never seemed to me incompatible with the purposes of the safety of the canal that they should be permitted to buy land on the zone in preference to any other American citizen, and it certainly seems to me that reasonable quantities of such land——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be unkind and cut off gentlemen, and do not want to begin an oppressive system. However, I want to give notice that, while I will not object this time, I will after this commence to object. I did not want to object to Uncle JOE, because he is an old patriarch; but I am going to begin to object.

Mr. BORLAND. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that I appreciate his courtesy in the matter, and yet I think that this is quite an important matter in this bill that, in the overshadowing importance of the question of rates and some of these other matters in the bill, has been entirely overlooked, and it has not consumed any of the time of the House in debate. It is a matter that is going to involve a tremendous liability upon the people of this country, and will add to the cost of that canal considerably. I think that section 3 is one of the important sections in the bill, and I think that the House can justly give 10 minutes to it, or possibly even more time than that. Now, the Committee on Appropriations of the House will be asked, if this bill is passed in its present form, to begin to provide annual appropriations for the purpose of purchasing chunks of land. How much that is going to figure up, how many years in the future it will continue, not a man in this House can tell. The more the facilities down there increase and the more the canal is used, the higher the price of land will be, because it is just exactly like here in the city of Washington, that every time the United States Government undertakes to buy more land it finds out that the Government has improved the land up to a higher value, and we must pay more money for it. There is not any reason, so far as I have been able to see from observation from three trips down there, why any more land should be acquired by the Federal Government. There is no reason given for it except the report of the Chief of Engineers to the effect that he wants to erect earthworks around each available point of the canal. Now, earthworks are a form, I suppose, of military protection.

I do not personally believe that earthworks are going to protect that canal, even if there are 8,000 soldiers behind them. I do not believe, if we could clear off every foot of that land and put it entirely under military supervision that that would have the certainty of protecting the canal, because it is only 5 miles at the farthest point to any one of those locks from foreign territory. If anyone is going to destroy them at all, it is not going to be a man who walks down there with a handful of dynamite in his pocket, but it is going to be some fellow who will sneak down there in the night with an airship and drop enough dynamite on it to drive it to kingdom come. So it is doubtful whether the surrounding of the canal with earthworks is going to protect the locks or the clearing off of the 5-mile zone is going to protect the locks. The greatest protection to the locks may be the presence of a commercial and agricultural population, if we can induce such a population to go there. The greatest protection to the locks will be a commercial city there, in which every citizen is interested.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman has visited the zone and he has seen the land. Is he under the impression that he can secure American settlers to settle upon this land?

Mr. BORLAND. The very gentleman who stated that the land was of little value stated a little further along in his hearing that he was having constant applications to let them for that purpose.

Mr. SABATH. Who was the gentleman who made that reply?

Mr. BORLAND. Col. Goethals. And I will say that here is a road built by the United States Government, half at its own expense and half by English capitalists, that leads to a plantation that is owned by English capitalists, who grow large quantities of chocolate beans and rubber trees.

Mr. SABATH. It is really the only foreign corporation there?

Mr. BORLAND. I understand there is one down at Frijoles. I have not been at all of them.

Mr. SABATH. You have not been present at all the hearings.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this amendment shall close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. ADAMSON. I can not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] moves that all debate close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has an entirely erroneous idea as to why we are on the Isthmus of Panama. We did not acquire this 10-mile strip across the Isthmus for agricultural purposes. We acquired it there for the purpose of building a great Isthmian Canal and to enable vessels to pass from one ocean to the other in the interests of commerce and as a military necessity whenever that occasion should arise. But I do not believe that we ought to give any considerable consideration to the idea of agricultural pursuits on that zone. The evidence before the committee was very clear that it would be a failure for that purpose.

Mr. ADAMSON. If we did, it would only be our people.

Mr. HAMLIN. I recall that the evidence showed that the Agricultural Department expended a considerable sum of money in experimenting down there in the growing of Temperate Zone products, such as Americans would have to have if they lived there, and that was an absolute failure. We might grow a little rubber or might grow some of the tropical plants, but that is not what Americans would want; and I do not believe that any American wants that Canal Zone populated by anybody but Americans, if it is to be populated at all.

But I want to call the committee's attention to this fact: When you get right down to the absolute facts in the matter it is only about 6 or 7 miles from Colon up to Gatun Dam, and then for over 30 miles that whole zone is practically inundated by the lake. Something like 150 square miles will be covered by water in order to make a lake where the vessels will float from the Gatun Dam over to the locks on the other side, and there is only a small portion of that zone that could be used for agricultural purposes. I do not want to be understood as claiming that this canal was constructed for military purposes only. I do not believe that. But I believe we had two purposes, and one was a military purpose and the other a commercial purpose—commercial in this, that we were providing a way for sending the ships from one ocean over to the other. We had no idea of agricultural pursuits, and none can be conducted there with any profit, it seems to me. I am sure not by Americans. And it is my judgment that as to this little narrow strip of land across that zone it is absolutely necessary and perfectly essential to the Government to control every foot of it. Then, if we want to use it for this purpose or for that other purpose we may do so. But I believe that we ought to extinguish the title of those private parties who claim to own some title to this land.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Has the gentleman any estimate of what it will cost to extinguish those titles?

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not.

Mr. ADAMSON. It can be safely said that it will be less than the $400,000,000 that is to be expended on the canal. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMLIN. We had no real estimate as to what the construction of the canal would cost when we commenced, but this acquisition of land is in connection with that general project on the Isthmus.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has been down there and has seen this land?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes. But the gentleman ought not to "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." His argument last night was that we ought to put all American ships through the canal free, at the expense of the American people; and yet when we are talking about acquiring title to the military reservation down there he raises his hands in holy horror and assures us that it will cost too much.

Mr. BORLAND. That is not a parallel case, to buy land that we do not need.

Mr. HAMLIN. We may need it.

Mr. BORLAND. Can the gentleman show on the map a single piece of land that we need that we have not already acquired?

Mr. HAMLIN. I would say that the gentleman might with equal reason get up and argue that we have too much land surrounding this Capitol; that we can not use it and do not need it and ought to dispose of it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make peace in Missouri by offering the suggestion to the warring colleagues that the ship companies, if given their tolls, will make enough money to pay for all this land. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMLIN. I am satisfied that the Government would lose enough tollage, if we would put private ships through the canal free of charge, as my colleague wants us to do, to pay for all the land we may acquire on the zone.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HAMLIN. I do.

Mr. GARNER. I have heard a great deal about the Shipping Trust and the shipping monopoly. If that exists, have we not laws to destroy it? And if it does exist, why is it that the Department of Justice has not taken action to destroy it?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is not under the jurisdiction of our committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he direct his inquiry to the Department of Justice.

Mr. GARNER. Can not the gentleman give a reason why, if this Shipping Trust is an unlawful monopoly, the Department of Justice has not taken steps to stop it?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will ask the gentleman if he is ready to vote to this Shipping Trust a greater monopoly still by giving them free tolls through the canal?

Mr. GARNER. As to that, I will say that I am in favor of giving to American ships free tolls. When a ship carries the Stars and Stripes it ought to go through the American-built canal free.

Mr. ADAMSON. And the beneficiaries will put their money in ships carrying any flag that guarantees a financial inducement. They care nothing for a flag, they want graft.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, the proposition I am arguing now is this, that I believe that this House and this committee ought to see to it that all the land that is embraced within this Canal Zone shall be under the control of the United States Government, and then we can do what we wish with it.

Mr. BORLAND. Of course it is all under the control of the United States Government now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] may proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] may proceed 10 minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am much obliged to my colleague from Georgia, but I do not desire any extension, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. I shall be constrained to object.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Missouri does not desire to continue.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words. This debate, it seems, can not get away from the discussion of the control of the Shipping Trust and get down to the proposition that this Government ought not to spend money to buy land that it does not need. My colleague from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] says the Government ought to control every foot of land that the Canal Zone is on. I say the Government does control every foot of land that the Canal Zone is on, and owns every foot of land that is needed for the operation of the canal.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the gentleman, as a lawyer, assert that we own anything down there except by virtue of the treaty?

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, yes; we own everything.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, no; I say not, except by virtue of the treaty.

Mr. BORLAND. I will answer the gentleman very briefly. When the building of the canal was first proposed some gentlemen in Chicago—I do not know who—brought a suit against some officer of the United States Government to enjoin the payment of money for the construction of the Panama Canal, on the ground that the United States did not own the land upon which the canal was to be built, and cited the words of the treaty, which the gentleman from Missouri seems to have in mind, that we acquired that zone for the purpose of the occupation, use, operation, and sanitation of the canal. Justice Brewer, in handing down the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, said that the absence of technical words of conveyance had no effect upon the title, but that the title to the zone was in fee in the United States. [Applause.] Now, if the gentleman, who is a member of that committee, has not read that case, he ought not to endeavor to call me to account, if he does not know whether the Government owns any land in the Canal Zone.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Then what was the necessity for article 4 of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which provided that no change of territorial sovereignty in Panama should interfere with the use of the canal?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman might have asked the Supreme Court of the United States that question.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. There is the plain provision in the treaty that the gentleman seems to disregard.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand that the language of the treaty in regard to sovereignty is just as ambiguous as the language in regard to ownership of the land. It says we shall have the use, occupation, and control of the land, and Justice Brewer said that meant the fee title of the land. And the treaty says that we shall have the sovereignty of the zone as though we were sovereign of the territory within which said lands are located, to the entire exclusion of the exercise by the Republic of Panama of any such sovereign rights, power, or authority, and that means the complete sovereignty of the zone, because no other sovereignty is possible.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. BORLAND. It will have to be a brief one.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will make it a brief one. Does not the gentleman concede that if we were to pull up stakes there to-morrow and abandon that canal, all of that land would immediately revert to the Republic of Panama?

Mr. BORLAND. No, sir; I do not, because the treaty itself says that no act we can do in failing to build the canal shall forfeit our rights under that treaty.

Mr. MANN. And we have purchased a large amount of land there and become the absolute owner of it.

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly. We have acquired land there by condemnation. We own every foot of land on which the canal is built, and we have sovereignty over every foot of land in the 10-mile Canal Zone.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I prefer not to, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. Does not the gentleman believe that when we flood any land there we will have to pay for it in any event?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I will say to the gentleman that if there is a foot of land that is going to be flooded, they will come here and ask Congress to pay for it, and we will pay for it, of course; but we are asked by this bill to authorize the President to go and buy all the land, whether it is needed for any purpose on earth or not, and no man in this House who is asking that can tell how much it will cost or how much land it will take. Any man who has been down there knows that all the land necessary for the building of the canal and the flooding of the lakes has already been bought and paid for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I withdraw the pro forma amendment, but I have a substantive amendment pending, to strike out section 3, and I ask for a vote on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to strike out section 3.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BORLAND) there were—ayes 24, noes 40.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk began the reading of section 4.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to propose an amendment to section 3, to limit it to land actually necessary.

Mr. ADAMSON. The treaties and the act of Congress already limit it to that by giving us authority to secure a strip of land for canal purposes, and there is not a word of authority for any other purpose.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to submit my amendment.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman rose too late.

Mr. DYER. I submit that the gentleman was trying to get recognition.

Mr. FOSTER. But not until after the Clerk had begun to read.

Mr. KENDALL. He had read two or three sentences.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is no question but that the Clerk had begun to read.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, recently we returned to a section by unanimous consent when gentlemen wanted to offer amendments. It seems to me the gentleman ought to be allowed to offer his amendment. If we do not like it, we can vote it down.

Mr. KENDALL. But the gentleman rose too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it should be done by unanimous consent, and that the proper course for the gentleman to pursue is to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the Chair ought not to take advantage, and does not desire to take advantage, of any gentleman seeking to offer an amendment. Members on the floor have no control over the Clerk. The Clerk starts to read. He does not see the Member who rises. He keeps on reading, but it is not the fault of the Member on the floor. The gentleman from Missouri rose promptly——

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not want to be illiberal. Gentlemen on the floor have told me within an hour that I was not strict enough about this. I feel kindly toward my friend and want everybody to have a fair chance. I will not object at this time if the gentleman says he was trying to offer an amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. I was, and I desire to submit an amendment to section 3, to strike out the words in line 15 and 16:

To declare by Executive order that—

And to insert in lieu thereof the words:

To acquire.

And in line 17 to strike out the word "is," so that the language will read:

That the President is authorized to acquire all land and land under water within the limits of the Canal Zone necessary for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of the Panama Canal, and to extinguish, by agreement when advisable, all claims and titles of adverse claimants and occupants.

That will permit the President to acquire such lands as is necessary for the operation and maintenance and sanitation of the canal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 15 and 16, the words "to declare by Executive order that" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to acquire," and in line 17 strike out the word "is."

Mr. BORLAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, by the first section of the bill the President is authorized, in line 21, to acquire by treaty with the Republic of Panama any additional land or land under water not already granted.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would allow me to interrupt him long enough to ask that all debate on the amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. I think I can make my statement in five.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that I would like to have an opportunity to offer a substitute for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. My request does not cut that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment be closed in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, several Members around me say that the amendment has not been fully reported. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, by paragraph 1 of this bill the President is authorized to acquire by treaty with the Republic of Panama any additional land or land under water not already granted or which was excepted from the grant that he may deem necessary, and so on.

That gives him a right to acquire by treaty such land of the sovereignty as is necessary for the proper maintenance of this canal. If section 3 is limited, as it ought to be, to the President to acquire by private purchase land necessary for the operation of the canal, or to extinguish the title to land, that ought to be entirely sufficient, and then if there appears to be any land in the future that we need the President has authority to get it by treaty, or by agreement to purchase, or by condemnation of private owners.

There is no reason why section 3, standing alone and having no effect on the general purpose of the bill, should not be limited to the purchase of land actually needed for the operation of the canal. There is no reason why we should embark or commit the Federal Government to embark on a general purpose of obtaining land not needed for the maintenance, operation, or sanitation of the canal. If my amendment is adopted, then when the time comes for the Appropriation Committee to appropriate for a particular purpose Congress will have some opportunity to determine upon the propriety and necessity for the purchase.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Under the amendment as the gentleman proposes who will have the authority to determine what is necessary?

Mr. BORLAND. Unquestionably the Executive authority.

Mr. TOWNER. The President?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I call the gentleman's attention, then, that his amendment is unnecessary, because that is the case under the present status. The language is:

SEC. 3. That the President is authorized to declare by Executive order that all land and land under water within the limits of the Canal Zone is necessary for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, or protection of the Panama Canal, and to extinguish, by agreement when advisable, all claims and titles of adverse claimants and occupants.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has mistaken the idea of my amendment. I do not want the President to declare that all land is necessary whether it is or not, but I want him to say that such a particular part of land is necessary, and then he will exercise the judgment of an administrative officer in selecting the land that is necessary. Under the original language of the section the President will feel himself empowered to declare that all the land is necessary. We might as well have said not that the President is authorized to do so, but to declare it necessary ourselves, because that is the effect of the language that I am trying to strike out.

I want to limit it so that it will be the duty of the executive officer, as he ought to do when he is spending the public money, to exercise his judgment. Let him say, "Here is a piece of land that we need, that we can not get by treaty, and we will buy it from the private owner." Congress has never refused to appropriate for necessary expenses of the canal. Under this language as it now stands, we are embarking upon a general purchasing scheme, the outcome of which nobody can understand. We do not claim we need the land now, and we do not know that we will ever need it, and yet we are embarking on the purchase of land at a time when we are not embarking on other public expenditures on account of the condition of the public funds.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri the following, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 17, strike out the word "is" and insert the words "may be."

Mr. ADAMSON. Does the gentleman offer that as a substitue or as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MONDELL. I offer it as a substitute for the amendment, and when I have the opportunity I shall be very glad to explain why.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, we are not entering upon any new enterprise in this at all. We are proposing to do what ought to have been done long ago, and what probably would have been done but for obstacles which have grown greater all of the time, and will continue to grow greater the more we neglect the matter. If the people authorized to secure that zone purchased any land that was unnecessary for the construction, maintenance, sanitation, and operation of that canal; if the act was not ultra vires, then it was a very wrong thing for them to do or a very great mistake on their part. Our only authority by treaty under the Spooner Act was to acquire the land necessary for this purpose. It may not be necessary to put a warehouse on every acre of it, but the officers in charge of the canal construction, and almost everybody who has been down there, with whom I have conferred, except the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], agree that for the protection and sanitation of that canal it was necessary to acquire this zone, and in order to perfect that protection it is necessary to own the land itself. Why? Because we do not want any undesirable citizens there. We have the right to acquire all that over which we have secured jurisdiction until the canal opens, and determine just what use we shall make of it in connection with the sanitation, operation, and protection of the canal.

We can not afford, after having made our expenditures, after having staked so much, to have any undesirable or dangerous citizens or neighbors there. We have the right to go ahead and acquire the title to that land for the purpose of using it as an incident or annex to the canal purpose, as contemplated in the original enterprise. As to what it costs, that is a bagatelle as compared with what the canal costs and what it is worth, and while the canal costs $400,000,000, we hope in its benefits to us and to mankind it will be worth billions of dollars. Compared with its cost and value, the cost of acquiring this land for our safety and protection there, to have absolute ownership and control of the contiguous property within the Canal Zone, which we acquired for the express purpose, will be very little. We have the right to purchase it and we ought to do it as rapidly as possible, because, as the gentleman suggests, it is getting higher in price all of the time, and more difficult to acquire; but whatever it costs it is small in comparison to the magnitude of the enterprise, and we ought to acquire it as fast as we can. The officials there assured us that with this legislation much of it could be acquired, and the more of it we acquired cheaply and by private contract the better it is and the less there will be for us to secure through the operation of these commissions. We think we have done the wise thing, and I hope that neither the amendment nor the substitute will prevail.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am a good deal in sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. I would not, however, go as far as he does. I do not think it will ever be likely that we shall want to acquire any considerable portion of the lands within the Canal Zone that are now in private ownership. It seems to me it would be a very great mistake to do so, and my amendment was offered for the purpose of modifying the notice that shall be given to all the world as to our intention in that regard. But since I offered the amendment the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is almost always right, although he is very wrong in regard to some matters connected with this legislation, has suggested to me that under the treaty we can only acquire lands required and necessary for the construction, maintenance, operation, and protection of the canal, and therefore, not knowing in advance what lands we may need, it is necessary to make the declaration as to all the lands. In that view of the matter, in which I concur, after further consideration I shall be compelled to withdraw my substitute. At the same time, while I shall vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, I express the hope that this declaration, which under the treaty seems to be necessary, will not be interpreted by the Executive as warranting him or as a direction to him to acquire any considerable amount of land on the Canal Zone other than that we now control. I do not believe it will be wise to expend a large amount of money for the acquisition of land for which we have no use. I think it would be a very great mistake to attempt to control by ownership a major portion of the lands on the zone, for I can not understand how we would ever have any use for them, but inasmuch as it is necessary to make the declaration that the lands are necessary in order that we may acquire such lands as we may need, I shall support the item as it stands in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to withdrawn the substitute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BORLAND), there were—ayes 14, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That when in the judgment of the President the construction of the Panama Canal shall be sufficiently advanced toward completion to render the further services of the Isthmian Canal Commission unnecessary the President is authorized by Executive order to discontinue the Isthmian Canal Commission, which, together with the present organization, shall then cease to exist; and the President is authorized thereafter to complete and operate the Panama Canal or cause it to be completed and operated through a governor of the Panama Canal and such other persons as he may deem competent to discharge the various duties connected with the completion, care, maintenance, sanitation, operation, and protection of the canal. The governor of the Panama Canal shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, commissioned for a term of four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified. He shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. Vacancies shall be filled in the same manner, except that in the recess of the Senate the President may make an ad interim appointment. All other persons necessary for the completion, care, management, maintenance, sanitation, and operation of the Panama Canal shall be appointed by the President, removable at his pleasure, with salaries to be fixed by him. That upon the completion of the Panama Canal the President shall cause the same to be officially and formally opened for use and operation.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the sentence ending with the word "Canal," in line 15, page 4, the following:

"Any of the persons appointed or employed as aforesaid may be persons in the military or civil service of the United States, but the amount of the official salary paid to any such person shall be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation provided by or which shall be fixed under the terms of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. Does that follow the first word "Canal" or the second word "Canal"?

Mr. ADAMSON. After the sentence ending with the word "Canal."

Mr. MANN. Should not the amendment come in after the word "him," first line, page 5?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think it makes much difference; it is a pretty good place where I put it. I think the gentleman from Illinois will see it fits in there very well.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another committee amendment to page 5, line 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 1, after the word "him," insert the following:

"But salaries or compensation fixed hereunder by the President shall in no instance exceed by more than 25 per cent the salaries or compensation paid for the same or similar services to persons employed by the Government in continental United States."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is generally understood by gentlemen that we have been having to pay a differential of more than 25 per cent—I think from 30 to 75 per cent in some cases—down on the canal, and gentlemen have thought it was wise to put some limitation upon the amount of salaries to be fixed for these minor offices. The law fixes the office of the governor, but the President, under the terms of this section, is to fix the salaries of the minor employees of the canal, and it is thought that the maximum of 25 per cent differential will be sufficient to enable the President to secure competent services on the Isthmus.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, section 4, strike out from the beginning of the section down to and including the word "authorized," in lines 9 and 10, and substitute therefor the following "the President is authorized to discontinue the Isthmian Canal Commission July 1, 1913, and."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering that amendment is to have a distinct termination of the canal commission. The greatest work that the members of this commission ever were engaged in, or ever will engage in, is the construction of this canal, and now they desire that they may remain there until the work is practically completed. I do not think that the President would be likely to abolish the commission before that time, but I recognize the fact that the committee undoubtedly wishes to cut off expenses as rapidly as possible. I do think the wish of this commission, who have done a work there which redounds to the credit of the whole country, should be thus gratified in that they might remain there until that work is completed, which, in their opinion, will be about the 1st of July, 1913. For that reason I have offered the amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. That question was thoroughly discussed pro and con in the committee, and we consulted with the chief engineer on the subject, and came to a full understanding, after full assurances from the powers that be, that there would be no violence done to any such gentleman who won such glory with Col. Goethals on the Isthmus. Although I have been always opposed to the Isthmian Canal Commission, I would not be willing at this late date, after they have gone through toil and trial, to deny them a chance to enjoy any of the rewards and glory. The gentleman from Illinois was thoroughly satisfied on the subject, and so is the gentleman from Minnesota, and I think there is a general understanding as to that, and I think we can rely on it as it is.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. That is, I wanted to put that provision in the bill when in committee, and for the very same reason that the gentleman from Massachusetts has mentioned, except I gave other and additional reasons before the committee. Now, there is always a possibility of a little jealousy existing even between great men, and I think I saw some evidence of it while on the Isthmus. This bill, as originally drawn, provided that the commission should not be abolished until the canal was completed, but after the chief engineer visited Washington and had some discussion with some of the members of the committee, of which I was not one——

Mr. ADAMSON. You were informed of it, though?

Mr. SIMS. I was informed of it after they had it. He impressed upon them the necessity of authorizing him to form his organization for permanent operation out of the material there now, and assured them there was no purpose to do anything that would be an injustice to any of those great engineers and other members of the commission who are there now and have been with the work from the time the Army officers took charge. I was so determined in the matter to do justice to these gentlemen that I held out until the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], a member of the committee, had a conversation with the President of the United States, Mr. Taft, and in pursuance of that conversation received a letter from the President. This letter was written by the President at the time the bill was being considered by the committee, when I was making the same contention that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] is now making for his amendment:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 26, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. STEVENS: You have spoken to me with reference to the effect of vesting the President with power to create and maintain a government on the Isthmus, dispensing with the commission. My own impression is, without desiring to grasp more power than I have, that it is unnecessary to continue the form of the commission, but I beg to assure you that whether you continue it or not, it would be my purpose to maintain the present organization and the present efficient management with Col. Goethals at the head and including the heads of departments, without permitting any radical change of any kind.

I do not object to the present condition at all, but I think it is wise to have legislation looking to the completion of the canal and its maintenance under such elastic conditions as gives the President the power contemplated in the law which you are considering. This is not for the purpose of changing what is now going on, but merely for the purpose of preparing for the future under a new condition that will come to exist when the canal is completed.

Sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

Hon. F. C. STEVENS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. ADAMSON. Col. Goethals explained to me afterwards that the word "departments" there was an inadvertence, and that the "heads of divisions" were meant and would be protected.

Mr. SIMS. Upon the assurance of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] that the President had no idea of permitting anything of this sort, should such an intention exist, then I desisted from pressing my amendment. But I want to say, as emphatically as I know how to say it, that I never would have agreed to put it in his power to destroy this commission before this canal was completed if there was a little mean purpose behind it upon the part of anyone to humiliate any of those great engineers or other officers. And if the President or any man who succeeds him does not live up to what that letter implies, I shall be sorry the longest day I live that I did not insist that the commission should be retained, with no other motive than to prevent anybody who might have some little jealous streak in his nature to wreak vengeance on some great man of whom he was jealous.

But I can not believe that the President of the United States now, or any other who may succeed him, in view of this letter and the knowledge that this bill would not have passed in this form if it would permit the chief engineer or any governor to do what I was afraid might be done without such an understanding.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to say to the gentleman that it is possible if there is a new President inaugurated next March for him to change the entire personnel.

Mr. SIMS. It is possible if we should elect a man mean enough to do it.

Mr. ADAMSON. He can do it under the law now if he wants to. Any President can wipe out every member of the commission at any time.

Mr. SIMS. I would gracefully yield to the power of the President to do what the gentleman from Georgia says if he did it of his own motion and at his own suggestion in the interest of the public service; but I never want to see it done at the suggestion of some officer or some member of the commission, in order that he may by doing so humiliate some other member of the commission.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] rose to his feet a little while ago, and the Chair will recognize him if he wishes to be recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the President has power to remove any of the commissioners at any time, and make any change that he may desire.

Personally I have always been opposed to the form of the Isthmian Canal Commission. The House did not favor it when it was created, and has repeatedly voted to abolish it. And in saying that I want to say that I think I am on terms of very close friendship with Col. Goethals, with Maj. Sibert and other members of the commission.

Mr. SIMS. Col. Sibert?

Mr. MANN. Yes; Col. Sibert now. He used to be Maj. Sibert. There has been, possibly, at times friction between members of the commission, and I have heard it stated privately on the floor of the House in years gone by that if the commission were abolished, Maj. (now Col.) Sibert might lose his position. I should not have favored that, because while I consider Col. Goethals the greatest engineer that this country has ever produced, yet I am quite willing to concede to Col. Sibert the greatness which he possesses, especially as to the work upon the locks for the canal.

Several years ago, when this matter was before the House—two years ago—I went to the President and asked him squarely whether it would be his intention, if the Canal Commission were to be abolished, to dispense with the services of the gentlemen then performing their respective functions upon the canal, and especially whether he would be willing to dismiss for any reasons Maj. Sibert. He, entertaining the same views, apparently, concerning these gentlemen that I have now expressed, stated that so far as he had control of the matter—and of course he would have absolute control of the matter—if the commission were abolished he intended to maintain Col. Goethals in his position and Maj. Sibert in his position.

Mr. SIMS. Include Col. Gorgas in it, too.

Mr. MANN. Well, Col. Gorgas was also mentioned, and he is in the same position. Now we have gone ahead with the Isthmian Canal Commission. It has been a success, although there have been times when trouble was almost on the point of breaking it up. I believe that the gentlemen who have directed the canal down there are entitled to remain in their positions, whether they are called canal commissioners or engineers in charge, and share the glory which comes with the opening of the canal. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BORLAND. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] is to preserve the present commission in existence until 1913. It does not make any specific mention, as I understood it, of the rest of the force, but aims simply to preserve the present commission in existence.

Now, the committee have provided that the President, at such time as his judgment approves, may dispense with the commission and thereafter complete the canal by the employment of such persons as are necessary. It does seem, under that, that the President can have the authority, and will exercise it, probably, to continue the members of the commission in their respective offices of responsibility and honor, so far as is necessary to the completion of the canal. There is absolutely no question about that, and Maj. Sibert, and Dr. Gorgas, and Maj. Gaillard, or any others of those gentlemen down there who have been acting on the commission may remain. It is somewhat of a rigid body, composed of a number of men who are receiving a salary of $14,000 a year. One of these men—and I do not mean to be invidious in making a comparison—is not an active engineer but is appointed to the position of civil governor of the zone. Now, the civil governor of the zone looks after the police and schools, and the roads, and the saloon licenses, and things like that; that is, he is supposed to do so, and he is supposed to pardon a few offenders out of the workhouse. But as a matter of fact we are paying him $14,000 down there for the performance of duties that do not compare with the duties of a mayor of a town in the States up here of 2,500 or 3,000 inhabitants. Down there they have no difficulties, or revenue, or taxation, or elections, or special improvements, or any other problems that confront a mayor in the States—a mayor of a town of 2,500 inhabitants—who receives for his services $1,500 or $2,000 a year. Such a mayor is doing practically all the work that is being done down there on the zone by a commissioner who receives $14,000 a year. And I want to say that during the last few years, to my certain knowledge, there has been a gradual accumulation of civil power in the hands of the chairman of the commission, so that now the governor of the Canal Zone has not even authority to pardon a prisoner out of the workhouse. I do not know of a single, solitary administrative act that he has the authority to perform without the previous permission of the chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Now, those are all matters that the committee probably had in mind in providing that the President should go ahead and complete this canal by the commission as far as necessary, and then provide for its completion by the officers actually necessary. I concede that it would be desirable to abolish the commission technically. The commission never was designed practically for the construction of that canal. When it was appointed, it was found that it would not work, but we filled the places with active engineer officers, who would do some of the constructive work, and call themselves commissioners. Now that we have done away with all except the shell of the commission, and simply have left some $14,000 salaries, the sooner we do away with the name of the commission and put it into the actual hands of those men who are building it the better it will be. There is no danger that this President or—I was going to say any other President—will do any injustice to the men who have actually attained any of the glory in the construction of that great work.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hoped that the gentleman before he sat down would mention the reorganization which is effected by section 4, in which the salary of the governor is reduced to $10,000 a year. Col. Goethals anticipates economies to the extent of $40,000 a year in the reduction of salaries.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; there is no reason for the $14,000 salaries of the commissioners.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 4, line 25, after the word "President," by inserting the words "or by his authority."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, line 25, by inserting, after the word "President," the words "or by his authority."

Mr. ADAMSON. I thought that was understood.

Mr. MANN. The provision in the bill is that all of the appointments shall be made by the President. That would require commissions from the President. Of course, I take it that is not necessary.

Mr. ADAMSON. I took it that that was understood. Of course, if it is not understood it is all right to insert those words.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment. To strike out, in line 25, page 4, the words "with salaries to be fixed by him" and insert:

And the compensation of such persons shall be fixed by the President or by his authority until such time as Congress may by appropriation act or other law regulate the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 25, strike out the words "with salaries to be fixed by him" and insert: "And the compensation of such persons shall be fixed by the President or by his authority until such time as Congress may by appropriation act or other law regulate the same."

Mr. ADAMSON. That is acceptable to the committee.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 4, line 19, after the word "of," I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 19, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the governors of the different States of the Union get a salary on an average perhaps of less than $5,000 annually. These governors under modern politics are required to make two strenuous campaigns, one for the nomination and the other for election.

There are but few States in this Union which pay salaries to their governors of $10,000, yet these officers are elective in character and entail upon the candidates in two strenuous campaigns an outlay of exceedingly large sums of money. Now, it is proposed in this bill to give to a man who stands in the same place as the governor of a State, to wit, governor of the Canal Zone, $10,000 a year, a princely salary, which does not cost him one penny to get. I have repeatedly in this House seen amendments offered for the purpose of equalizing salaries to public servants, and I have just as often seen these amendments voted down. I want to say that the time is coming when the people are going to force a better equality between the wage earner, or the employee who earns his living by the sweat of his brow, and those who stand at heads of departments. We had just as well get our ears to the ground, for the people are determined to make a change. A big officer with a big salary is like a big trust with a big income, both want to be our masters and reduce the many to a condition of servitude.

I want to commend the committee for fixing the salary at $4,000 a year less than we pay to each of the canal commissioners, but a further reduction can be made, without doing violence to the salary of this new appointive office.

Mr. Chairman, a salary of $5,000 is a princely salary to pay to the governor general of that little zone down there. What are the arduous duties, what are the things that call for anything except ordinary intellect and ordinary ability? What is there connected with the government of this zone that is greater in its character, that requires more force, more intelligence, more ability than that of a governor of one of the States of this Union? [Applause.] And yet, Mr. Chairman, there are few governors that get a salary of $10,000 a year, even in the big, populous States with a complex government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the House will do with my amendment, but I do say that I believe it ought to be adopted. The idea of giving such excessive salaries to men because they may be at the head of some affair ought, in my opinion, to be changed to a salary commensurate with the duties. Mr. Chairman, this is a salary greater than was paid to members of the Supreme Court of this country until recently.

[Applause.] It is greater than that paid to the Members of Congress to-day, and, in my opinion, the salary ought to be cut from $10,000 to $5,000. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment. On page 4, line 19, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "eight."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 19, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "eight."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 5, noes 37.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The question of ordering tellers was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. One gentleman has arisen in the affirmative, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to one matter. In lines 20, 21, and 22, several gentlemen who are good lawyers have called attention to the fact that that language is unnecessary, because the general law makes adequate provision for such cases. The language is:

Vacancies shall be filled in the same manner, except that in the recess of the Senate the President may make ad interim appointment.

I am inclined to think, without recently reading the general statute, that that is covered by the general law; and by making this additional enactment, if it is covered by the general law, we might get up some confusion. It was our idea to make assurance doubly sure, but if the law already provides for the case, there is no good reason for putting it in here.

Mr. GARNER. Nobody seems to have the law here. Why not wait until we see what the general law is?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia offer an amendment?

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to strike it out now or else pass it and return to it; but I think it is right to strike it out now, and if we should find that there was any mistake about it we could have it corrected at the other end of the Capitol before it becomes a law.

Mr. MANN. It is quite certain that such a provision as this should be changed. This would obviate the necessity of a Senate confirmation of an ad interim appointment.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will move to strike that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, strike out all of lines 20, 21, and a part of line 22, to and including the word "appointment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, this brings us to section 5, which is to be passed, and if any Member has an amendment to offer, now is the time for him to do so.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for section 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 5 and insert in lieu as follows:

"That the President is hereby authorized to prescribe, and from time to time change, the tolls that shall be levied by the Government of the United States for the use of the Panama Canal. No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States. Tolls may be based upon gross or net registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, or otherwise, and may be based on one form of tonnage for warships and another for ships of commerce. When based upon net registered tonnage for ships of commerce the tolls shall not exceed $1.25 per net registered ton, nor be less, other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens, than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal, subject, however, to the provisions of article 19 of the convention between the United States and the Republic of Panama, entered into November 18, 1903: Provided, however, That under regulations prescribed by the President, a vessel paying toll going through the canal in ballast shall, on its return trip through the canal laden with cargo, be entitled to receive a rebate of 50 per cent of the tolls just previously paid going through in the opposite direction without cargo. If the tolls shall not be based upon net registered tonnage, they shall not exceed the equivalent of $1.25 per net registered ton, as nearly as the same may be determined, nor be less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal. The toll for each passenger shall not be more than $1.50. The President is authorized to make, and from time to time amend, regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal and the passage and control of vessels through the same, or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto, and all rules and regulations affecting pilots and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters.

"Such regulations shall provide for prompt adjustment by agreement and immediate payment of claims for damages which may arise from alleged injury to vessels, cargo, or passengers from the passing of vessels through the locks under the control of those operating them under such rules and regulations. In case of disagreement suit may be brought in the District Court of the Canal Zone against the governor of the Panama Canal. The hearing and disposition of such cases shall be expedited and the judgment shall be immediately paid off without proceeding to execution. All such claims, whether by agreement or after judgment, shall be paid out of any moneys appropriated or allotted for canal operation."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] is an amendment to the text or a substitute for the text?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a substitute for the text.

Mr. DOREMUS. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered in the nature of a substitute will be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands it, all we can do is to have the various amendments read and have them published in the RECORD and they will be considered as pending.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, section 5, on page 5, by inserting, between the word "Panama" and the word "which," on line 9, the words:

"And also coastwise vessels registered under the American flag plying only and exclusively between ports in the United States."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS], which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend substitute as follows:

"That section 4347 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of February 17, 1898, shall not apply to foreign vessels engaged in the transportation of merchandise and passengers between ports of the United States on the Atlantic and on the Pacific through the Panama Canal."

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to section 5, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized to prescribe, and from time to time change, toll charges for the use of the Panama Canal by all vessels, except those flying the flag of the United States and the flag of the Republic of Panama, which excepted vessels shall be charged no tolls. Charges may be based upon gross or net registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, or otherwise, and may be based on one form of tonnage for warships and another for ships of commerce, but the tolls shall not exceed $1.25 per ton, based upon net registered tonnage for ships of commerce, nor be less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal: Provided, however, That under regulations prescribed by the President a vessel paying toll going through the canal in ballast shall, on its return trip through the canal laden with cargo, be entitled to receive a rebate of 50 per cent of the tolls just previously paid going through in the opposite direction without cargo. No preference shall be given nor discrimination shown, directly or indirectly, to the vessels of any nation, its citizens or subjects, other than vessels belonging to the Government of the United States (including those belonging to the Panama Railroad Co.) and the Government of the Republic of Panama, observing the rules and regulations of the Panama Canal. The toll for each passenger shall be not more than $1.50. The President is authorized to make, and from time to time amend, regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal and the passage and control of vessels passing through the same or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto, and all rules and regulations affecting lighting, pilots, and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters.

Such rules and regulations shall expressly deny and forbid the use of the Panama Canal to all the classes of vessels the passage of which through the Panama Canal, or any part thereof, is made and declared unlawful by section 11 of this act.

Such regulations shall provide for prompt adjustment by agreement and immediate payment of claims for damages which may arise from alleged injury to vessels, cargo, or passengers from the passing of vessels through the locks under the control of those operating them under such rules and regulations. In case of disagreement, suit may be brought in the district court of the Canal Zone against the governor of the Panama Canal. The hearing and disposition of such cases shall be expedited and the judgment shall be immediately paid off without proceeding to execution. All such claims, whether by agreement or after judgment, shall be paid out of any moneys appropriated or allotted for canal operation.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have that amendment pending, and at the proper time I desire recognition to speak upon it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to perfect the text, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Canal," page 5, line 6, down to the word "Canal," page 6, line 5, and insert:

"Charges may be based upon registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, cargo tonnage, or otherwise, and when based upon registered tonnage shall not exceed $1.50 per net ton, American measurement, nor be less (other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens and vessels of the Republic of Panama) than 50 cents per net ton; nor shall any rate of charge be prescribed which is less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual operation of the canal, subject, however, to the provisions of Article XIX of the convention between the United States and the Republic of Panama entered into November 18, 1903, and the right of the United States to pass its own vessels, troops, materials, merchandise, and supplies, without the payment of any charge: Provided, however, That in fixing the charges for the use of the canal the President may prescribe that any vessel engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States which is owned in whole or in part by any railroad company, or which is owned by any company the stock of which is owned in whole or in part by any railroad company, or which is controlled directly or indirectly by any railroad company, shall pay the highest charges prescribed for any vessel, and that the determination of the question of fact in each case shall be made in such manner and by such person or persons as the President may by general or specific order require: And provided further, That the foregoing proviso shall not apply to the Panama Railroad Co. or vessels owned by it. No preference shall be given to the vessels of any nation, its citizens or subjects (other than the United States and the Republic of Panama), observing the rules set forth in Article III of the treaty entered into by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain on November 18, 1901, and confirmed by Article XVIII of the said convention of November 18, 1903, over the vessels of any other nation observing such rules, its citizens or subjects."

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Before we pass section 5, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. We are not considering that section now.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understand that; but I ask the question now because——

Mr. ADAMSON. The agreement was that the section should be passed, but that amendments should be filed.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask for information because I may have to offer an amendment if the gentleman's answer is not satisfactory.

Mr. ADAMSON. It was agreed not to consider this section at this time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It will take but a moment. I merely want to know whether the President, in the gentleman's judgment, would be authorized to grant commodity rates under this language. My question is based on this situation: Certain Americans own large deposits of iron ore in Mexico. At the rate of $1.25 per registered ton it will be impossible to bring that ore into the market. In other words, it will not be possible for these people to compete with the Atlantic seacoast with the producers of iron ore from other places, but if the President could discriminate between the value of the different kinds of commodities, why in that case their ore would probably be charged less than heavy Japanese silks or diamonds or watches, or things of that kind.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand what is before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. ADAMSON. This is not debate. My friend, the Doctor, is making some remarks about some men in Mexico bringing iron ore into the United States.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. I understood, under the agreement entered into by unanimous consent in the House that while amendments are offered now and they are being read that after we pass and return to section 5 that amendments at that time will still be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; amendments will still be in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the President is authorized to cause to be erected, maintained, and operated, at suitable places along the Panama Canal and the coast adjacent to its two terminals, in connection with the operation of said canal, such wireless telegraphic installations as he may deem necessary for the operation, maintenance, sanitation, and protection of said canal. If it is found necessary to locate such installations upon territory of the Republic of Panama, the President is authorized to make such agreement with said Government as may be necessary, and also to provide for the acceptance and transmission, by said system, of all private and commercial messages, and those of the Government of Panama, on such terms and for such tolls as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the messages of the Government of the United States and the departments thereof, and the management of the Panama Canal, shall always be given precedence over all other messages. The President is also authorized to establish, maintain, and operate dry docks, repairs shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies for its own vessels, and, incidentally, for supplying such at reasonable prices to passing vessels, in accordance with appropriations hereby authorized to be made from time to time by Congress as a part of the maintenance and operation of the said canal. Moneys received in the ordinary course of business from the conduct of said business may be expended and reinvested for such purposes without being covered into the Treasury of the United States; and such moneys are hereby appropriated for such purposes, but all deposits of such funds shall be subject to the provisions of existing law relating to the deposit of other public funds of the United States, and any net profits accruing from such business shall annually be covered into the Treasury of the United States. Monthly reports of such receipts and expenditures shall be made to the President by the persons in charge, and annual reports shall be made to the Congress.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, there is a typographical mistake there which I wish to correct by amendment. In line 24, page 7, the word "repairs" should be "repair."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 24, strike out the letter "s" in the word "repairs."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is another one at the top of page 8, in line 2, the words "its own" ought to be "our official," and I move to correct that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 2, strike out the words "its own" and insert in lieu thereof the words "our official."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the governor of the Panama Canal shall, in connection with the operation of such canal, have official control and jurisdiction over the Canal Zone and shall perform all duties in connection with the civil government of the Canal Zone, which is to be held, treated, and governed as an adjunct of such Panama Canal. Unless in this act otherwise provided all existing laws of the Canal Zone referring to the civil governor or the civil administration of the Canal Zone shall be applicable to the governor of the Panama Canal, who shall perform all such executive and administrative duties required by existing law. The President is authorized to determine or cause to be determined what towns shall exist in the Canal Zone and subdivide said Canal Zone into subdivisions, to be designated by name or number, so that there shall be situated one town in each subdivision, and the boundaries of each subdivision shall be clearly defined. In each town there shall be a magistrate's court with exclusive original jurisdiction coextensive with the subdivision in which it is situated of all civil cases of every character in which the principal sum claimed does not exceed $300, and all criminal cases wherein the fine that can be imposed could not exceed $25, imprisonment could not exceed 30 days, or both, and all violations of police regulations and ordinances and all actions involving possession or title to personal property or the forcible entry and detainer of real estate, and all other matters and proceedings which are now within the jurisdiction of the municipal judge or the municipal courts. Such magistrates shall also hold preliminary investigations in charges of felony and commit or bail in bailable cases to the district court. A sufficient number of magistrates and constables, who must be citizens of the United States, to conduct the business of such courts, shall be appointed by the governor of the Panama Canal for terms of four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified, with salaries to be fixed by the President. The rules governing said courts and prescribing the duties of said magistrates and constables, oaths and bonds, the times and places of holding such courts, the disposition of fines, costs, forfeitures, enforcements of judgments, appeals therefrom to the district court, and the disposition, treatment, and pardon of misdemeanor convicts shall be established by order of the President. The governor of the Panama Canal shall appoint all notaries public, prescribe their powers and duties, their official seal, and the fees to be charged and collected by them.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, in line 6, page 9, I move to amend by inserting after the word "subdivide" the words "and from time to time resubdivide." That insert ought to be in parentheses, I think. The idea is that this being a new thing, in the nature of an experiment, our hope is it will grow instead of decreasing, and if necessary we want him to change the boundaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 6, after the word "subdivide," insert, in parentheses, the words "and from time to time resubdivide."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section by striking out all after the word "defined," line 10, page 9.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is one other amendment I would like to offer to perfect this before parting company with it forever.

Mr. BORLAND. Let this be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri kindly state his amendment again?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to displace the chairman of the committee with his committee amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I had overlooked in reporting the other amendment; this is a mere verbal amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, beginning with line 10, strike out all after the word "defined," in line 10.

Mr. MANN. Do not you want to strike out the last three words of the section about notaries public?

Mr. BORLAND. I think that is in the existing law. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia without losing my time for debate.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, if this is to go out, we want it to go out in good shape, and I find in the text the word "municipal" occurs twice in line 21, a clerical or typographical error. It should be "district," and I move to strike out the word "municipal" in the two places where it occurs, in line 21, page 9, and insert in lieu thereof in both places the two words "present district," so it will read "the present district judge or the present district courts."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 21, strike out the word "municipal" and insert in lieu thereof the words "present district."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the gentleman from Missouri like to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. My amendment strikes out the portion of this section which creates magistrate courts in each of the towns. The section goes on with a good deal of particularity in providing for their constables and rules governing their duties and governing the court, and so on, to be defined by the President.

Now, as I understand, most of those details that are in there are already the existing law, either by Executive order or otherwise, relating to the district courts now in operation, and by section 2 of this bill, already adopted by the House, we provide that the existing courts established in the Canal Zone by Executive order are recognized and confirmed to continue in operation until Congress shall otherwise provide. It provides that all Executive orders in existence shall be recognized. Now, if Congress is going to provide a plan of courts down there and a scheme of government, this is only a very small fragment of it, and does not seem to be at all necessary in this bill at this time. It has either too great particularity or not particularity enough. There is no reason on earth in this bill, the main purpose and object of which seems to be to open the canal, and provide means of fixing tools, and provide for the accommodation of passing ships, and so on, to provide how much the fine shall be in a municipal court or what their limit of civil jurisdiction shall be. There is absolutely no reason for it, and no reason was given for it except we are following the terms of Executive orders applying to courts that we are continuing in operation. Now, the only purpose of this section will be that, whatever orders the President may make in the future, he can not avoid appointing a municipal judge and constable in each one of these towns. There are a certain number of jobs and salaries that will be fixed in this organic law. Whatever other orders are made, those orders seem to be preserved in this law. It seems to me if we have reserved by section 2 the right and power to preside over the Canal Zone and provide a system of government, as we will of necessity have to do, we at that time can provide how much the fines will be, how many constables we will have to appoint, and so on. There is no reason for providing for it in advance in this particular bill. All of that section after the word "defined," on lines 9 and 10 of page 9, relates to these particular provisions in regard to magistrate courts. Now, there is only one provision of that that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggested might be covered by existing law, and that is the three lines of the section on page 10 to the effect that the governor may appoint all notaries public.

But I am positive those are covered by continuing Executive orders which will continue in existence until Congress shall change them, so there is no reason for that. When Congress does legislate on the Canal Zone it should legislate on each of these particular provisions.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to cripple liberties and powers by anything we have put in this bill. Gentlemen, I think, appreciate the fact that these courts have all been abolished by previous sections already passed—that is, when the reorganization occurs the existing courts expire, and the whole organization of that court can go out of existence. Therefore it was necessary for us to authorize something in their place.

Mr. BORLAND. Where does the gentleman find these courts are abolished? It says expressly that they shall continue in existence until Congress shall otherwise provide.

Mr. ADAMSON. In section 4 it is expressly provided that when the President gets ready he will dismiss the commission, and the whole institution down there goes out of business.

Mr. BORLAND. Then, what is the meaning of the language in section 2, that these courts shall continue in operation until Congress shall otherwise provide?

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will withhold his questioning, I can make it plain to him. In order to bring everything to a decent close after the period of construction, we provided that he dismiss all the existing organizations when the time approached for it. That having been done, we had to provide for the governor and for the officers acting with the governor. And we have done that. And then we had to decide what we would do about the courts.

We attempted to economize a little by reducing the court machinery. In place of three systems of courts—the district, the circuit, and the supreme—we make one inferior court and one district court. We do not fix the pains and penalties for all crimes, nor the rules of recovery, or anything of that sort. We simply tried to use language that will put the business of three courts in two courts; that is all; and we had to use some of this particularity because we had to change a little the jurisdiction of one or two of these courts in order to make the business of three courts fit into two. And we followed that up a little later on by transferring the present business of the existing three courts into the two new courts, whichever one has jurisdiction of like cases, so that I think if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] will read the sections together he will find there is no trouble in the world about it. The new magistrate's court does a little more than the present district court. It has a little more jurisdiction than the present district court, and the new district court has part of the jurisdiction of the present circuit court and some of the present supreme court jurisdiction, so that the two new courts that we provide take in all the jurisdiction of the existing three courts and a subsequent section provides for the transfer of all pending cases. That is the explanation of it.

Mr. BORLAND. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask another question. If the President exercises his power under section 4 of discontinuing the Canal Commission and discontinuing the present organization, does the gentleman say that that will have the effect of abolishing the court?

Mr. ADAMSON. Section 2 says that all laws, orders, regulations, and ordinances adopted and promulgated in the Canal Zone by order of the President for the government and sanitation of the Canal Zone and the construction of the canal are ratified and confirmed as valid and binding until Congress shall provide otherwise; and then the existing courts established in the Canal Zone by Executive order are recognized and confirmed, to continue in operation until Congress shall otherwise provide. The President shall organize the new system as the canal approaches completion, including the system of governing the canal, and governing the zone, and running the courts, and we have tried to make them more simple and economical. I think we have improved the judicial system.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman's view as to that is approved of by everybody. There are too many courts down there, but if the existing courts are recognized by Executive order until Congress provides otherwise, the President or the commission, under the authority of section 4, would be authorized by the same provision, of course, to abolish the courts?

Mr. ADAMSON. We first ratify everything that is there, and authorize the President, as the canal approaches completion, to abolish the present régime and introduce a new régime, and in trying to put three courts into two we had to use a good deal of language. It is as clear and simple as we could make it. I have no doubt that in time it can be improved. We will have all the future to do it in. It may be three years before it can be done. At any rate, I am willing to cooperate with the gentleman from Missouri in making all the improvements we can.

Mr. BORLAND. It would do no harm to strike out the magistrates' courts.

Mr. ADAMSON. If you do that you will have to readjust the whole arrangement by which we are putting three courts into two.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the following words in line 5, page 10, namely, "with salaries to be fixed by the President," and insert in lieu thereof the amendment that was adopted at the end of line 25 on page 4. Will the Clerk report it? The same reason applies to this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 5, strike out the words "with salaries to be fixed by the President" and insert the following:

"And the compensation of such persons shall be fixed by the President, or by his authority, until such time as Congress may by appropriation act or other law regulate the same."

Mr. ADAMSON. We accept that amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 9, line 22, after word "courts," by inserting the following:

"Provided, That either party in civil actions and the defendant in criminal actions shall be entitled to a trial by jury, on request, of not less than six lawful men, to be drawn from the town in which the trial is held."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, when this bill goes into effect it will do away with the existing courts as they now are carried on in the Canal Zone. This bill seeks to establish, as the chairman of the committee has said, two different kinds of courts. One is the magistrate's court and the other is the district court. In no place in this section is it provided that the litigants may have the right to trial by jury. It will be seen in line 11 that the magistrate's court has exclusive original jurisdiction——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. If you should provide here—

Provided, That each party shall be entitled to a trial by jury—

Would not that settle the whole question, and then the rules and regulations governing the court would apply?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know just what the rules and regulations of the court are. It is very difficult, from the reading of this bill, to tell whether there are any other provisions except those contained in this bill, after the present régime of the court is superseded. For that reason I have sought to get the right of trial by jury inserted in this bill. [Applause.]

The bill provides, in line 11, as I was saying, that the magistrate's court has exclusive original jurisdiction of all civil cases wherein the amount does not exceed $300. It also has exclusive original jurisdiction in all criminal cases where the fine does not exceed $25 and where the additional punishment does not exceed 30 days' imprisonment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I listened to the reading of the gentleman's amendment, and it seemed to me that it provided that the trial by jury should be on the request of six men. Did the gentleman mean that?

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, no.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The amendment reads that way.

Mr. FOWLER. The reading of the amendment can be construed as any gentleman sees fit, but the legal construction is that either party in civil cases or the defendant in criminal cases may secure a trial by jury on request. No such construction as the gentleman suggests can be placed on the amendment without doing violence to it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. When we limit the original jurisdiction in the criminal cases to a fine of $25 or 30 days, and in civil cases to $300 with the right of appeal to the district court, which is held within a few miles of the place where any man resides on the zone, does not the gentleman think we have adequately safeguarded the rights of any man?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, this bill does not even provide for an appeal with the right of trial by jury.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BUTLER. It does in the next section.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There is a provision for an appeal to the district court on page 10, in line 9; and then on page 11, lines 14 and 15, it provides for a jury in every civil and criminal case, on the demand of either party.

Mr. FOWLER. I took the language on page 10 to mean an appeal to another court—the district court. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes longer on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the committee, I do not think any man ought to be subjected to a criminal prosecution without having a trial by jury. [Applause.] In this case you provide that a man may be tried for a criminal offense, that he may be convicted and a fine of at least $25 imposed, and a jail sentence not to exceed 30 days imposed also.

Now, that may all take place by a star-chamber court of one man; we have seen in America here the trouble with courts that are appointed by Executive power in this country, and we have seen the laboring man brought into court and fined without a trial by jury, because the presiding judge has said that a blanket injunction has been violated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say I do not think any legislative body ought ever to provide for a court or trial of a man without giving the right of trial by jury. This amendment provides for trial by jury on the request of the litigants of the suit, and if they are in favor of a trial of the case by the court, it gives them the right of a trial by the court. If they desire a trial by jury, that right ought never to be taken away from any man, I care not who he is. It cost the shedding of blood to wrench from the hand of old King John in 1215 the right of trial by jury. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, while Congress is preparing for a system of courts I do not think it ought ever to deny to any citizen the right of a trial by jury.

Now, I desire to ask the distinguished gentleman, the chairman of this committee, wherein he has provided for a trial by jury in any court in the Canal Zone for such cases?

Mr. ADAMSON. The next section commands the judge to provide for jury trial in certain cases.

Mr. FOWLER. In which section?

Mr. HAMLIN. Page 11, commencing with line 10:

Said judge shall provide for the selection, summoning, serving, and compensation of jurors from among the citizens of the United States, to be subject to jury duty in either division of such district, and a jury shall be had in any criminal case or civil case at law originating in said court on the demand of either party.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; but that is in the higher court. The justice court is the poor man's court, and was intended to be instituted for the purpose of reaching the poor man at his own door, and not to transport him across the sea for trial. Now, while it is intended by that provision to provide for a trial by jury, it is in the higher court, the district courts, and deals with cases originating in that court. It affords no relief to the litigant in the magistrate's court.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend my remarks on jury trial in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD; is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment, as follows:

That the right of trial by jury in both civil and criminal cases shall be preserved.

Mr. Chairman, this might seem at first blush to be a somewhat unimportant matter, but I want to call the attention of the committee to the provision that the gentleman from Missouri has just read, and I want to read it to this committee. It begins with line 10, on page 11:

Said judge shall provide for the selection, summoning, serving, and compensation of jurors from among the citizens of the United States, to be subject to jury duty in either division of such district, and a jury shall be had in any criminal case or civil case at law originating in said court on the demand of either party.

Now, you are not only depriving the man of the right of a trial by jury in the magistrate's—justice's—court in a criminal case, you not only deprive him of the right of trial by jury in the magistrate's—justice's, for here the magistrate's court stands for what we generally call a justice's court—court where the amount involved does not exceed $300, but you tell him that he can appeal to the district court, and then in plain language you say to him, "You are deprived of the right of trial by jury upon the case which you have brought to the district court by appeal, because the language in this act specifies that no jury trial shall be had in either civil or criminal case unless that case has 'originated' in the district court."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman if we passed this bill providing that nobody shall be or go upon the Canal Zone without the permission of the military governor, what on earth good would it be to give any man a right of trial by jury on the Canal Zone?

Mr. RAKER. Then why are you legislating here and putting this into the bill?

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, I am not.

Mr. RAKER. But we are assuming that there is going to be a court, and we are assuming that there is going to be criminal trials and also civil trials involving property to the extent of $300.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course it is well known in the matter of a trial by jury in criminal cases that it involves, first, an indictment by a grand jury as well as a trial by a traverse jury.

Mr. RAKER. Not necessarily.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not in California, the gentleman means. In California you can try a man on an accusation for murder. You do not require an indictment by a grand jury. That is the fact.

Mr. RAKER. No; that is not the fact.

Mr. BARTLETT. When did you change the law?

Mr. RAKER. We provide for a trial on information in California; that before a defendant can be placed upon trial in a superior court on a criminal charge, a magistrate, who may be a judge of the supreme court of the State, a justice of the court of appeals, a judge of the superior court, or a justice of the peace shall first hold a preliminary examination, and——

Mr. BARTLETT. I will ask the gentleman this question: Do you not try people in California for the highest offenses without an indictment of the grand jury?

Mr. RAKER. I will answer that question——

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, an answer yes or no will do.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I can answer it as a fact. In California, under our new constitution adopted in 1879, we adopted a provision saying that a man could be tried by indictment and on information, and information may be filed by the district attorney after examination had in a magistrate's court, and the magistrate may be a justice of the peace or he may be a judge of the superior court and he may be a judge of the district court of appeals or a judge of the supreme court. After he has heard the case and the evidence and has gone into the case fully, the magistrate may then say that he believes there is sufficient cause by which this man should be placed upon trial. All the evidence must be taken down in writing when it is a murder trial. Then the case goes before the district attorney and he must investigate it, and it is then in his judgment to say, in addition to that of the magistrate, whether or not he will file an information. If he believes from the evidence that a crime has been committed and the party charged is guilty thereof, he then files an information and the defendant is placed on trial. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Hurtado against The United States, held that that was the equivalent of an indictment. Now, getting back to the facts in this case——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not true in the case referred to—the Hurtado case in the Supereme Court of the United States—that that court decided that under the constitution of the State of California a man could be placed on trial for murder without an indictment of the grand jury?

Mr. RAKER. By indictment or by information after examination by a magistrate.

Mr. BARTLETT. And did not Judge Harlan dissent in that case from the opinion of the court, because he said that in criminal trials the guaranty of right of trial by jury under the Constitution of the United States meant by indictment by a grand jury as well as trial by a traverse jury?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be diverted from the facts involved here. That case has been decided and reaffirmed. I want to drive home this point: You are asked here to pass a law that a man in a civil case which involves his property to the extent of $300 is not entitled to a trial by jury; and if he is charged with a criminal offense he may be put on trial, and is not entitled to a trial by jury; and in addition to that I believe you will be unable to find in any State of the Union where a man, having appealed from a judgment of an inferior court to the higher court, is denied the right of trial by jury in that court, as you give to him in any other nisi prius court, or court of first instance, or, in other words, the trial court of record.

It does seem to me if we are going to establish a principle of law or a legislative declaration that will say that you are going to wipe out the rights of a man to a trial by jury and then prevent him from a retrial in a superior or district court, it is not right; is not fair. And let me call your attention to this fact further. Every man who has practiced law knows, or whether he has practiced law or not if he has been around a court he knows, when a man in a lower court is defeated he loses his standing, he loses his friends, and they all go and say, "You had better compromise this; the judgment is against you." If he is convicted in a magistrate's court, they say, "Oh, well, you had better lie down and quit." But in this case you have had another condition. You have said to him if he appeals that he is not entitled to a trial by jury or, in other words, trial by his peers, the same as a man who has been charged with an offense only greater in degree, because you fix the penalty, say, at $25 or $50 more than the man who has been charged in the lower court. It seems to me that this guaranteeing the right of a trial by jury in the magistrate's court, both civil and criminal cases, ought to be granted. Then, when you get to section 8, on page 11, line 14, the word "originating" should be stricken out so that a man who has appealed may have the same right as a man who has commenced a case in the district court originally. I believe the committee intended that, but the language is imperfect. They have been going over the question of coastwise trade, they have been going over the subject of whether the railroads should have anything to do with the running of this canal, and they have overlooked the rights of the men who are there doing the work and who might seek a remedy in the courts or, on the other hand, who might be compelled or driven into court to ask for their rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute has not been read by the Clerk. Will the gentleman please send up his substitute that it may be read?

Mr. RAKER. I will read it. I did not have time to write it, I was in such a hurry. "The right of trial by jury in both criminal and civil cases shall be preserved."

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like, with his permission, to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. It was the intent of this bill to permit the litigant in the inferior court the right of appeal to the district court?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It also was the intent of the bill to permit the litigant or defendant appealing to the district court to have a trial by jury.

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir; it was not so intended by the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS. On that point——

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I just rose to state to the committee the position of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on that question, and then I am perfectly willing for the gentleman to make any remarks he wishes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield to me there? Suppose there is a change of venue ordered?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think we devoted much attention to that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If they took a change of venue from one court in the zone to another, when they get to the other court can they get a trial by jury?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think I even studied that when I was in a justice court in Georgia—a change of venue from one justice court to another.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well——

Mr. ADAMSON. There is this court, what I reckon Blackstone would call a court of dirty feet——

Mr. BUTLER. Dusty feet.

Mr. ADAMSON. No; dirty feet.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have not got to say anything yet.

Mr. FOWLER. Before the gentleman proceeds I want to get——

Mr. ADAMSON. That is what I got up for, to state the situation, otherwise I would not have gotten up.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to know if the cases which are provided for in the magistrate's court can ever be tried in an appellate court or a court of appeals except upon an appeal? In other words, can it originally be instituted in a court of appeals?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, as I stated some time ago on the floor we have tried to economize by reducing the number of courts and the number of officers on the zone. Now, when we finish the canal and begin operating it we expect to reduce the population there by about 90 per cent.

We do not expect to have a large class of criminals there. We are going to have a high class of population of American citizens with their families, such a population as we have at home. And we are not going to operate a canal there with a view of encouraging litigation in any of the courts, high or low, and we calculated that with the changed conditions most of the business would be the higher business in the new district court, and that the jurisdiction of this magistrate's court, a newly created one, would not entail very much business on that court. And we calculated it was in the nature criminally of the police-court jurisdiction. Almost every city in this country sends men to the rock pile and fines them more than this every day. They do it here in Washington, and every city you can name, and in smaller towns than Panama and Colon.

Mr. FOWLER. They do not do it in Illinois. They try them by jury there.

Mr. ADAMSON. We try to guard the interests of such people as they are, but if even an American citizen visits that country and gets drunk or commits any other indiscretion and is arrested, I take it he will pay $25 and leave rather than stand a jury trial. If the people who are there want a trial, they can appeal to the judge of the district court, who will be a fine lawyer, and will be as fully competent and adequate to take care of the interests of the party as a jury in the magistrate's court would be.

It is simply a matter that this committee worked on, exercised its judgment on, expressed its opinion on, and, taking the matter as a whole, decided that the wisest thing we could do was not to give them the magistrate's jurisdiction under the present law, and we raised his civil jurisdiction to $300, and instead of encumbering that court with jury trials, allow the people to appeal to the district judge and let the district judge correct any errors that may have occurred.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

And the right of trial by jury in both civil and criminal cases shall be preserved.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the House to the situation that is presented by this bill. I do not agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] that jury trial ought to be given in the magistrates' courts. We know that in the States small cases, both civil and criminal, are tried by magistrates without a jury, but I believe that in all these States a right of appeal is allowed from the trial court to some court of record, in which a jury trial will be afforded. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] has given no reason why the class of citizens whom he says will reside upon the Isthmus hereafter should be denied the right of trial by jury which they enjoy at home.

Under this bill, the "nice citizen" to whom the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] refers, might be fined $25, and sent to jail for as much as 30 days. Should they appeal from this finding they would be denied the right of jury trial in the district court. Is there a parallel to this in any State of the Union? Why should American citizens, because, forsooth, they may happen to be upon the Isthmus of Panama, be denied the right of jury trial, under an act by which we are undertaking to establish American jurisprudence in that territory?

I perfectly agree as if I have stated that there is no need for juries in the magistrates courts, but in case of appeal to the court of record jury trial should be afforded. The maximum amount for which suit may be brought before a magistrate is $300. A litigant who has a claim for $301 can bring his action in the district court, and in that event has a right to a trial by jury. A suitor who has a claim for $300 or less is compelled to resort to the petty court. Should he lose in that court and take his appeal, he sees his neighbor with a claim of $301, demanding and securing a jury, while his appeal must be submitted to a single judge. What reason has been offered on this floor for this distinction? Such a distinction is not made at home. So far as I am aware, there is no State in this Union in which a man who has been sent to jail for 30 days, is denied the right of jury trial, on an appeal taken to a court of record.

Mr. RAKER. In addition to the condition of not over $300, we should not forget that interest can be added, and it excludes the jurisdiction and the costs.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I see the point the gentleman makes. The real amount in controversy might be as much as $500, and still the right of jury trial would be denied on the appeal.

Mr. RAKER. In one case in California, about seven years ago, the amount recovered in a case that went on appeal was over $30,000. It originated in a justice's court on a note under $300.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] permit a question? If the gentleman from Virginia desires to put a check on this magistrate's court——

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have spoken to little purpose if——

Mr. ADAMSON (continuing). I would suggest to the gentleman that he could serve his purpose better by striking from lines 14 and 15 the words "originating in said court."

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is the point to which I am addressing myself. It is that section of the bill that should be amended.

Mr. ADAMSON. But we do not think it wise or necessary to go to that expense, because we believe they can secure substantial justice without it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not agree with my friend. I am a firm believer, both as a practitioner, and as a judge, in jury trials. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman ever heard any complaint in reference to trying cases in Panama?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is familiar with the fact that in the city of Colon and in the city of Panama all cases are tried without a jury, is he not?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am not speaking of Spanish jurisprudence. It has been distinctly pointed out that we hope to secure a high standard of American citizenship on the zone. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] said we would have a high type of American citizens there.

Mr. MANN. The object of this bill is to provide for the government of Americans on the zone. The theory of this bill is to eliminate all other people on the zone. There are a number of Spanish communities still on the zone, but they will be eliminated after awhile. They have been used to the Spanish jurisprudence.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand. But we are not concerned with the Spanish courts, or the methods of Spanish jurisprudence on the Isthmus. They are bad enough. Should I be on the Isthmus, or any other Member on this floor, or any American citizen, who has been used to a jury trial, and while there become involved in litigation, we would want a trial by jury. We would not regard the argument as sufficient that we should be deprived of jury trial, because the Spanish citizens of the Republic of Panama, were not familiar with the use of the jury in misdemeanor trials, or civil litigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am perfectly familiar with the courts on the Isthmus. I have been to the Isthmus of Panama several times, and from what I have heard of the local courts, they often furnish a travesty on justice. But we are not establishing Spanish courts, but courts that will try American citizens, and controversies between such citizens. The Americans who will find themselves on the Isthmus, are entitled to have that system of courts, and those forms of trials with which they are familiar at home. The American jury is good enough for American citizens anywhere, and everywhere that the flag flies. As I have said, I do not contend that juries should sit in the petty trial courts. We are not accustomed to afford jury trials in such courts in the United States.

Mr. FOWLER. We do.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But when an appeal is taken in those cases in which it is conceived that an injustice has been done, will anyone tell me why this appeal should not be tried by jury in the court of record? Yet this bill expressly provides that only the suitors who bring their suits in a court or record shall have a right of trial by jury. The suits must originate in that court. In other words, it is clearly intended to deny a trial by jury in those civil and criminal cases which reach the district court by appeal.

I submit that no suggestion of economy should operate to forbid a trial by jury under such circumstances. The expenditure of a small amount would afford a jury trial to all the appellants from the petty courts. It would be poor economy to deny trial by jury in such cases, in order to save a few dollars. It is not sound policy, or good government to deny to our people in a remote land those rights which we regard so highly when at home, in the States. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, there is no chance——

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, what is pending before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], and the substitute to that amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]; and debate on them both is pending.

Mr. ADAMSON. Do I understand that we are going to yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] to strike out those words relating to the district court?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to strike out the words originating on page 11, line 14. But I first wanted to get passed the amendment which I offered.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman is going to do the other, he does not need the present one.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with any of the gentlemen here that the right of trial by jury ought to be taken away from a man in the justice's court. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the substitute offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the rules, I have the right to close the debate on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman wanted to offer an additional amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. How far have we read?

The CHAIRMAN. We have read section 7.

Mr. HAMLIN. We have not read section 8?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then the gentleman's motion is premature.

Mr. ADAMSON. I suggest to the gentleman that he wait until we reach section 8 and conform to the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will allow the Chair, under the rule the Member offering the amendment is entitled to five minutes, and then there may be five minutes in opposition, but unless unanimous consent is given, that closes the debate on that amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak upon this question for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] asks unanimous consent that he may speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee understands the gentleman's position, so far as his argument is concerned. If we can just find out what he wants, I should like to know what his amendment is.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 9, line 22, after the word "courts," by adding the following:

"Provided, That either party in civil actions and the defendant in criminal actions shall be entitled to a trial by jury, on request, of not less than six lawful men, to be drawn from the town in which the trial is held.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will not withdraw that amendment, let us vote it down and go on, and the gentleman can offer it at the other place.

Mr. SABATH. The jury trial is provided on the next page, in the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has asked unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think we all understand his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, it has been said on the floor of this House that the right of trial by jury is not given in magistrates' courts in the States of this Union. Gentlemen who have made these statements are certainly not familiar with the practice in the different States of the Union.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I say in most of the States.

Mr. FOWLER. In my own State of Illinois, where freedom flourishes, there is not a trial court but gives a man the right to a trial by jury, and I am in favor of extending that right to all people over whom the flag of freedom floats. It would be a disgrace to that national flag to say that it floats over any citizen of the United States who is deprived of the right of trial by jury. [Applause.] Now, gentlemen, I do not want you to trifle with this question. If you are going to deliberately vote down my amendment, do it like gentlemen, and do not come here and try to destroy the effect of our efforts to secure trial by jury in a jurisdiction over which you are establishing a court. The people of Panama are just as much entitled to trial by jury as the people in any other State or Territory of this Union

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. FOWLER. Not now. Mr. Chairman, the right of trial by jury can never be had in the justice's court in this jurisdiction, because that court has original, exclusive jurisdiction over a certain class of cases. That class of cases can never be instituted in the higher court—the district court, as it is called. If that class of cases can not be instituted in the district court, then they never can be tried by a jury, according to the provisions of this bill. You say you have provided for a jury in section 8, but in that section you only provide for a jury for cases that originate in the district court, and the cases that originate in the justices' court will never be tried by a jury anywhere. [Applause.]

I desire to call the attention of the House to the sixth amendment to the Constitution, styled, Article VI, which preserves inviolate the right of trial by jury in the district wherein the crime is charged to have been committed, compulsory process to compel witnesses to attend and testify in defendant's behalf, and counsel for his defense are equally provided for in this article. All three of these constitutional rights are ignored in this bill. Article VII reads as follows:

ART. VI. In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

Not only are defendants charged with crime deprived of the benefits of this provision of the Constitution, but litigants in civil suits are also deprived of the rights and benefits of Article VII, which provides for the trial by jury in all cases where the amount exceeds $20. Here are the provisions of that article:

ART. VII. In suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed $20 the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise reexamined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to be recognized for just an observation.

Mr. ADAMSON. I move that debate on this section and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not take another gentleman off the floor to make that motion.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I yield to the gentleman to make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, there are several other amendments. Let it be simply on this amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. My proposition does not shut out amendments, but only debate.

Mr. GARRETT. The question ought to be put on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The question was put and it was agreed to.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the practice as to a jury trial in magistrates' courts I desire to say that in the majority of the States of the Union juries are allowed in the justice of the peace courts. There are certain courts known as police courts, or municipal or magistrates' courts, where juries are not allowed, and possibly a few cases where in courts of justices of the peace, which is a species of State court, the jury is not provided for. But here we are creating a justice court for the Panama Canal Zone, and I for one favor the allowing of trial by jury on the demand of the defendant, or either of the parties in a civil suit, the same as we have in the States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 8, noes 39.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding after the word "courts," page 9, line 22, the following:

That the right of trial by jury in civil cases shall be preserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 22, after the word "courts," insert the following:
"That the right of trial by jury in civil cases shall be preserved."

Mr. ADAMSON. That is merely an academic declaration, and we might as well vote it down.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following:

Add, after the word "courts," page 9, line 22, the following:
"The right of trial by jury in criminal cases shall be preserved."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 22, after the word "courts," insert the following: "The right of trial by jury in criminal cases shall be preserved."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois raises the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the necessity of haste in this bill I will withdraw the point of order. [Applause.]

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 8. That there shall be in the Canal Zone one district court with two divisions, one including Balboa and the other including Cristobal; and one district judge of the said district, who shall hold his court in both divisions at such time as he may designate by order, at least once a month in each division. The rules of practice in such district court shall be prescribed or amended by order of the President. The said district court shall have original jurisdiction of all felony cases and of all causes in equity and admiralty and all cases at law involving principal sums exceeding $300 and of all appeals from judgments rendered in magistrates' courts. The jurisdiction in admiralty herein conferred upon the district judge and the district court shall be the same that is exercised by the United States district judges and the United States district courts, and the procedure and practice shall also be the same. The district judge shall also have jurisdiction of all other matters and proceedings not herein provided for which are now within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone, of the Circuit Court of the Canal Zone, or the District Court of the Canal Zone, or the judges thereof. Said judge shall provide for the selection, summoning, serving, and compensation of jurors from among the citizens of the United States, to be subject to jury duty in either division of such district, and a jury shall be had in any criminal case or civil case at law originating in said court on the demand of either party. There shall be a district attorney and a marshal for said court. It shall be the duty of the district attorney to conduct all business, civil and criminal, for the Government, and to advise the governor of the Panama Canal on all legal questions touching the operation of the canal and the administration of civil affairs. It shall be the duty of the marshal to execute all process of the court, preserve order therein, and do all things incident to the office of marshal. The district judge, the district attorney, and the marshal shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of four years each, or until their successors are appointed and qualified, and during their terms of office shall reside within the Canal Zone, and shall hold no other office nor serve on any official board or commission nor receive any emoluments except their salaries. The district judge shall receive the same salary paid the district judges of the United States, and shall appoint the clerk of said court, who shall receive a salary to be fixed by the President. The district judge shall be entitled to six weeks' leave of absence each year with pay. During his absence or during any period of disability or disqualification from sickness or otherwise to discharge his duties the same shall be temporarily performed by any circuit or district judge of the United States who may be designated by the President, and who, during such service, shall receive the additional mileage and per diem allowed by law to district judges of the United States when holding court away from their homes. The district attorney and the marshal shall be paid each a salary of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Early in the afternoon I sought to address the committee relative to the question of tolls, but I learned that by unanimous consent that subject was to go over until the last thing in the discussion. I hope that I may be indulged at this time very briefly notwithstanding that agreement, because I find that it will be impossible for me to be here when that portion of the bill is reached, and I wish to make a few remarks upon that subject.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman going to leave the city?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; I am going to leave the city. I am going to Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make some brief remarks about the toll question and insert in the RECORD a portion of the message of the President of the United States on that subject; also a portion of the statement made by the Secretary of War on the question of tolls.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIS. In his annual report for 1911, and in his address before the Commercial Club of Kansas City on November 14, 1911, the Secretary of War made the following statements on the subject of canal tolls:

RIGHT OF UNITED STATES TO PAY TOLLS ON AMERICAN VESSELS.

Involved in the problem of fixing tolls is the question whether the United States has the right under the treaty to pay the tolls on American vessels using the canal. An examination of the treaty and the surrounding circumstances to my mind leaves no doubt as to the right of the United States, both legally and morally, to pay the tolls on its vessels. This is a perfectly recognized practice in respect to the tolls of the Suez Canal, the toll rules of which canal were adopted by the United States in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty for the government of the Panama Canal. At least one of our national competitors in the use of the Panama Canal, Spain, has already taken steps to provide for the payment out of her national treasury of the Panama tolls on one of the Spanish lines which will use that canal. Furthermore, I can see no difference, save in form (provided the tolls for other nations are kept reasonable, as we have also covenanted to do), whether the United States should make this appropriation out of her own Treasury to American vessels, by receiving the toll money from them first and repaying it to them, or by simply relieving them from the payment of tolls in the first place. In either case the money in question belongs to the United States.

Closely involved in this question of fixing the tolls is the question whether the United States has the right to pay the tolls on American vessels using the canal. There has been criticism against even the suggestion of this possibility. There was similar criticism a few years ago against the proposition to fortify the canal, until the publication of Secretary Hay's correspondence with Lord Lansdowne revealed the frankness of our negotiations on that subject with Great Britain and showed how clearly Great Britain had recognized our right to fortify the canal. The United States will deal with its sister nations in perfect frankness and in absolute fulfillment of its treaty pledges. There will be no violation of our treaties; neither will there be any evasion of them. When the facts as to this question are examined, they are, in my opinion, so clear as to leave no doubt or question as to the right of the United States, both legal and moral, in this respect. The clause of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty which governs the question is a declaration by the United States which expressly adopts the rules governing the Suez Canal. It provides:

"The United States adopts, as the basis of the neutralization of such ship canal, the following rules, substantially as embodied in the convention of Constantinople, signed the 28th of October, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Canal; that is to say:

"1. The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable."

Now, in the case of the Suez Canal, it has never been considered a violation of this rule of neutralization for a nation to pay the tolls upon the vessels flying its flag. This is done directly by the Governments of Russia and Austria-Hungary, which have made appropriations for the express purpose of paying the tolls of vessels of their merchant marine. Furthermore, substantially every other European Government appropriates from its treasury and pays to vessels using the Suez Canal, in the form of subsidies, sums of money fully or partly equivalent to the tolls of the canal. In the case of Germany, France, Japan, Italy, and Spain, the amount thus appropriated is regularly more than sufficient to pay the tolls. In the case of Great Britain the subsidies paid to the Peninsula & Oriental Co.—the principal line which uses the canal—amount to nearly six-sevenths of the tolls. These subsidies were not all limited to mail steamers; many of them were paid likewise on freight steamers.

It is perfectly clear, therefore, that when the Panama Canal is opened, the English vessels which use it, the German vessels which use it, the vessels of practically all of our competitors which use it, will be in receipt from their respective Governments of sums of money, either given them directly for the purpose of paying their tolls or perfectly applicable in their discretion to such use. It will be impossible for the United States to prevent this; for, under the Suez rules which we have thus adopted for Panama, such payment does not amount to a discrimination or a violation of the terms of entire equality for which those rules provide. Is, then, the United States, which built the canal, to be the one nation whose vessels can not have such assistance? Will any rule of construction of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty or any rule of honor prevent the United States from adopting a similar course?

Will anyone contend that the almost universal system of governmental assistance to a merchant marine has been limited, in our case, by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty—limited, not by plain and express covenant, but by indirection and implication? Would Great Britain dream of making such a contention against the United States when she herself is paying annual subsidies to her merchant marine of between six and seven million dollars a year? Has the United States, in her covenant to "insure the neutrality of the canal on terms of entire equality" so shackeled her own powers that she can not resort to the universally established methods which her competitors will use in respect to their vessels passing through the canal? Does equality to all other nations mean inequality to the United States? The answer is self-evident.

The clause was never intended to forbid a nation to assist her own marine with her own funds. By it the United States barred herself from using her power over the canal to injure the trade of another. She could not isolate or discriminate in any way against another in that other's use of the canal. But it was never dreamed that she could not use the resources of her own Treasury in favor of her own vessels.

I think, therefore, that the United States has a clear right to appropriate to the vessels, paying the same the sums paid into its Treasury by those vessels in the form of canal tolls. This being so, there is no difference, save in form, whether she makes this appropriation out of her Treasury to such vessels by receiving the money from them first and repaying it to them, or by simply relieving them from the payment of those tolls. In either case the money in question belongs to the United States. In either case it amounts to a gift by the United States of her own funds to the vessels in question.

The existence of the right is clear; the need or wisdom of its assertion presents a broad question of policy. The exercise of this power must depend upon the conclusion, based upon full understanding of the facts, that the national interests will be furthered by securing this advantage to American vessels engaged in trans-Isthmian trade.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I will state that when we get back into the House I am going to ask unanimous consent for all gentlemen who addressed the committee to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be indulged briefly, and I thank the committee for the courtesy of their attention. If I had had the opportunity I should have liked to make some extended observations on this question of tolls, which seems to me to be of tremendous importance. But I wish to take the time of the committee only to say, without going into the advisability of free tolls or preferential tolls for American ships, without going into the question as to whether we ought to grant free tolls or not, without going into the question as to whether we ought to grant preference to American ships, that in my judgment it is purely and simply and solely a question that concerns this country alone. I do not admit, Mr.

Chairman, that by any treaty that this Government has entered into with any foreign power, there is any nation on this earth that has anything whatever to say about what we shall do with reference to our own domestic questions. [Applause.] If we want to give our American ships preferential rights we have the right to do that. If we want to remit the tolls absolutely we have the right to do that. If we wish to remit the tolls as to the coastwise ships and not as to the others, or if we desire to remit tolls wholly or in part as to the ships engaged in the foreign trade and not as to the coastwise ships, that is purely a question of domestic policy that concerns us here in the United States of America, and no other nation has anything to say about it. [Applause.]

A significant thing, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that there is not any other nation that is objecting, there is no other nation that is proposing to say anything about it. Everybody admits the justice and the truth of what the President says here. The President says in his message:

We own the canal. It was our money that built it. We have the right to charge tolls for its use.

He then goes on, and in a portion of his message, which I shall insert in the RECORD, states that it is purely a question of policy for us to determine. In his message to Congress on December 21, 1911, the President said:

POWER EXISTS TO RELIEVE AMERICAN SHIPPING.

I am very confident that the United States has the power to relieve from the payment of tolls any part of our shipping that Congress deems wise. We own the canal. It was our money that built it. We have the right to charge tolls for its use. Those tolls must be the same to everyone; but when we are dealing with our own ships, the practice of many Governments of subsidizing their own merchant vessels is so well established in general that a subsidy equal to the tolls, an equivalent remission of tolls, can not be held to be a discrimination in the use of the canal. The practice in the Suez Canal makes this clear. The experiment in tolls to be made by the President would doubtless disclose how great a burden of tolls the coastwise trade between the Atlantic and the Pacific coast could bear without preventing its usefulness in competition with the transcontinental railroads. One of the chief reasons for building the canal was to set up this competition and to bring the two shores closer together as a practical trade problem. It may be that the tolls will have to be wholly remitted. I do not think this is the best principle, because I believe that the cost of such a Government work as the Panama Canal ought to be imposed gradually, but certainly upon the trade which it creates and makes possible. So far as we can, consistent with the development of the world's trade through the canal, and the benefit which it was intended to secure to the east and west coastwise trade, we ought to labor to secure from the canal tolls a sufficient amount ultimately to meet the debt which we have assumed and to pay the interest.

Away back in 1852 certain foreign nations sought to induce this country to enter the famous tripartite agreement, by which we would bind ourselves that we would never under any circumstances seek to get control of Cuba; but Edward Everett, then Secretary of State, wisely answered France and England that while we did not propose to annex Cuba, while we did not propose to conquer Cuba or buy Cuba, he gave notice to those great powers of Europe—to France and England—that if we did want to buy Cuba or annex it or conquer it, it was none of their business; that it was an American problem, which we would settle without reference to the wishes of those European powers. And so I say in conclusion regarding tolls on the Panama Canal that it seems to me this is a question that is purely an American problem; whether we shall remit a part of the tolls is a question for our country alone. It is an American problem, an American canal, planned by American engineers and American brains and dug by the American people with American money. It is a part of the United States, and we have a right to do with it as we please. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, strike out all after the word "district," in line 13, down to and including the word "party," in line 15, and insert the following:

"And upon the demand of either party in a civil case where the amount in controversy exceeds $20, and in all criminal cases upon the demand of the defendant, a trial by jury shall be had."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 13, strike out the words "and a jury shall be had in any criminal case or civil case at law originating in said court on the demand of either party" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"And in any civil or criminal case in said court a jury shall be afforded on the demand of any party."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 18, noes 39.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eight gentleman have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-nine Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, it is manifest that some gentlemen are impatient and do not wish to remain here longer, and I am very anxious to finish the uncontested portions of the bill. I have yielded to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] more than to anybody else to-day, and I think it ungracious in him to force us to quit at this time. We can finish in 15 minutes if he will withdraw his demand and let us go on and read the uncontested portions of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is too late to withdraw the point of no quorum. There is only one of two things that can be done.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LLOYD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21969, for the government of the Panama Canal, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. It turns out that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], whom the Chair designated to preside to-morrow, is out of the city, or will be, and therefore the Chair appoints Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania to act as Speaker pro tempore to-morrow at the memorial exercises to the late Representative HENRY H. BINGHAM.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members who have spoken on the bill have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on the bill have the privilege of extending their remarks.

Mr. MANN. For how long?

Mr. ADAMSON. Just to revise and extend what they have said.

The SPEAKER. On the subject of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; on the bill; simply to extend the speeches they have made. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the House adjourns to-night under the present parliamentary situation, would it be in order, under the Speaker's recognition, or would I be recognized, to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on Monday, or would that be suspension day, and considered as sacred?

The SPEAKER. Monday is Unanimous Consent Calendar day and suspension of the rules.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then I will explain to the Speaker, we have been deprived of some time this evening on account of it being Saturday evening and Members being scattered, and I would like to ask if it would be agreeable to everybody to recoup a lost hour by meeting at 10 o'clock on Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman asks unanimous consent, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do.

Mr. MANN. I think we had better meet that situation on Monday. It might be possible that we can go ahead with this bill on Monday.

Mr. ADAMSON. All right; I will withdraw the request.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. Under the unanimous-consent order which was made a few days ago it was provided that the House should meet at 11 o'clock, except on Wednesdays——

Mr. MANN. And Sundays.

Mr. GARRETT. Does that mean the House will meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. No; the request was to except Wednesday, and, on the suggestion of the Chair, Sunday was included to save that very point.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I want to know if under the unanimous consent secured this morning to print these amendments it includes the printing of them in a separate document?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] requested the Chair, as he is going to leave town, to ask unanimous consent that he might have 20 days in which to extend his remarks on a subject on which he had already gotten leave for five days to extend them, and he did not have time to do it. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what becomes of the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

The SPEAKER. He did not make any request, he asked a question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments and substitutes which have been offered or been proposed to section 5 be printed as proposed amendments in bill form.

Mr. BROUSSARD. That, I understand, was already granted this morning.

Mr. MANN. No. Was that granted as to bill form? I think it was document form this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair's recollection is that the grant this morning included printing both in the RECORD and as a document.

Mr. MANN. Neither one is of any value. To print in bill form is of value to the House.

The SPEAKER. Well, does the gentleman prefer that request now?

Mr. MANN. I made that request.

The SPEAKER. As to sections 5 and 11?

Mr. MANN. To print the different amendments separately in bill form.

The SPEAKER. On which amendment?

Mr. MANN. All of the amendments to section 5, or substitutes for section 5.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that all the amendments to section 5 or substitutes therefor, which have been offered, shall be printed in bill form as proposed amendments.

Mr. SULZER. And also in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. That has already been ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOREMUS. Does that include the substitutes?

The SPEAKER. Yes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman desires to have read an amendment, could not he under this same provision introduce that bill and have it printed for Tuesday just the same?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes he could. He has the right to introduce any sort of a bill, and it would be printed if you had it now. The Chair does not know how long it takes for the office to print it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Has anybody any objection to my moving to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend until we get this point cleared. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to print the amendments on section 5 and the substitutes therefor in bill form as proposed amendments? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PRINTING OF NEWSPAPER ARTICLES IN RECORD.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the Post Office bill is over in the Senate, and there is in that bill the question of parcel post, good roads, and requiring of the owners of newspapers to publish their names. I have an article published on the 11th of this month in the Sacramento Bee, of California, one of the leading papers of that State, upholding the action of the House and appealing to the Republican Senate to put it on, and I ask that this may be printed in the RECORD, at the end thereof, to show the position of California upon the amendment of the House to that bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BOEHNE] gave notice the other day that he would object to any such request as this, as I understood him. As this is a late hour, I will object until he is present.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE (H. DOC. NO. 762).

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 532.

Resolved, That 16,000 copies of the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary, Sixty-second Congress, second session, March 13, 1912, entitled "Woman Suffrage," serial No. 2, be printed for the use of the House document room.

The report (No. 740) on House resolution No. 532 was read, as follows:

Mr. FINLEY, from the Committee on Printing, makes the following report to accompany House resolution 532:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the House resolution (H. Res. 532) providing that 16,000 copies of the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary, Sixty-second Congress, second session, March 13, 1912, entitled "Woman Suffrage," serial No. 2, be printed for the use of the House document room, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

The estimated cost will be $466.04.

Mr. MANN. Well, I suppose it is worth it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING OF NEWSPAPER ARTICLES IN RECORD.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know if it appears in the RECORD whether it is the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that hereafter there is to be no unanimous consent for printing of articles in the RECORD by Members on this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. While that is not a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair will answer it. That was not the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The gentleman from Illinois stated that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BOEHNE] stated a day or two ago he had gotten tired of this kind of thing and was hereafter going to object, and that because Mr. BOEHNE was not here and it was late in the evening, for the present the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would object.

Mr. RAKER. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. I am confident that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BOEHNE] would not object.

Mr. KENDALL. Do you speak for him?

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Sunday, May 19, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. RUBEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, May 19, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania, Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the life and light of men, the dispenser of every good gift, author of the immortality of the soul, which links the now with the then, soothes the dying, comforts the living, makes heroes of men in times of peril, and promises that perfection which we all long for; there is something finer in every man than anything he says or does. Make us conscious of Thy presence as we thus gather to pay our tribute of love and respect to the gallant soldier, the faithful servant, who in war and in peace served his State and Nation with fidelity, efficiency, and thus proved himself worthy of the confidence reposed in him, and has been summoned to the larger fields of endeavor. Help us to look forward with confidence to his friendly greeting where partings never come, "and when the tongue is eloquent no more the soul shall speak in tears of gratitude." In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, who taught us to pray: Our father who art in heaven, hallowed by Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was being read by the Clerk, when, at the request of Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The Journal was approved.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE HENRY H. BINGHAM.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 543.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. HENRY H. BINGHAM, late a Member of the House from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were considered and agreed to.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a number of the Members of the House who desired to speak to-day are necessarily absent, and I ask unanimous consent that those who wish to do so may have the privilege of extending remarks in the RECORD upon the life, character, and services of the late Gen. BINGHAM.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that those who desire may extend remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and services of Gen. BINGHAM. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, among the rich treasures of the Capitol is Rothermel's celebrated painting of the Battle of Gettysburg. Riding beside the gallant Hancock is the form on horseback of a 22-year-old boy, weighing not more than 110 pounds, enveloped in the smoke of the fire of the greatest battle of American history. That boy was Gen. HENRY H. BINGHAM, in whose honor we are met to-day.

Those who went forward in 1861 in the war of the Union—those from the South to defend the cause in which they believed, those from the northern tier of States who felt it incumbent upon them to preserve the Union—were the flower of the youth of the Nation. Their average age did not exceed the age of manhood, and this boy of 22, brevetted from time to time for gallant service on the field of battle until he had become a brigadier general, was one of those who braved the dangers of war that the Union might be spared.

Those of us who live in peace and in plenty in these times of progress, prosperity, and great national development have but to picture in the mind's eye the boys leaving the farm, the boys leaving the factory, the boys leaving the mother's side, the boys separating themselves from wives and sisters, to fully understand the debt we still owe to the brave young men who went forth into unknown fields, to survive, perhaps to perish, that we might now enjoy the blessings of their victory.

HENRY H. BINGHAM was one of these boys. They who fought upon the side of the Union fought foemen who were valiant and "worthy of their steel." One of the few survivors of those against whom they contended at Gettysburg was our distinguished colleague from Virginia, Capt. JOHN LAMB. I had hoped Capt. LAMB would speak at these services this morning. He fully intended to do so, but the message now lying on my desk indicates that a sudden affliction has prevented his appearance here to pay his tribute to the gallantry, and the heroism, and the bravery of the "boy" upon the other side, upon whom the laurels of victory ultimately fell. They were brave men, and chivalry is in order now.

I have in my hand the statement of one of those who participated in the Battle of Gettysburg, as BINGHAM did, and as LAMB did, one since passed to his reward, as all of the great soldiers are now rapidly passing to their reward, who depicted in a brief paragraph the scene which Rothermel portrayed in his famous painting. In his work upon the "Medal of honor men," Gen. St. Clair A. Mulholland recites this thrilling narrative:

> The writer remembers Companion BINGHAM while in the Army and on the staff of that great soldier and son of Pennsylvania, Winfield Scott Hancock, called the "Superb," and one scene of the war he vividly recalls. It was on July 3, 1863, at Gettysburg, when, preceding the charge of Pickett's division of 18,000 men, on the line held by Hancock and the Second Corps, 127 Confederate cannon played on that line from 1 until 3 o'clock. Men and horses were torn to atoms, cannon dismounted, and ammunition chests one after the other blown up. The smoke of the artillery shrouded the battle field, the roar of the batteries shaking the earth and reechoing through the mountains of the Blue Ridge. It was a scene of wild tumultuous war, such as our country or the world seldom sees. In the midst of the storm, coming through the battle smoke, riding through our batteries that covered the ridge on which the Second Corps was formed, the flag of the Second Corps was seen and around was grouped half a dozen of the bravest and best of the Army—Hancock, the "Superb," commander of the corps and of the whole left of the Union line, Capt. William Mitchell, his adjutant general, Capt. E. P. Bronson, Capt. Isaac Parker, and Capt. HENRY H. BINGHAM—the corps flag flying and borne aloft by James Wells, of the Sixth New York Cavalry. The little group with Hancock at their head rode the entire length of the Second Corps line, from Zeigler's woods on the right to the extreme left, near Little Round Top. Slowly the little party rode along the terrible crest, while shot and shell roared and crashed around them. Every once in a while, as they passed along, winding through the masked batteries, Hancock would pause, say a word of encouragement to the men who were waiting to receive the attack of Pickett's thousands, and win the victory that marked the end of the war. And so from the extreme right to the extreme left of his command, nearly a mile, and back again, under the fire of 127 guns, rode the little group. The sight of the flag and of Hancock and his staff, calm, fearless, and confident, did much to nerve the stout hearts of the men of the Second Corps and aid them in winning, an hour later, the most important victory of the century.

Mr. Speaker, here is a story for the boys of the present generation. The thrilling scenes described by Gen. Mulholland are about to be recounted, after 50 years, upon the battle field of Gettysburg. The anniversary of the great battle is soon to be celebrated, and deeds of heroism and self-sacrifice on the part of brave and gallant boys of sixty-one and sixty-five—boys with aspirations equal to any of the present time—will be told and retold to inspire confidence in the Nation they fought to preserve.

The HENRY H. BINGHAM, captain upon the staff of Hancock, the "Superb," at Gettysburg, riding through the smoke and peril of a constant fire along the ridge, about to be attacked by the boldest chargers who ever faced a foe, a mark for the sharpshooters of the enemy, was the same HENRY H. BINGHAM who served in this House with us and our seniors for 33 long years. He was the same BINGHAM who performed here acts of service and devotion to his country, which stamped him a citizen in peace equal to the intrepid hero we knew him to have been in war.

There were some of you who came in contact with the courtly "Father of the House" who, unfamiliar with his earlier history, may not have observed in this quiet, modest gentleman the soldier who rode by Hancock's side in the most terrible conflict of the century. Gen. BINGHAM was wounded at Gettysburg, and that wound was a constant reminder to him throughout his civil life of this great conflict in which he took so honorable and conspicuous a part. At Spotsylvania he was again wounded, and also at Farmville. On another occasion he was captured by the enemy, although he escaped through the night. In him we had the soldier, the hero, and the citizen.

There are others, Mr. Speaker, who will dwell, I hope, upon the military phase of the career of Gen. BINGHAM. He had more to do than to fight the battles of his country. He had a great civic service to perform. Continuing his service in the Army until 1866, he was chosen to be the postmaster of the city of Philadelphia. He had been carefully educated and was a man of the finest instincts and of the strongest family ties. A college graduate, who donned the shoulder straps to do battle for his country, he was well equipped for civil life when the war was over. As postmaster of Philadelphia he endeared himself to the people, as he did also in other public offices to which he was elected. So well, indeed, did he fulfill his duties that when it came time to fill a vacancy in these Halls there was but one name upon the lips of the people of the old first district. That was the name of the gallant young soldier who had wrought so well in war and performed so well in peace.

He came to Congress more than 33 years ago. The story of those 33 years is the story of the Nation's greatest progress. We have grown from 50,000,000 people to be a Nation of 91,000,000; grown until the influence of the Stars and Stripes has made itself felt in every clime and until the possessions of the United States are a part of every hemisphere. Gen. BINGHAM participated in this growth and in this development.

Men grow old and we are prone to forget. The sere and yellow leaf comes only too quickly. Do we treasure well the memory of those who served us well? What was the part of our colleague in the development of the Nation? He was chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads when the people were demanding better conditions in the postal service. It was under his administration as chairman of that committee that the letter postage of to-day was reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents. It was during his conduct of the affairs of that committee that the present postal rate for newspaper matter was established. He aided in the reduction of that rate, and thus in the dissemination of knowledge throughout the land. Have the newspapers remembered the service of the gallant hero and the quiet statesman who helped to inaugurate these reforms? Has the public, now exceeding 91,00,000 people, a full conception of the service of this man whom we have just laid to rest? And these were but few of the public benefactions which he inspired.

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand an article upon the life of Gen. BINGHAM, by one of the talented writers of the city of Philadelphia, which he loved so well, an extract from which would seem appropriate.

Says Mr. William Perrine, in the Evening Bulletin, of Philadelphia:

> It has been very seldom that Members of the American Congress have held their seats longer in a continuous service than the late Gen. BINGHAM held his as a Member for the first district of Pennsylvania in the course of 33 years. The district which he represented was largely the same, regarding the locale of his constituency, as it was when he was first elected. He entered the House when Hayes was President of the United States; he was there when the passions of the Civil War and the reconstruction period were still bitter in both parties, and he made his advent at a time when Simon Cameron, who was about to pass the scepter of Republican authority to his favorite son, was still as a master spirit to the Pennsylvania delegation. Samuel J. Randall, William D. Kelley, Charles O'Neill, and Alfred C. Harmer were then the other Members from the Philadelphia districts; all of them passed long ago into the great beyond, and BINGHAM, who was the youngest among them when he became their colleague, now sinks into his grave at more than threescore and ten. Every man who was an active and powerful leader of either the Republican or the Democratic Party when he went into Congress no longer exists or has disappeared from public view. He had become one of the very few Members who could look back to the time when Blaine, Conkling, Morton, Sherman, Logan, Allison, and their comrades in leadership shaped the policy of the Republican Party, and Thurman, Hendricks, Tilden, Bayard, Voorhees, Cox, and their comrades exerted a like control over the Democratic Party. It was thus, toward the last, that there was a general disposition to contemplate him, in his political personality, if not also in his habits of thought, as a survivor or relic of a somewhat remote past.

Mr. Speaker, a wealth of memories crowd upon us as we peruse this summary of the passing years. How much was done by these men in the intervening span that is not forgotten in the confusion of modern ambitions and asperities?

When he departed this life Gen. BINGHAM was the "Father of the House," as we denominate those longest in consecutive service. His position in that regard was peculiar in that he succeeded several other distinguished men, all of whom had come from the city of Philadelphia—Kelley, Randall, O'Neill, and Harmer. The city of Philadelphia elected men whom it could keep in this House. It sent them here, telling them that if they performed their duties well they might remain. Apparently they performed their duties well. No other State presents a record like this.

And if we deal with the services of our lamented colleague in a purely local sense we may say that he endeared himself to the great industrial and commercial interests of the people whom he represented. Many of us have wrought here earnestly and long for improvements which the Nation should provide in our home environment. Each of us has striven to do the best he can that his State may be honorably or even profitably represented in this House. The noble River Delaware, concerning which much has been said in recent years—the greatest commercial inland river of this country—was for many years the pet project of Gen. BINGHAM. The Philadelphia Navy Yard, which has been the subject of more or less discussion because of its favored position along the coast and its availability in the event of war, was one of those projects to which he devoted his time and his attention. The Delaware River, with but 20 feet of depth or thereabouts when William Penn settled the city of Philadelphia, was advanced in depth to 26 feet largely through the activity of Gen. BINGHAM in his earlier years of service. Smiths and Windmill Islands, which impeded progress between the city of Philadelphia and the city of Camden, N. J., were removed in his time.

As one who has taken up the work which he laid down, I desire to pay this tribute to Gen. BINGHAM: He has not sometimes received that full measure of appreciation which his great services to the port of Philadelphia warranted.

Mr. Speaker, Gen. BINGHAM was not only the "Father of the House"; he was popular with the House and had the friendship of his colleagues. A man may have courage and ability to commend him to popularity, but Gen. BINGHAM had more than that. He was able, he was strong, he was forceful; he was chosen for party councils, and he advised well; he was a Nestor among his fellows; a safe guide; he was a great writer of platforms and principles. His advice was always sought. Honors were offered him, many of which he declined. But it requires more than ability, more than strength, more than wisdom, to commend a man to popularity and to enable him to hold it as Gen. BINGHAM did. He had personal friendships, and they clung to him devotedly. What was there in his character, then, stronger and better than the attributes I have mentioned? Perhaps the word "courtesy" describes it best. Shall we call it gallantry? Shall we call it chivalry? No; let us call it courtesy, kindness, thoughtfulness of others. Gen. BINGHAM had had his afflictions. Bereavement came upon him in his early life as a husband and father and made its impress upon his whole life. They intensified the love he bore for an only sister.

As soldier, statesman, or party councilor, Gen. BINGHAM was always the gentleman. Was he called away on official journeys from the House, then every other night he wrote to that dearly beloved sister, that she might know he was well; that she might know his love still abounded. Was he busily engaged in the work of the House, then every other night that letter of endearment was written to cheer her who loved him, who watched his course, who trusted in his future, and who devoted herself to his welfare. In every act he was kindly and generous, and the friends who knew him well knew best his true and steadfast qualities of heart and mind.

It is said of Gen. Grant that on one occasion, when stories were being told to while away the time in camp, the spinner of a yarn began with the admonition "You know, there are no ladies present." Quick as a flash, it is said of Grant, he replied, "But you should remember that ladies are always present." It was so with Gen. HENRY H. BINGHAM, soldier, statesman, civilian, friend. His thoughts were free from guile. To him it was understood that ladies were always present. He was always the courteous gentleman—obliging, helpful, sincere—indeed, we may speak of him as a manly man of the truest type.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, several centuries before the Christian Era, Pericles, the soldier, statesman, and philosopher, said:

> This whole earth is the sepulcher of famous men; not only are they commemorated by columns and inscriptions in their own land, but in foreign lands dwells an unwritten memorial of them, graven not on stone, but in the hearts of the people. Make these your example, and esteeming courage to be freedom, and freedom to be happiness, weigh not too nicely the perils of war.

Mr. Speaker, Gen. HENRY HARRISON BINGHAM, a Representative of Pennsylvania for a period of 33 years, died at his home in Philadelphia March 23, 1912. To-day we meet in this sacred, solemn service in honor of his memory in order that we may here record our estimate of the many virtues his life exemplified. By reason of his official connection with the One hundred and fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, a regiment recruited in Greene, Washington, and Beaver Counties, Pa., an organization which took a prominent part in the great Civil War, I am proud of this opportunity, on behalf of that section of the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and on behalf of the veteran members of that regiment who yet survive and are to-day honored citizens of the district I represent, to add my humble tribute of veneration and respect to the memory of Gen. BINGHAM as citizen, soldier, and statesman.

In the year 1862, while a student at old Jefferson College, Canonsburg, Washington County, Pa., he, with other students and citizens, assisted in recruiting Company G of the regiment afterwards designated as the One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania. At the organization, August 22, 1862, he was mustered into service and commissioned first lieutenant of his company. September 9, 1862, he was promoted to captain.

He was wounded at Gettysburg during the first day's fight, July 2, 1863, and was again wounded at Spotsylvania Court House, May 12, 1864, and at Farmsville, April 7, 1865. He was promoted to major September 20, 1864, and brevetted lieutenant colonel, colonel, and brigadier general April 9, 1865.

Time does not permit me to give here any extended account of the heroic work of this regiment. During the long, dark years from 1862 to 1865 these men did their part in the great conflict, and Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Spotsylvania, and Cold Harbor tell more eloquently than words can describe of their sacrifice laid so gladly on the altar of this Republic.

The death of Gen. BINGHAM is but another reminder of how rapidly the men whose lives connect us with that memorable period of half a century ago are passing to the spirit world, leaving a new generation, who know not the cost of that great contest, to administer the affairs of state.

With the death of William McKinley it is quite probable that there passed away the last one who took an active part in the Civil War who will ever occupy the presidential chair.

In the death of Gen. BINGHAM Pennsylvania has lost her last Member of this body who served in that grand army.

In the councils of state such men as these, tried as they had been in the crucible of fire, will be missed. They knew the price of liberty and of free government; they legislated and planned for a Nation and for principles for which they had offered life itself. Let us hope that succeeding generations of men who shall mold public opinion, make and execute our laws, may be characterized by the same lofty purpose and the same patriotic motives which inspired these men in all their public duties.

It was the good fortune of Gen. BINGHAM to live to see the cause for which he fought justified by the men with whom he contended; to see all sections of our country united under one flag; to see that flag floating triumphantly over the ruins of a former despotic government, placed there by the loyal hands of men from the North, South, East, and West, a symbol of a reunited Nation, a notice to the world that we stand as one people in defense of liberty and against oppression.

Gen. BINGHAM in his life work was a citizen who loved his country and her institutions; a soldier brave, and true to the cause for which he fought; a patriotic statesman, striving ever for the highest ideals in government. He, like the immortal Lincoln, respected the law as he found it, and saw in our Constitution and laws a great bulwark of human rights instead of a mere bundle of naked legal truths.

Within these historic walls on this peaceful Sabbath morning, surrounded as we are by the evidences of the resurrected life of nature, while the blossoms and flowers proclaim the glad tidings of spring, beauty, and life, it is most fitting and proper that we should speak and think of one who has gone from this life to that other higher and better, where death shall be no more. Here finite knowledge ends, but faith breathes the prayer that in that great beyond, that spirit world of sunshine and life eternal, he rests in peace, happy in the knowledge that his work was not in vain, and that his life, so woven into more than half a century of the history of our country, has added luster to the Nation he loved and served so well.

[Mr. FITZGERALD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, HENRY H. BINGHAM was one of the most distinguished men who have sat in this House during the present generation. He was a patriot, a soldier, a statesman, a scholar, and a gentleman. He was a graduate of an American college. He had received the highest degrees for scholarship, having been pronounced a doctor of laws by one of the oldest colleges in this country. He was a member of the bar of Pennsylvania. He was a lieutenant in the Union Army, serving in the One hundred and fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers. He was seriously wounded at the Gettysburg fight in sixty-three, again at Spotsylvania in sixty-four, and again at Farmville, Va., in sixty-five. He was a major, a lieutenant colonel, a colonel, and a brigadier general, having received these promotions for distinguished gallantry. He was given the medal of honor for special gallantry on the field of battle. He was appointed by the President postmaster of Philadelphia. He was twice elected by the people clerk of the courts at Philadelphia. He was a delegate to almost every Republican national convention for the past 40 years. He was elected from the first congressional district of Pennsylvania to 17 consecutive Congresses, serving longer consecutively, we believe, than any other man in the history of the country.

In all these varied positions, both civil and military, in which he served the people of Pennsylvania and the Nation at large he brought to each duty an earnest purpose, born of a desire to fulfill and accomplish the highest measure of usefulness for those whom he represented and so faithfully served.

One who has filled and successfully filled the offices of trust and responsibility which I have recounted must be denominated truly great. Especially is this true when the scenes of his activity and achievement are among people of the highest patriotism and most conspicuous private and public virtue.

I have called him a patriot. He was one of those who, when he believed that the integrity of his country had been assailed, marched to the front without hesitation. At the age of 22 years he was a major for gallantry in battle. At the age of 25 he was a brigadier general. He had three times received terrible injuries in battle, once narrowly escaping with his life. He had offered all that he was, all that he could be, for the life of his country, for the honor of its flag.

Members of Congress who served with him will never forget his ability, his tact and never failing urbanity when in charge of an appropriation bill on the floor of this House. His memory of details was of such a nature that he was able not only to explain and elucidate the item of the appropriation under discussion but could go back one, two, three, or five years and state with minuteness the provisions of the former bills on the topic under consideration. He was a student of detail. The information he possessed, together with his sound, normal conception of what was needed in legislation, and added to this his uniformly courteous demeanor, made him one of the most useful and efficient legislators on the floor of this House. Gen. BINGHAM can be called a tribune of the people. Many distinguished men pass from the House of Representatives to the Senate or even to higher positions beyond. Pennsylvania has contributed many exceptions to this rule. To the triumvirate, Thaddeus Stevens, William D. Kelley, and Samuel J. Randall, can now be added the name of HENRY H. BINGHAM, as members of a select company of the great commoners whose pulses beat in unison with the pulse of the people and to whom hereafter she will always point with pride.

Gen. BINGHAM's public career was long, faithful, honest, and useful. Philadelphia more than any part of Pennsylvania has been conspicuous for her steadfastness in retaining tried and trained Representatives, and he was an example of the carrying out of this policy. No district in the State received more careful or efficient service. I believe the characteristics I have mentioned were natural to the man. He who was for so many years the "Father of the House" falls. But all earthly work must end. Humanity is a procession. Our words of farewell to a fellow workman should not alone be those of grief that man's common lot has come to him, but of pride and joy for all the good he has accomplished. Men so weave themselves into their hour that for the moment it seems as though much will be interrupted if they depart. "One generation passeth away and another generation cometh; but the earth abideth forever." The progress of the race goes on, and we realize in every step more and more its upward tendency. We are all agents, great or small, in a mighty purpose. If we and all things are not working together for good, if our life is but a breath exhaled and then forever lost, our work means little.

Gen. BINGHAM was a man of broadest sympathies; his attitude was that of a true American. Always kindly, courteous, and a man of refined tastes, with a high character and integrity which was never questioned, he was an example of unselfishness and a devoted public servant. The boyish patriotism which led him to the Army in the Civil War remained with him throughout his life and inspired all his public service.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, political friendship and personal intimacy of many years and a solemn sense of duty as the successor of the late Hon. HENRY H. BINGHAM impel me to address the House at this time. On the day set apart as a memorial to him, and when so many former associates are paying deserved and eloquent tribute, I crave your indulgence for a few moments, that I may express on behalf of the great constituency of the first congressional district of Pennsylvania the regret we have at the passing of one whom we so long honored ourselves in electing to Congress.

Few men have the capacity, the ability, and the inclination to live such useful careers as Gen. BINGHAM. Born in a sphere where he might have indulged his whims and fancies and led a life of ease, he chose rather to fit himself by close application and rigorous denial for a life of service to society and further appreciation of a family name that had been long highly esteemed in a community where the finer attributes are recognized and valued.

He was graduated with high honors from college when he had scarce attained his majority, and was about to assume the practice of the law when the call to arms changed the life course he had planned, as it did the career of so many of the choicest flowers of our now happily reunited country. For four years, as I have heard him recount, he was almost constantly in the saddle when he was not in the hospital. Small of stature, he was possessed of a vitality and a constitution that enabled him to recover quickly and to endure hardships under which greater frames might have succumbed.

Successively brevetted for distinguished gallantry as major, lieutenant colonel, colonel, and brigadier general, and three times wounded, he finally won what was even more highly prized than official preferment—the medal for special gallantry. As in private life, so in the field, Gen. BINGHAM was the brave, courteous, chivalrous gentlemen you always found him. Mentally and physically exceptionally endowed, he knew not fatigue nor cared to lag, no matter what the burden or the length of the race.

Small wonder that, when he was finally retired from military service—and that was not until the summer of 1866—that an appreciative people should demand recognition of such gallant service. And then he entered upon that civic career which ceased only with his death.

His first civil appointment of moment was that of postmaster of Philadelphia. Five years he administered this responsibility so ably that there are those to-day who recall it with admiration. Then he was elected clerk of the courts, and in 1878 was chosen to represent his district in the Forty-sixth Congress and was reelected with unfailing regularity and with such majorities as indicated the esteem and affection in which he was held.

In the great, broad field of national politics Gen. BINGHAM was a prominent figure; he represented a district that has elected a Republican Congressman by large majorities continuously for more than half a century, Gen. BINGHAM having served for the last 34 years, the longest period of continuous service of any Member who ever held a seat in this American Congress. In practically all the national conventions of the Republican Party since 1876 he served as delegate. His wisdom in shaping the party's policy was always conceded, and to him was due the stirring appeals which appeared in many State and National platforms. His memory was remarkable and his diction as trenchant as it was perfect.

Of his labors, worth, and accomplishment as a Member of Congress it is unnecessary for me to recall, for most of you know of them even far better than I do. As a man, I speak as I found him; he was the soul of honor, loyal to the uttermost, a gentleman under all circumstances. He was impartial in his service to his fellows, giving special consideration to the most humble of his constituents.

To me a trait, of which few of you may be aware and which appealed powerfully to me, was his touching devotion to an invalid sister, much older than he. He was ever solicitous, ever mindful of her, and his first thought when he came to Philadelphia was to see to her comfort and happiness.

I can recall Gen. BINGHAM going to and fro throughout his district, meeting old and young. To the young he was always Gen. BINGHAM, and to the old, who shook him by the hand, he was "HARRY" BINGHAM. He was a kindly man and an affectionate man. He was always anxious to make his fellows happy. On several occasions I visited his home, as he did mine, and I can assure the Members of this House that the most humble citizen of his district, regardless of color, race, creed, or nationality, was just as welcome as the more successful, and received the same courtly attention at the fireside of my distinguished predecessor.

In the galaxy of virtues there is to me none higher than love of family and home. Without gratitude and affection the attainment of mountain heights of success would be barren of compensation.

A soldier brave as the bravest; a statesman honored and able; a friend ever courteous and thoughtful; a Congressman whose long and uninterrupted service was in itself sufficient recommendation and incentive—we do well to pause a moment and pay a tribute to the memory of my distinguished predecessor, the late Gen. HENRY HARRISON BINGHAM.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, there have departed forever from these Halls in the years that I have been a Member of the House many Members, but none has left it with sweeter recollection of gentleness and chivalry, of kindliness and manliness, than the late Gen. HENRY H. BINGHAM, of Pennsylvania. I did not intend to say anything upon this occasion, and what I say must necessarily come spontaneously from the heart. In the many years that I have been a Member of this House there have been frequent occasions of bitter partisan debate and strife. There were times when sectional lines were drawn tight. There were times when bitter words were said on one side and answered upon the other. Brave and true and chivalrous soldier as he was, I never once had occasion to feel the slightest offense at any word Gen. BINGHAM uttered. He knew no sections. Brave and chivalrous soldier as he was, courtly gentleman as he was, he maintained his own opinions firmly, courteously, but never with intent to give offense to others. He but illustrated the characteristics of those valiant soldiers upon either side of our recent internecine struggle. He was brave as the bravest upon the battle field, gentle as the gentlest, and kind as the kindest when it was over. Not only that, but I would speak also of his intercourse with the younger Members of this House. I was a young Member of the House when I came here. I met him frequently, and finally, in the last session and in this, served upon the same committee of which he had so long been an honored member. I can say to his friends, and to those who mourn him to-day, and to his constituents, that no man from any part of this great country of ours acted more the great man than did he, the courtly knight, the gentleman that he always showed himself, whose memory will linger, like the essence of sweet flowers, long, long years to come.

Mr. Speaker, he was one of the great Army of the Union that withstood with bravery the furious assault of the Confederates upon the famous field of Gettysburg; that battle which settled the destinies of this country; that battle which was the high tide of Confederate success and the turning point in the history of this Republic.

A week ago there assembled in the city where I live the remnant of the magnificent armies that followed Lee and Jackson and Johnston and the other illustrious Confederate leaders and generals. Mingled with them there from all over this country were Union soldiers who went there to enjoy the hospitality of the people of my home, and as the 16,000 Confederate soldiers marched through the streets of my city, under the flag of the Confederacy, it is true, there never was a murmur or suggestion that they were not as true now to the flag of this Union of ours and as loyal to it as they were to the flag for which they fought so valiantly. They unanimously passed a resolution that on the fiftieth anniversary of that great battle of Gettysburg they would meet the remaining survivors upon this historic field and again together celebrate in peace and not in war the recollections of exhibitions of valor and chivalry on the part of American soldiery, as great as ever seen on any field of battle in the history of time.

And there are many who will meet there that will look in vain for the genial face, the pleasant smile, and the clasp of the fraternal hand of HARRY H. BINGHAM.

Mr. Speaker, the earth that holds him dead bears not upon it living a truer, lovelier gentleman.

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with faltering speech that I attempt to follow the eloquent and merited tributes which have been paid to the memory of the distinguished son of Pennsylvania, former Member of this House, the late Gen. HENRY H. BINGHAM.

I can not speak of him, as have the gentlemen who preceded me, out of a wealth of personal association, but I may add at least a word to record the remembrance of his kindly greetings upon my entrance as a Member of this body, a few short months ago, as he met me one day near this door to my right.

The heart of man grows more tender, more hopeful, yea, more optimistic, as it gives thoughtful consideration, upon occasions like this, to the fact that the qualities which bind together the men of our great country, qualities which, after all, go to make up our ideal in man, are those attributes of the heart which speak in tones of broadest sympathy and kindliest interest.

How distinctively American was he! A true type, hardly to be produced elsewhere than on American soil. Other nations have brought forth warriors and other countries have had their statesmen, but rarely in any other environment may there be found that marvelous combination—a great man of war and a great man of peace.

It has been recounted to-day how he, with a loyalty and patriotism that weighed not fear, held not back the tender of his life when his country needed his assistance. In the darkest hour, when it seemed as if the night would never pass, it will not soon be forgotten that he was in the forefront, uniting his efforts with those other brave men who turned the tide at the Battle of Gettysburg, where hope for a reunited country lifted her grief-stained face and the sun arose again upon another day.

So this man of war became the man of peace. For over 30 years his words of wise counsel have helped in the affairs of state. With him the war was over, he had no room in his heart for bitterness, and he set himself to the greater tasks of peace. No narrow sectional or political lines could bind his heart or narrow the scope of his patriotic desires. His conceptions of his duty were greater than any limitations imposed by territorial subdivision. His was a mind that refused to recognize a demarcation between North and South; and by his broad and patriotic nationalism he won a recognition which found expression to-day in the eloquent words of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The harmony of man's life can not be seriously marred where the dominant note is kindness. To be great in small things is to my mind the supreme test of real greatness. Here, too, he excelled. With an unruffled brow, a genial smile, a kind word, and an extended hand he made his journey through life and won from all the high encomium—a chivalrous, courtly, kindly gentleman.

It should not be forgotten that during the period of his public services the pent-up miracles of a thousand years have broken forth, until now the elements have yielded a ready obedience to man's comfort and pleasure. The population has increased by leaps and bounds. Our national and political life had to be adjusted to these changed conditions, and in this transformation his voice and counsel were heard in this Hall of Congress.

The memory of our great men constitutes a part of our national treasure. By recounting their noble deeds we keep alive the patriotic spirit without which our country would soon pass away. Their unselfish, faithful, and loyal services will bring to generations yet unborn a deeper sense of their responsibility toward and love for the institution symbolized by the old Stars and Stripes, whereby will be insured its perpetuity; an unfaltering belief that though dark clouds may sometimes hang heavy and obscure her sky the morrow's sun will drive away the darkness and she will pursue her path of destiny.

Of our country it has been said:

> We have journeyed in safety through the wilderness and crossed in triumph the Red Sea of civil strife, but the foot of Him that led us hath not faltered nor the light of His countenance been turned away.

Gen. HENRY H. BINGHAM was a great man, a gallant soldier, a man of peace, a splendid statesman, a loyal citizen. Not least of all, he was a kindly hearted, sympathetic gentleman.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the resolution previously adopted, and as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the House will now stand adjourned.

Thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, May 20, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 20, 1912.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

THE NAVAL ACADEMY (S. DOC. NO. 672).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 10th instant, certain information relative to the maximum capacity of the United States Naval Academy for the accommodation of midshipmen and also the number of midshipmen in attendance during each of the last five years, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

DRY LAND HOMESTEADS (S. DOC. NO. 673).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant, certain information relative to the number of homestead entries made in each State and in the aggregate under the enlarged homestead acts approved February 19, 1909, and June 17, 1910, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 24153) to amend and reenact section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8768) to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and has appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. DYER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LAMB, Mr. LEVER, and Mr. HAUGEN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

S. 5624. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 18954. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 18955. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held at Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, favoring an appropriation for the installation and maintenance of wireless telegraph stations on all light vessels along the coasts, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Mount Washington Methodist Protestant Church and the Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, Pa.; of the Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal Churches of Oxford, Ala.; and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Montgomery Center, Vt., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of Branch 7, Socialist Party of New York City, N. Y.; of Manhattan Lodge, No. 7, Brotherhood of Machinists, of New York City, N. Y.; and of the District Grand Lodge, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called illiteracy-test amendment to the immigration law, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for a civil-service basis for certain branches of the Diplomatic and Consular Service; for the adoption of certain amendments to the Sherman antitrust law; against the importation of nursery stock except through the Department of Agriculture; for adequate Government relief for the sufferers from floods in the Mississippi River districts; and for the opening of the Panama Canal free to American shipping engaged in coastwise domestic trade, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Rockford, Ill., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Cook County Cabinet, of Chicago, Ill., praying that an immediate investigation be made as to conditions existing on excursion steamers on the Great Lakes with reference to the safety of passengers, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Rock Island County Retail Druggists' Association, of Illinois, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit a resale price on patented articles, which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a memorial of the Mutual Building and Loan Association, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation levying a special excise tax on building and loan associations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Woodlawn Auxiliary, No. 238, Ladies of the Maccabees of the World, of Chicago, Ill., and a petition of the Illinois State legislative board, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the publications of fraternal associations the privileges of second-class mail matter, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of the Christian County Medical Society, the Gallatin County Medical Society, and of sundry physicians of Quincy, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions in support of the immigration bill. They are very brief, and I ask that, with the few names appended, they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

While we are aware that there is a world-wide rise in the cost of living and that there are local causes of disturbance and distress which need correcting, we none the less believe that distressing conditions in the United States are greatly aggravated by the fact that the less skilled classes of labor are subjected to an artificial and unnecessary competition. This competition is due to the unlimited importation from numerous parts of the world of laborers often induced to come here by persons interested financially in their coming whose controlling interest is not in the personal welfare of the immigrant or in the general welfare of the country.

We believe the evidence to be conclusive that under these conditions the maintenance of a proper American standard of living among the laboring classes of our country is impossible in this State or in any other State subject to these same conditions. We therefore most respectfully urge that this overshadowing menace be not ignored by you and that you relieve this situation by limiting the importation of labor to a point where the American standard of living among great bodies of laborers shall no longer be broken down.

Carver, professor of political economy of Harvard University; C. J. Bullock, professor of economics, Harvard University; O. M. W. Sprague, assistant professor of banking and finance, Harvard University; Wm. Z. Ripley, professor of political economy, Harvard University; John F. Tobin, general president of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union; John Golden, president United Textile Workers of America; James Duncan, first vice president American Federation of Labor and president Granite Cutters' Union; Arthur M. Huddell, business agent Building Trades Council; Henry Abrahams, secretary Central Labor Union of Boston and secretary International Cigar Makers' Union; Robert A. Woods, settlement worker, author, etc., South End House, Boston; Henry Lee Higginson, senior partner of Lee, Higginson & Co.; Alfred D. Foster, president New England Mutual Life Insurance Co.; Philip Stockton, president Old Colony Trust Co.; Richards M. Bradley, of Bradley & Tyson; Francis R. Hart, vice president Old Colony Trust Co.; John F. Moors, of Moors & Cabot; Henry B. Cabot, of Moors & Cabot; and many others.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, at Harrisburg, Pa., which were agreed to with only two opposing votes, 806 delegates being present. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted May 17, 1912, at Harrisburg, Pa., by Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, over 800 delegates being present. Adoption of resolution followed many days' discussion of Senate workmen's compensation bill, which has passed Senate; Dillingham immigration bill (S. 3175), which has passed Senate; and anti-injunction bill, which has passed House.

Whereas as there are now pending in Congress the following bills in the interest of labor, the passage of which our joint national legislative representative is expected to and is aiding in securing: The anti-injunction bill, in which every member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is surely interested, which has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate; an immigration restriction bill, favored by the various labor and civic organizations throughout the country and which surely ought to be by this convention, that has passed the Senate and is now pending in the House; and the workmen's compensation bill, that has passed the Senate and is now pending in the House; and

Whereas there has appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD statements made by a member of this order, from which we quote the following paragraph:

"Believing that the individual members should get behind those officers (grand officers) and give them their undivided support and loyalty and show our friends in the Senate, viz, Senator REED, Senator ASHURST, Senator JEFF DAVIS, Senator OVERMAN, and a few others whom he terms the force opposing them, that we are behind them. In other words, that we are a lot of cattle following the Judases to the slaughtering pens. He says, 'What would you think of a local chairman who was adjusting a grievance for his division, and a member should give the facts and try to influence others against that chairman?' I ask him, 'What would you think of a chairman who was working in with the railway company to reduce your wages from 300 to 800 per cent?' That is what Wills and his grand officers are doing, working hand in hand with the railway companies to reduce your compensation from 300 to 800 per cent. He says, 'It looks to me to be on the same principle as that of a soldier shooting an officer in the back who was bravely leading them in a charge or attack upon the enemy.' What brave general does he mean? Those of the militia or those of the Regulars that led their soldiers against the union miners of Colorado, the striking railway men in 1904, or those brave generals that led their soldiers against the women and children in Lawrence, Mass., this last year? Does he style Wills and the other grand executives with those brave generals? If he does, I do not question him;" and

Whereas such matter as quoted, left unchallenged, interferes with our prestige as an organization and with our national legislative representative in the work to which he has been assigned: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention unqualifiedly indorse the action of our joint national legislative representative, Brother H. E. Wills, in his efforts to secure the enactment of the anti-injunction bill, the restriction of immigration bill, and the workmen's compensation bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present 16 memorials adopted by as many municipal and commercial bodies of Michigan, and various memorials signed by over 4,000 farmers and others, remonstrating against the passage of the House bill in reference to the sugar schedule. I ask that one each may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read one each of the memorials.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Whereas the House of Representatives has recently passed a bill removing all customs duty from sugar entering the United States; and

Whereas this bill is now being considered by the Senate; and

Whereas such a bill if enacted into law would destroy the domestic beet and cane sugar industries of the United States; would reverse our governmental policy toward Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, thereby endangering the prosperity of those islands; would virtually abrogate our treaty with Cuba, thereby injuriously affecting our export trade to that island, now amounting to over $60,000,000 a year, and endanger the peace and prosperity of the Republic of Cuba; and

Whereas such legislation would deliver to the sugar-refining industry of the United States—80 per cent of which is officially declared to be controlled by one company—the monopoly of the sugar business in this country: Therefore be it

Resolved by Cass City Improvement Association, That we protest against the passage of a law placing sugar on the free list, and urgently request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use all legitimate methods to defeat any tariff legislation which shall injuriously affect the development of the domestic sugar industry of the United States.

We believe that the official reports of the Department of Agriculture conclusively demonstrate that this country, with proper fiscal legislation, is able to produce all the sugar its people can use, and that it is better economic policy to produce our sugar at home than to buy it abroad.

Adopted at a regular meeting of Cass City Improvement Association April 2, 1912. There were 130 members present at this meeting.

JAS. H. HAYS, President.
P. A. SCHENCK, Secretary.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of Michigan, respectfully protest against the removal of the duty on sugar as provided for in the bill which recently passed the House of Representatives. We petition Congress not to pass any legislation which shall interfere with the development of the beet-sugar industry of the United States. We believe there is enough land in this country adapted to the culture of beets to provide all the sugar which our citizens can use, and that under favorable laws the beet-sugar industry of this country will develop with great rapidity. Our citizens are more interested in this industry than ever before, and have learned from actual experience that the culture of beets improves other agricultural conditions. In view of these facts we ask that no legislation be passed which shall in any way check the development of this important industry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorials will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, in session at Harrisburg, Pa., representing the locomotive engineers of every State in the Union, adopted, on the 17th instant, a resolution approving the workmen's compensation bill which recently passed this body. The resolution is embodied in a letter which I send to the desk. It is very brief, and I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

There being no objection, the letter was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18, 1912.

Hon. GEORGE SUTHERLAND,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It affords me pleasure to furnish to you herewith a quotation from a resolution that was yesterday adopted by the Grand National Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, now in session at Harrisburg, Pa. This resolution will speak for itself and needs no comment from me.

"Therefore be it resolved, That this convention unqualifiedly indorse the action of our joint national legislative representative, Brother H. E. Wills, in his efforts to secure the enactment of the anti-injunction bill, the restriction of immigration bill, and the workmen's compensation bill."

I am, with sincere respect,

Yours, very truly,

H. E. WILLS,
Assistant Grand Chief Engineer and Acting Joint National Legislative Representative.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am directed by the committee appointed by the Senate to investigate whether in the election of WILLIAM LORIMER as a Senator from the State of Illinois there were employed corrupt methods and practices to submit the following report (No. 769).

In doing this I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that at the end of almost every paragraph in the report there has been included in brackets a reference to the body of the testimony where the evidence upon which the finding is based may be found.

With the report I am also sending to the desk the testimony and records of the public hearings, comprised in eight volumes, with a digest index to the same, which the Senate will find very convenient in referring to any particular part of the evidence or the record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont desire to have the evidence printed, or simply the report?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think there are a sufficient number of copies of the evidence to supply the demand of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: Was the minority report in the Lorimer case offered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The views of the minority have not yet been submitted.

Mr. LEA subsequently said: Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed the views of the minority members of the Lorimer investigating committee. (Rept. No. 769, pt. 2.) The minority views are signed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and myself.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that they be printed in connection with the report of the majority, so that it will make one document, if agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. LEA. I will be very glad to have that done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PAGE in the chair). Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. LEA submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 315), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That corrupt methods and practices were employed in the election of WILLIAM LORIMER to the Senate of the United States from the State of Illinois, and that his election was therefore invalid.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker Acts, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 770) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

THE CHEMICAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to submit the views of the minority of the Finance Committee upon the bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, which is the chemical-schedule bill. The report was prepared by the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The views of the minority will lie on the table and be printed. (Rept. No. 636, pt. 2.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Fisheries, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 6612. A bill for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Tennessee (Rept. No. 772); and

S. 6590. A bill to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of New Mexico (Rept. No. 773).

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Fisheries, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 6203. A bill to establish a fish-cultural station at Monte Ne, in the State of Arkansas (Rept. No. 774); and

S. 6414. A bill to establish a fish hatchery and fish station in the State of Maryland or in the State of West Virginia (Rept. No. 775).

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 6744. A bill to provide for the purchase of an extension to the site and the erection of a Federal building in Las Vegas, N. Mex. (Rept. No. 776); and

S. 6745. A bill to provide for the erection of a Federal building in Las Cruces, N. Mex. (Rept. No. 777).

GOOSE CREEK BRIDGE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 6848) authorizing the Cooper River Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of South Carolina, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Goose Creek, in Berkeley County, S. C., to report it without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 768) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND AT WILMINGTON, N. C.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 6603) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Wilmington, N. C., portion of marine-hospital reservation not needed for marine-hospital purposes, and I submit a report (No. 771) thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to convey to the board of education of New Hanover County, State of North Carolina, the following-described tract of land, being a portion of the marine-hospital reservation in the city of Wilmington, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, is no longer needed for marine-hospital purposes, to wit, 34⅞ acres of land, more or less, covering six whole and three one-half city blocks, lying east of Tenth Street, in the city of Wilmington, county of New Hanover, and State of North Carolina, such conveyance to be upon condition that the land shall be used exclusively for industrial school purposes, the title thereof to revert to the United States if at any time the land or any building erected thereon shall no longer be used for such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the board of education of New Hanover County, N. C., portion of marine-hospital reservation not needed for marine-hospital purposes."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 6878) granting an increase of pension to Zachariah T. Fortner (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 6879) to correct the military record of David H. Smith; to the Committee on Military Affairs;

A bill (S. 6880) granting a pension to Sarah L. Orr; and

A bill (S. 6881) granting an increase of pension to Hiram F. Stover; to the Committee on Pensions.

RAILROAD IN ALASKA.

Mr. JONES introduced a bill (S. 6864) to provide for the construction and operation of a railroad in Alaska, the reservation of public lands, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reference will be to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRISTOW subsequently said: I notice that the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], providing for the construction of a railroad in Alaska was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The chairman of the Committee on Territories is not here, but being a member of that committee, it seems to me it should go to the Committee on Territories.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was the Chair's original idea, but the Senator from Washington asked that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Kansas that the bill also provides for a reservation of public lands. Such bills have heretofore been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I remember that at the last session of Congress the matter went to a vote in the Senate, and the Senate decided to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands rather than the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to have the reference withheld until the chairman of the Committee on Territories can be present. I know he feels that that committee has jurisdiction of this question, because he has himself introduced a number of matters relating to it. He is detained from the Senate on business of the Senate. I should like to have the reference withheld until he can be here.

Mr. JONES. I will state that prior to the bill introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Territories a similar bill had been introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I would suggest that if the chairman of the Committee on Territories desires to take up the matter when he comes in, of course that can be done, but I should like to have the reference go on, because the Committee on Public Lands is having hearings in regard to this matter and is considering the matter very carefully.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the bill be not referred until the chairman of the Committee on Territories can be present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the bill lying on the table for the present?

Mr. JONES. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. JONES. I think the reference has been made to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reference has been made. It can be changed by motion.

Mr. BRISTOW. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask for a division.

Mr. BACON. I should be pleased—my attention was diverted for a moment—to be informed what the question is, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the bill, the title of which will be stated, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6864) to provide for the construction and operation of a railroad in Alaska, the reservation of public lands, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 16, noes 16.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, my attention was diverted. I did not understand the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote has been announced, and it is now too late to except to the vote.

Mr. GRONNA. I call for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A division has been had. The question was put upon a division.

Mr. HEYBURN and Mr. BRISTOW called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President, the matter is open for discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. HEYBURN. Briefly, this proposed legislation does not deal with Territorial government, and the Territory under no conditions at any time has any jurisdiction over the lands within its boundaries. Those lands have always been subject to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Lands. All the legislation that has been had in the past has come from the Committee on Public Lands, whether it be a railroad-land grant or the building of a railroad or whatsoever, because those are things that pertain to Federal jurisdiction over the subject matter of common interest; that is, the lands. No Territory has ever had any jurisdiction over its lands; and why should a bill go to the Committee on Territories that affects the question of the disposition of the public lands?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to state to the Senate that this is not primarily a question of the disposition of public lands; that is an incident probably that is put into the bill; but it is a bill providing for the construction of a railroad in the Territory of Alaska. The Committee on Territories have had hearings on that very question; there have been a number of parties who have appeared before the committee which has under its consideration the subject, and the chairman of the committee has presented to the Senate petitions in favor of such proceedings. The chairman is absent this morning. I am merely a member of the committee, and take the matter up because I know that the committee has under consideration this subject. I do not think the bill should be introduced and referred to another committee when the Committee on Territories is considering the subject at this time.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment, to make the suggestion that whatever appropriations are made, they will come out of the general funds of the Government and not out of any Territorial funds or funds available for expenditure within the Territory.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a similar bill was introduced by the Senator from Washington long before the bill was introduced by the Senator from Michigan, and referred to the Committee on Territories. The Committee on Public Lands have had this matter under consideration; they have had hearings upon it, and another hearing is set for next Wednesday, at which the Secretary of the Interior is asked to be present. There are men here not only from Alaska, but from other parts of the United States, who will appear at that meeting next Wednesday. The bill involves a question of public lands and not the administration of affairs in Alaska. Therefore, the bill, I think, properly belongs to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not a member of either of these committees, but the matter of an Alaskan railroad seems to me to be strictly Territorial business, even if public lands are attached to it. To put aside the merits of the case, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, who has introduced bills relating to this subject, and whose committee has had hearings upon it and taken an interest in it, is absent. In his absence, to push this reference through, when the request has been made here by a member of the committee that the bill be allowed to lie upon the table until the chairman of the committee at least can be heard—I think it is rather unusual to refuse such a request as that and force the reference at this time, in the absence of the chairman of one of the committees.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rise to make an explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas first addressed the Chair.

Mr. CULBERSON. In order that we may know exactly what is before us, I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. HEYBURN. Would the Senator from Texas permit me to make an explanation. I only spoke on this matter because the chairman of the committee was not at that time present. Had he been present or had I known of his presence I would not have interfered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 6864) to provide for the construction and operation of a railroad in Alaska, the reservation of public lands, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized and directed, through the Alaska Railway Commission hereinafter provided for, or otherwise, to cause to be surveyed and located the most practicable, feasible, and desirable line or location for a railroad from some point on tidewater, or, if deemed preferable, from some point on and connecting with an existing railway line, to the Bering River coal fields in Alaska, and when such line is located to cause to be constructed, completed, and operated thereon a standard-gauge railroad, with the necessary equipment, docks, wharves, and terminal facilities. That the President is authorized for the purpose aforesaid to employ such persons as he may deem necessary and to fix their duties, powers, and compensations.

SEC. 2. That to enable the President to construct the railroad and works appurtenant and necessary thereto, as provided in this act, there is hereby created the Alaska Railway Commission, to be composed of five members, who shall be nominated and appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall serve during the pleasure of the President, and one of them shall be named by the President as chairman of said commission. Of the five members of said commission at least three shall be learned and skilled in the science of engineering, and of the three at least one shall be an officer of the United States Army and at least one other shall be an officer of the United States Navy, the said officers being either upon the active or retired lists of the Army or of the Navy. Said commissioners shall each receive such compensation as the President may prescribe until the same shall have been otherwise fixed by Congress. In addition to the members of said commission the President is hereby authorized, through the said commission, to employ, in the ascertainment of the location of said railroad, and in the construction, completion, and operation of the same, any of the engineers of the United States Army at his discretion, and likewise to employ any engineers in civil life at his discretion, and any other persons necessary for the proper and expeditious prosecution of said work. The compensation for such engineers and other persons employed under this act shall be fixed by said commission, subject to the approval of the President. The official salary of any official appointed or employed under this act shall be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation provided for or which shall be fixed under the terms of this act. Said commission shall in all matters be subject to the direction and control of the President, and shall make to the President annually, and at other periods as may be required either by law or by the order of the President, full and complete reports of all their acts and doings and of all money received and expended in the construction of said work and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith, which said report shall be by the President transmitted to Congress; and the said commission shall furthermore give to Congress, or to either House of Congress, such information as may at any time be required, either by act of Congress or by the order of either House of Congress. The President shall cause to be provided and assigned for the use of the commission such offices as may, with the suitable equipment of the same, be necessary and proper in his discretion for the proper discharge of the duties thereof. The commission shall acquire by purchase or condemnation all property it may deem necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, including any existing lines of railway, with the equipment, wharves, docks, bridges, and other facilities that it may deem desirable to secure in order to carry out the purposes of this act, and the power of eminent domain in Alaska is hereby conferred upon such commission, which may sue and be sued in the name of the Alaska Railway Commission. The President, through the commission, shall obtain an exclusive right of way over the public lands in Alaska for such railway upon filing its map of location in the General Land Office, and the President may in this manner or otherwise make reservation of such public lands for stations, terminals, and other purposes in connection with the construction and operation of such railroad as he may deem necessary and desirable; and he may utilize in carrying on the work herein provided for any and all machinery, equipment, instruments, material, and other property of any sort whatsoever used, purchased, or acquired by or under the direction of the Isthmian Canal Commission, so far and as rapidly as the same is, in the judgment of the Isthmian Canal Commission, no longer needed in its work; and the said Isthmian Canal Commission is hereby authorized to deliver said property to said Alaska Railway Commission, and no charge shall be made therefor.

SEC. 3. That the President, through the said commission or otherwise, shall proceed as promptly as possible to segregate as a coal reserve for the Government and its various departments 10,000 acres of coal land in the Bering River coal fields, and shall designate and reserve the same in such tracts as to include therein the largest quantity of the best quality of coal, having due regard to economical mining and transportation, and the lands contained in such reserve shall not be subject to sale or lease or any other disposition according to the laws of the United States. That the President, through said commission or otherwise, as he may deem best, shall, in connection with the construction and operation of said railroad, develop and operate a coal mine or mines within the area so reserved in the Bering River coal fields and deliver the coal mined at such point or points as may be necessary for the purposes of the Government, and he is authorized, through said commission or otherwise, to provide all the necessary facilities of all kinds and character to accomplish this purpose: Provided, That any coal mined and not needed for Government purposes may be sold to the public at not less than 6 per cent more than the cost at the place of delivery, such cost to be ascertained and determined by the commission.

SEC. 4. That any line of railroad designated and constructed under the provisions of this act may connect with the line of any existing railroad in Alaska, and, in such case, the existing line shall be operated in connection with the new line as a through route with through rates upon a fair and reasonable apportionment of revenue and expenses.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow, on the credit of the United States, from time to time, as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act (such proceeds when received to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditure), the sum of $4,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States, in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of $20 or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in gold coin at the pleasure of the United States after 10 years from the date of their issue, and payable 30 years from such date, and bearing interest, payable quarterly in gold coin, at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all the citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor; but no commissions shall be allowed or paid thereon, and a sum not exceeding one-tenth of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same.

SEC. 6. That it is the intent of this act to authorize and empower the President to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes herein provided for.

SEC. 7. That the President, through said commission or otherwise, is also authorized and directed to cause such surveys for additional railroad lines, extensions, or branches to be made in order that he may recommend to Congress such action as he may deem advisable with reference to the extension of the railroad herein provided or the construction and operation of new lines or branch lines.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as I understand, the question before the Senate is whether the bill shall be referred to the Committee on Public Lands or to the Committee on Territories. Before I vote I should like very much to know which committee is least apt to report this bill favorably, because that is the committee to which I should like to have it referred.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state that the question now is on the motion to reconsider the action of the Senate in referring the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. The chairman of the Committee on Territories is not present; I know that committee has been considering this matter, and I ask that the action be reconsidered and that the bill lie on the table pending action until he can be present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President I only wish to say that evidently the primary object of this bill is to construct a railroad in Alaska. Whatever there may be in it with respect to public lands is merely incidental to the main purpose of building a railroad and in my judgment the bill ought obviously to go to the Committee on Territories.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the action of the Senate in referring the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GARDNER (when the name of Mr. JOHNSON of Maine was called). My colleague [Mr. JOHNSON] is necessarily absent from the Chamber. He is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I understand that the Senator is necessarily absent from the city on account of severe illness in his family, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the Senate on account of serious illness in his family. He is paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON].

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. NEWLAND'S name was called). I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. RICHARDSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. As he does not seem to be present, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when Mr. WATSON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WATSON] has a pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS]. My colleague is unavoidably detained from the Chamber.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have a general pair with that Senator, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). In view of my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], I withdraw my vote.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CRANE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber.

Mr. HEYBURN (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I do not see him present, and I inquire if he has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Alabama has not voted.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I am satisfied that if my colleague, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, upon that statement, I will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Ashurst	Crawford	Hitchcock	Rayner
Bacon	Cummins	Kern	Reed
Borah	Curtis	Lea	Stone

Crane	McCumber	Richardson
Culberson	Martin, Va.	Root
Davis	Nelson	Simmons

So Mr. BRISTOW'S motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table subject to the presence of the chairman of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BACON. I do not object to that course, but I intended to move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asked that the bill be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BACON. It is of such importance and involves such tremendous expenditures, including an issuance of United States bonds, that I think it ought to go to the Committee on Finance. But I will not make the motion now, because of the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Territories.

THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, which naturally will go to the Committee on the Judiciary, but I ask that it may lie on the table, as I intend in the near future to address the Senate upon it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let it be read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that it be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 109) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following be proposed as an amendment of section 1 of Article III of the Constitution of the United States, which will be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, namely:

Amend said section 1 to read as follows:

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior court, shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. The judges of the Supreme Court shall hold their offices during good behavior. The judges of the inferior courts shall hold their offices for terms of 10 years."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will lie on the table.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted an amendment proposing to pay former employees of the Forest Service the amount recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture for injuries incurred in fighting fires in the Coeur d'Alene National Forest, in Idaho, August, 1910, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona submitted an amendment relative to the rates to be fixed by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 1332) regulating Indian allotments disposed of by will, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. TOWNSEND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the amendment submitted by Mr. CUMMINS to the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE NATIONAL BANKING SYSTEM.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that 200 additional copies of Senate Document No. 538, Sixty-first Congress, second session, be printed for the use of the Treasury Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That 200 additional copies of Senate Document 538, Sixty-first Congress, second session, on Crises in the history of the national banking system, be printed for the use of the Treasury Department.

PRIVILEGES OF THE PRESS GALLERY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the resolution (S. Res. 314) submitted by Mr. HEYBURN on the 17th instant, which was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That any paper publishing the proceedings of an executive session of the Senate, or what purports to be the proceedings of an executive session, shall not be entitled to the privileges of the press gallery of the Senate; and that the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be instructed to exclude from the press gallery any representative of any paper publishing such report who may be found therein.

LOANS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8768) to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and consent to the conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. PAYNTER conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BURNHAM. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and that the request of the House of Representatives for a conference be granted, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BURNHAM, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. BANKHEAD conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 24153. An act to amend and reenact section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

EIGHT-HOUR LABOR LAW.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 9061) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. For the purpose of discussion?

Mr. BORAH. For the purpose of consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9061) entitled "An act limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Before consent is given I will ask the Senator if it is his purpose to have final action to-day. I understand the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who is absent, desires to be present when the bill is considered, and I do not know that he will be here to-day.

Mr. BORAH. I have an understanding with the Senator from New York that I will not press the bill to final disposition in his absence, but there are amendments that can be disposed of to-day. I shall not ask for a final vote in the absence of the Senator from New York.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will further inquire from the Senator whether it is his intention to explain the provisions of the bill which are in controversy?

Mr. SIMMONS. That will not interfere with the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9061) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again read the bill. The bill has been read, and the Senator from New Hampshire asks that it be read for the information of the Senate. Without objection, the Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the law relative to an 8-hour day as it now stands upon the statutes of the United States is as follows:

That the service and employment of all laborers and mechanics who are now or may hereafter be employed by the Government of the United States, by the District of Columbia, or by any contractor or subcontractor upon any of the public works of the United States or of the said District of Columbia, is hereby limited and restricted to 8 hours in any one calendar day, and it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States Government or of the District of Columbia or any such contractor or subcontractor whose duty it shall be to employ, direct, or control the services of such laborers or mechanics to require or permit any such laborer or mechanic to work more than 8 hours in any calendar day except in case of extraordinary emergency.

The other provisions of the law perhaps it is not necessary to read, but I will insert them in the RECORD, being sections 2 and 3, which I have not read.

The sections referred to are as follows:

SEC. 2. That any officer or agent of the Government of the United States or of the District of Columbia or any contractor or subcontractor whose duty it shall be to employ, direct, or control any laborer or mechanic employed upon any of the public works of the United States or of the District of Columbia who shall intentionally violate any provision of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each and every such offense shall upon conviction be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court having jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall not be so construed as to in any manner apply to or affect contractors or subcontractors or to limit the hours of daily service of laborers or mechanics engaged upon the public works of the United States or of the District of Columbia for which contracts have been entered into prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. BORAH. This bill, in brief, Mr. President, provides for an extension of the principles as found in the statute at the present time. In other words, the present law only applies to work actually carried on upon the public works. This bill is intended to cover all contracts which are made by the United States or the District of Columbia or any Territory or by and on behalf of the United States, the District of Columbia, or any Territory wherein mechanics and laborers are employed. The bill relates only to future contracts and not to present contracts, as has been apparently understood in some places or by some people.

Secondly, the bill covers, as I have said, all contracts made by the United States or the District of Columbia, or upon behalf of the United States or the District of Columbia. The contracts to be made by the Government or upon its behalf shall contain a provision that no employee of the contractor shall labor or be permitted to labor more than 8 hours per day, or of the subcontractor having a contract under the original contractor.

The bill further provides a penalty of $5 per day for every violation of the law upon the part of any individual; that is to say, if an individual works or is permitted to work more than 8 hours a day upon any contract or subcontract having to do with this class of work, there shall be withheld from the contract price $5 for each violation, which amount is to be retained. The parties who hold the contract have the right to appeal, in the first place, to the head of the department which may have been charged with the particular work; secondly, he may appeal from the final order, or, rather, submit his claim to the Court of Claims for final determination in case he is not satisfied with the determination made by the head of the department.

The law excepts from its operation all contracts for transportation by land or water and all contracts for the transmission of intelligence and such materials or articles as may be purchased usually in the open market, except armor and armor plate.

It also provides that any work which has been done heretofore by the Government, or which may be carried on by the Government, when done under contract, shall come under section 1 of the bill; that is to say, under the inhibitions of that section.

The bill also provides that—

The President, by Executive order, may waive the provisions and stipulations in this act as to any specific contract or contracts during time of war or a time when war is imminent. No penalties shall be imposed for any violation of such provision—in such contract due to any emergency caused by fire, famine, or flood, by danger to life or to property, or by other extraordinary event or condition on account of which the President shall subsequently declare the violation to have been justifiable.

Still reading from the bill—

Briefly, these are the terms of the bill. As I stated, its purpose is to extend the 8-hour principle to all contracts made upon the part of the Government for carrying on its work.

I ask that the bill may be read now for committee amendment. There are one or two to be offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are there committee amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No committee amendments have been reported.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to suggest a slight amendment which I suggested the other day. Perhaps it will not be necessary to have the bill read.

Mr. LODGE. The bill does not need to be read again for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; then I will suggest the amendment.

In section 2, page 3, line 25, after the word "of," I move to insert "section 1 of," so as to read:

With the terms and provisions of section 1 of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment. It is an amendment that is printed, but which I modified a little at the end to make the phrasing better. It ought to come at the end of section 1. It says in the print "insert in section 2."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add, at the end of section 1, the following proviso:

Provided, That in order to permit a Saturday half holiday to laborers and mechanics engaged on such work, an employment thereon of not more than 48 hours per week of workdays of not more than 9 hours each shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may say a word in explanation, the laws regulating the hours of labor in the State of Massachusetts, and I know in some other States, fix the limit by the week; and in my State that is very important because the custom is almost universal of giving a half holiday on Saturday, which those who are employed much desire to retain.

Under this bill, without some such amendment as mine, it would be necessary to abandon the half holiday on Saturday in order to have the 8-hour day throughout the week. This amendment does not increase the number of hours of the week; it fixes it at 48 hours; but it allows them so to divide the 48 hours as to obtain work 3 hours on a Saturday and have the rest of the day. I know it is generally desired by all in employment in my State, and I can not see that it at all affects the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the principle which is covered by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts was considered at length by the committee and was advocated by a number of parties coming before the committee. The committee had very extensive hearings upon all features of the bill, legal and as to policy also, and among other propositions which were urged or suggested and discussed was this proposition of a 48-hour week.

But, in the first place, there is not a universal call by any means upon the part of those most interested in the bill for the change—that is to say, comparatively few have the provisions with reference to a Saturday half holiday.

Again, the bill does not necessarily do away with the half holiday if they have a mind to so arrange it.

But the basic objection is the fact that it destroys the principle upon which this bill is built, and that is that the employee should not be required to work more than 8 hours upon any particular day, and it does not accomplish the purpose for which the measure is promoted to say that a man shall not work more than so many hours in a week. It leaves in the control of the employer both the question of the time per day to a very large extent and also the question of the unit of employment so far as wages are concerned.

While I do not propose to enter into an extended discussion of the question, the matter has been considered by the committee, and I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the language of his amendment would not be better if it provided "in cases where a half holiday is allowed."

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to have it modified in that way.

Mr. REED. I think as it is now it is not quite specific. I ask the Secretary to send me the amendment. Without the document I can not exactly express it. The amendment reads:

That in order to permit a Saturday half holiday to laborers and mechanics engaged on such work, an employment thereon of not more than 48 hours per week of workdays of not more than 9 hours each shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this act.

The thought I have is covered by the language, but it seems to me it should read that in case where a Saturday half holiday is permitted to laborers and mechanics engaged on such work an employment of not more than 48 hours per week, and so forth.

Mr. LODGE. I am not sure that that will not be a better arrangement of the language. What I want to get at is the substantive change. It would work a great deal of hardship in my State. It would not make any difference as to the pay. The pay is by the hour almost invariably in all great industrial establishments. As to the principle of a certain number of hours a day, there is no objection to that in the world, but it seems to me that to insist on an arrangement which would deprive men of their half holiday on Saturday, which is almost universal in my State and many others, and compel them to work the whole of Saturday when they would much prefer to arrange it as it is now arranged, is making the bill unnecessarily drastic. It seems to me there might be some liberty allowed to men themselves to have what they want.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He states that the law of Massachusetts provides for 48 hours a week. Is not that applied only in those cases where the laborers are paid by the week?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; the pay is by the hour. The law of Massachusetts is 54 hours a week for the manufacturing establishments. It is much lower than in any other State.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the sacrifice of the Saturday half day is at the expense of the workingmen?

Mr. LODGE. Not in the least. They are paid by the hour; it makes no difference to them any day when they work those hours. Their pay is not affected by it. It is only a question of what arrangement they like best.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My impression is that the 48-hour week has generally been made to apply to them.

Mr. LODGE. There is no 48-hour a week law in my State, though there may be in other States. I know our 54-hour a week law is the lowest there is in manufacturing establishments.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator says that the law in Massachusetts limits the number of hours to 54 for a week.

Mr. LODGE. To 54 for a week.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is that the basis of their day's work?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; a basis of six days.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Six days; five days of nine hours and——

Mr. LODGE. One day of three hours.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And one day of three hours.

Mr. LODGE. Of course on Government work the 48 hours would apply. I do not mean to exclude the 48 hours on Government work, because the 8-hour law of the United States applies in navy yards and arsenals. I refer to the State law.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. What protection would there be under the Senator's amendment, or what power would the laborer have to insure an 8-hour day? He would have 48 hours a week, but he might have a 12-hour day, and it is against that which we are contending.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment provides that no day shall exceed 9 hours.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; but he might be made to work 12 hours in 1 day.

Mr. LODGE. The language of the amendment limits it to 9 hours.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; but that eliminates the principle on which the bill is framed, and that is the 8-hour day. If we were constructing it upon a 9-hour basis, it would be a different proposition; but they have the power under this to employ men 9 hours instead of 8.

Mr. LODGE. And 3 hours on the remaining day.

Mr. BORAH. It turns, then, upon the proposition of whether we want a 9-hour day instead of an 8-hour day.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all. It can not be over 48 hours; it can not go over 8 hours a day. It simply allows them to arrange 48 hours a week in the manner they prefer, and it gives them a half holiday Saturday and their Sunday.

Mr. BORAH. But if a man is engaged in that kind of employment where he ought not to work over 8 hours a day, this would be no protection to him at all.

Mr. LODGE. It limits it to 9 hours.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; exactly.

Mr. LODGE. Well, of course, that is a thing which I should think they might decide for themselves.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, you might just as well say that they might decide whether they shall be employed 12 hours or not.

Mr. LODGE. It make no possible difference to the corporation, of course, whether the men work 48 hours in 6 days or whether they work 5 days for 9 hours, and 3 hours on the sixth day. The corporation gets the 48 hours' work, so it makes no difference to the employer at all.

Mr. BORAH. In view of that suggestion, and as I am satisfied the laboring man would rather have 8 hours a day, I do not see the necessity for urging it, because very few of them have advocated the proposition. It practically destroys the principle of the bill in order to get that afternoon holiday. They would prefer to have the principle established and waive that afternoon if they must do so.

Mr. LODGE. That is not the information that I get, which comes to me from great establishments. Of course, great establishments would not be affected at all by this law where they do no Government work; but great establishments like the Fore River shipyard, where there are some four or five thousand men employed, prefer this arrangement. All I can say about it is that it seems reasonable and fair.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will say that this matter has been brought to my attention by a manufacturer who does a large amount of Government work. In his establishment the Saturday half holiday is an established institution, and I am assured by him, and I believe it is the case, that the men employed in that establishment, and in all other establishments, would very much prefer to have a Saturday half holiday, as they have it now, than to have the 8-hour day established.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania know of any considerable sentiment of that kind expressed on the part of the laboring men?

Mr. OLIVER. If time is granted, I think I can obtain almost the unanimous sentiment to that effect of the men who work in that establishment and in many other establishments. I say that the laboring men with whom the Senator has been conferring are not the men who work, but the men who assume to represent the men who work, and that the actual workers are not so insistent upon this shortening of the day as they are to have a liberal time at the end of the week for rational enjoyment.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho has been conferring with some men who have been worked in some of the institutions to which the Senator from Pennsylvania doubtless refers for 12 hours a day and 7 days in the week; and it is to avoid the recurrence of such brutal treatment of the laborers of this country that this bill is being inaugurated and urged.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the establishment to which I have referred is to-day working upon a day not exceeding 9 hours. The men quit work every evening, and they do not go to work until the next morning; they quit work at 12 o'clock on Saturday, and they do not again go to work until Monday morning. If the Senator refers to a 12-hour day, I have nothing to say in its defense; but in any ordinary establishment doing Government work I do not see any objection to a reasonable 9-hour day. I believe the men will be happier, will be more prosperous, and at the end of the year will be better off with a day of 9 hours and a reasonable holiday on Saturday afternoon than they will if they are cut down to 8 hours and forced to work all day on Saturday or, in the other alternative, lose the pay for 4 hours of the week, when they themselves would prefer to be at work.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to modify the amendment, if there is no objection, to conform with the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, so that it will read:

Provided, That if a Saturday half holiday is given to laborers and mechanics engaged on such work, an employment thereon of not more than 48 hours per week of workdays of not more than 9 hours each shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as proposed to be modified will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1 it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That if a Saturday half holiday is given to laborers and mechanics engaged on such work, an employment thereon of not more than 48 hours per week of workdays of not more than 9 hours each shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, under the amendment as proposed to be modified by the Senator from Missouri it is a matter to be entirely left to the decision of the men and the employers. As to the employers, it is a matter of indifference; the interest is wholly that of the men.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I have heard the amendment correctly, it says "provided a Saturday half holiday be given."

Mr. LODGE. "That if a Saturday half holiday is given."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. That does not work out mathematically. If the men are worked 9 hours a day for 5 days that is 45 hours.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, upon the basis of 9 hours a day for 5 days that would be 45 hours, and a half of Saturday would be 4 hours, making 49 in all, whereas they would be due to work only 48 hours.

Mr. LODGE. The 48-hour limitation, of course, would prevent more than 3 hours on Saturday. The custom is to work 3 hours on Saturday, making all the other days 9-hour days. It is an easy matter to arrange.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon the interruption just for a sentence, I think the object of making an 8-hour day provision is to keep from putting too great a continuous strain upon the human machine. If it be thought that 8 hours is a sufficient strain to put upon a man in any one day—and I think it is; I think old Sir Matthew Hale was very wise when he said that a day ought to be divided into three equal parts, 8 for work, 8 for sleep, and the other 8 for rest, food, and edification—if that be the case, and then you make a limitation of 48 hours a week, it enables a man to be overstrained continuously in one day. It might be fixed so that for 4 days he would work 10 hours a day, and on 1 day he would work 8 hours. It seems to me it would be better to make the limitation 8 hours a day; and in the course of time the Saturday half holiday will come with the 8-hour day. It must come after a while, as it has come in England and will come here.

I do not know but that if I were working I would prefer to work 9 hours a day and have my Saturday 4 hours off; but it seems to me that in the ultimate interest of the laboring people, knowing, as I think I do, that the Saturday half holiday has got to come anyhow, it is better to confine the labor to 8 hours a day.

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, it seems to me, speaking of my own feeling and experience, that I would a great deal rather have my half day than to work every day for 8 hours. It seems to me that is a common-sense arrangement and the most agreeable way of working out the matter. I know that is the feeling of the men who work in our great shipyards. They much prefer such an arrangement. Of course, if it is fixed at 8 hours a day and 48 hours a week, the reduction is a very heavy one, in any event, in the number of working hours, and it will be absolutely necessary for the men to work all of Saturday. It is only in the interest of the men that I offer the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I believe very thoroughly in the 8-hour day. I have been an advocate of it for many years. As a member of the legislature of my own State in 1896 I had the honor of assisting in the preparation and enactment of the 8-hour law of that State applying to mines and smelters, which was held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Holden v. Hardy. At that time I investigated the subject somewhat, and I became convinced that the 8-hour day for men engaged in employments of that character would, in the end, turn out to be for the benefit of both the employer and the employee.

I would make this line of division—it is not a very accurate line; not a line that could probably be laid down in exact words in legislation; but, roughly speaking, I would make this line of division—wherever a man is engaged in mechanical work or in manual work which requires the use of the same muscles, or substantially the same muscles, hour after hour, I would make the 8-hour day compulsory, because when a man has worked at one task calling into play the same muscles and straining his attention for 8 hours, he has done as much as the average man ought to be called upon to do. I would not apply that to the farm, because upon the farm the man is engaged in the open air; he is engaged in a multitude of tasks. One portion of the time he is raking hay; another part of the time he is doing something else; his work is diversified, so that different muscles are brought into play, and there is no need in an employment of that kind of enforcing the 8-hour day. But in mechanical pursuits I believe thoroughly that the 8-hour day in the end will be better for both the employer and employee, because while I think a man might do more work in 10 hours than he could do in 8 for 1 day or for 2 days, in a year a man will do more work and better work if he is working 8 hours each day than if he is working 9 hours each day.

I know that men employed in mines and smelters in my State would very much prefer to take the 8-hour day as now provided by our law for each day in the week than to be compelled to work 9 hours upon some days and have a half holiday on Saturday. I think the hour at the end of the day gained by the man in each day is far better for him than a half a day gained at the end of the week. A man who is enabled to quit work at 4 o'clock instead of at 5, making that hour each day, at the end of the year, I think, would be far better off than the man who is compelled to work 9 hours each day except on Saturday. Therefore, while I do not know the exact conditions which prevail in Massachusetts and some of the other States, I am very thoroughly in favor of the general principle of the 8-hour day. We can not make such a law that will be effective unless it is compulsory; we can not very well leave it to an arrangement between the employer and the employee, because in a contest of that kind I think the employee would usually be at a disadvantage as compared with the employer. I shall therefore vote against the proposed amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to say a word or two. If I thought the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts was against the principle of the 8-hour day, contended for so long by laboring men, and particularly by union labor, I would not support the amendment. I am impelled to give it my support, because I have received a considerable number of communications from laboring men in my State asking for this very modification. I am not prepared to say that they represent the general sentiment of labor, but I have received communications of that nature and nothing to the contrary, and it leads me to believe that—at least so far as my own immediate constituency are concerned—they prefer the half holiday.

The arguments that these men have advanced, very briefly, are that by the grant of a half holiday on Saturday they are enabled to close up whatever business transactions they have for the week and to prepare themselves for their day of rest on Sunday; that frequently they desire to take little excursions out of the city for Sunday; that they can prepare for them, and even can leave their homes and gain some additional pleasure at the week end which they could not obtain if they were compelled to work until Saturday evening.

These men say to me that it does not invade the principle of the 8-hour day, because they obtain in the aggregate the limitation upon their hours of labor, and that is what they desire. Forty-eight hours a week is not too great, in their opinion, for men to work, or, at least, they have not advanced to the point where they are asking a greater limitation; but this division of the 48 hours, in their judgment, would be more advantageous to them. I want it to be clearly understood that I do not undertake to say this represents the views of labor. It simply represents them so far as I have heard them.

The argument, of course, that they might be compelled to work too long hours a day—10 or 12 or 15—until they have labored the aggregate of 48 hours is not sound, because the amendment which is offered expressly limits the number of hours to 9 a day.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. Just allow me to conclude my sentence. It was for those reasons that I was led to feel that the amendment would be one which would be welcomed by the laboring classes. I yield to the Senator from Idaho. I have not concluded; but I will endeavor to answer any question which he may desire to ask.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will concede, I think, that the practical effect of this amendment would be to establish a 9-hour day instead of an 8-hour day.

Mr. REED. No; I do not think you would be fair in saying that, because the employer is expressly required to grant the half holiday unless he gives the 8-hour day. The amendment as it is now prepared limits the day's work to 8 hours unless there is actually the half holiday granted. That was undoubtedly the intention of the amendment as originally drawn and probably would have been its construction; but it is clear now.

Mr. BORAH. As a practical working proposition, however, the employer could employ a man for 9 hours a day and pay him the same as he otherwise would pay him for 8 hours a day.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. BORAH. I think he could.

Mr. LODGE. The men are paid by the hour in all the industries that I know of.

Mr. BORAH. If you are employing a man who is paid by the hour, that may be so, but I am speaking of a large class of another kind of employees, where the unit of employment would be 9 hours instead of 8 hours.

Mr. LODGE. Of course if the purpose of this bill is to deal with wages—and I do not so understand; I thought the purpose was to deal with the hours of labor—that introduces a new element. The payment is so generally by the hour that I should not think it would have any effect at all, but if they have got to pay for 48 hours a week, what difference does it make to them how they do it?

Mr. BORAH. If they work by the hour, the Senator from Massachusetts is quite correct in his position, I presume; but if they do not the result would be as I have indicated. In any event it would certainly establish a 9-hour day instead of an 8-hour day, and so it resolves itself into a question of whether a person is in favor of a 9-hour day or an 8-hour day.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not think that argument is as fair as the arguments ordinarily advanced by the Senator. The bill expressly provides that the hours of labor shall be limited to 8 hours a day, provided, however, that if a half holiday is given, then the time granted on the half holiday may be worked out on the other days of the week. That is all it means. It means an 8-hour day figured for a week on the average. The employee does a little more on some days and nothing on Saturday afternoon. It is the principle of the 8-hour day.

As I view it, I would not be willing for a moment to assist any movement or any amendment which I thought militated against the establishment of an 8-hour day. The only man who could be injuriously affected by this measure would be the man who worked just one or two days during a week and then was discharged, or was employed only temporarily. Under the bill, if a man is employed by the week and works 8 hours a day, he has worked 8 hours a day at the end of the week. Under the amendment at the end of a week if he has worked 48 hours his labor stops. In either event the hours of labor are limited to 48 a week; but the amendment permits the employer and the employee to provide for a little different division of the time; that is all.

So far as I am concerned, if the laboring men of the country have thoroughly made up their minds that it will impinge upon the principle they are contending for to permit this division of time, I would allow them to have their way about it, but I do know that there is a growing disposition in more States than Massachusetts for a half holiday, particularly during the long, hot days of the summer. In many employments—in nearly all public employments—it has grown to be a custom to grant a Saturday half holiday at least during the hot months of the summer. That enables the men to leave their places of business at noon on Saturday; to take their families on many little excursions to the country; to visit adjoining cities and villages. It gives them time to go to places where they would not go if they had to work all day on Saturday, and it enables them to close up during the afternoon the business of the week; to do their shopping and their trading. Stores in most cities are now closed, particularly in the hot months, at 5 or 6 o'clock in the afternoon and some of them even earlier on Saturday. I think we are moving toward that condition; and so believing, I have felt, and I still feel, that this amendment is in the interest of the men. If it is not, of course it ought not to be adopted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me that the chief objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts is that it introduces a complication and a confusion into what in the pending bill is a simple proposition. There are no doubt a number of laboring men, and possibly some laboring organizations, who would like to establish the Saturday half holiday. There are others who think that the Saturday half holiday is little to be desired; so that there is a division of opinion upon the merits of the Saturday half holiday. In my opinion the Saturday half holiday applies to a limited number of occupations and is desirable chiefly in occupations which are not involved in this bill.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, the occupation chiefly involved in this bill, of course, is that of shipbuilding. That employs the largest number of men on Government work, and it is those men who want the half-holiday arrangement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think not. This bill applies to Government work, whether in shipyards, in the construction of Government buildings, in the building of Government canals, or to doing Government work upon the rivers or upon the harbors or anywhere else. It applies only to Government work done under contract.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that. If the Senator will allow me, I grasped the fact that it applies to Government work, but it does apply very largely to shipbuilding yards, and those now have the half holiday, I think, almost universally.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That may be. I do not dispute that fact; but still my proposition remains that it applies to Government work of all kinds done by contract.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator understand that it will appy to Government work wherever it happens?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. Not only in Government establishments, but in any institution that has a contract for doing such work for the Government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that is true.

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean ships being built in navy yards, but in private establishments. The navy yards have the 8-hour law now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand it applies to all persons employed on Government work, and that they shall work only 8 hours, and this bill undertakes to extend that law to contractors working for the Government.

Mr. LODGE. When I spoke about ships, I did not refer to navy yards.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. I referred to private yards that are building ships for the Government by contract. They employ by far the largest number of men.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The struggle to obtain an 8-hour day is a well-defined struggle among the laboring class. It has been gaining ground steadily for a number of years, and many who were radically opposed to it have come to realize the moral and physical benefit it confers upon the industrial class. Practically speaking, it is supported unanimously by all those who belong to the industrial classes. This bill is to carry that desire and that reform into effect, and I think it would be something in the nature of a misfortune to complicate it by introducing the side issue of a Saturday half holiday.

Mr. BORAH. Not only has it been found to be beneficial to the workingmen, but a great many large employers of labor have learned that they get equal work and an equally efficient amount of work from the 8-hour day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is very true, and that has been testified to by employers of labor. If it be a fact that the ninth hour is an evil to the man who is compelled to work that hour, that evil will exist during the 9 hours contemplated by the Senator from Massachusetts just as much as it would exist if it were to cover 6 days. And I think we ought to stand by the proposition that what we propose to do in this legislation is to carry into effect in Government work, whether done directly by the Government or indirectly, by contract, is to abolish the tired hour and introduce the model workday of 8 hours only.

Mr. REED. I want to ask the Senator if he does not think that the Sunday rest helps to qualify a man for another struggle the ensuing week?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it helps very materially.

Mr. REED. And if that period of time is extended for another half day would not that be carried over the week and help to compensate for the extra hour a day? To state it fairly, do you not think it will at least alleviate the hardship of the extra hour?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would be an alleviation undoubtedly, but I do not believe that the Saturday half holiday is sufficient compensation for the 5 extra hours work on the other 5 days of the week. I believe if we propose to guarantee to those who do Government work this up-to-date civilized reform of relieving them of the tired hour, we ought to do it in this bill, and not allow ourselves to be diverted into what I think is a side issue.

As the Senator from Idaho has suggested, the 8-hour law once in effect may result in some important modifications, and as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has stated, so I believe that ultimately we will have in this country the 8-hour day as the limit and possibly in many occupations we will have in addition to that the Saturday half holiday also, on the basis of an 8-hour day and not upon the basis of a 9-hour day.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask one question. I understand the amendment proposed is permissive in its effect; that is to say, if enacted into law an employer engaged on some public work and his employees might enter into an agreement among themselves whereby the half holiday would be given on Saturday in return for an additional hour's work each day during the remainder of the week. Now, in the absence of an agreement of that kind, the law providing for 8 hours would apply absolutely and unconditionally, if that is correct. If that is the provision of the amendment, would the Senator deny that opportunity to the workingmen? They will be the most concerned and will, I should think, be the first of all who would ask for this arrangement, if it is asked for at all, for I can not see what difference it makes to the employer if he gets 8 hours' labor a day in any event.

Now, would the Senator deny to men in any particular employment and to an employer the right to make an agreement of this kind, if the men thought it was for their best interest and they desired it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The position of the Senator from Missouri is that when you open that door to this right you assume that the men are unanimously in favor of one proposition or another. It would seem to be unreasonable to deny to the men, if they were unanimously in favor of a Saturday half holiday, the privilege of agreeing to it; but we know as a practical proposition that if one of the shipyards in Massachusetts to which the Senator referred desires to continue its Saturday half holiday and submitted the proposition to the men and half the men so employed voted in favor of the Saturday half holiday the others might be under a practical compulsion to accept it in order to hold their positions. It is for the protection of the men themselves against entering upon the practice which we believe to be injurious that this bill is proposed at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 18642.

Mr. LODGE. I simply desire to request that the amendment which has been under discussion may be printed as modified, so that it will be clearly before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be printed as modified.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	du Pont	Lippitt	Reed
Bailey	Fall	McLean	Richardson
Borah	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Sanders
Bourne	Foster	Myers	Shively
Bradley	Gallinger	Newlands	Simmons
Bryan	Gardner	Nixon	Sutherland
Catron	Gore	O'Gorman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Gronna	Oliver	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Overman	Townsend
Cullom	Hitchcock	Page	Wetmore
Cummins	Jones	Paynter	Williams
Dillingham	Lea	Perkins	Works

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have just received from the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] a message requesting me to announce to the Senate his absence owing to a death in his family. I have no further knowledge of particulars, but I beg to make the announcement as requested.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Chamber on important business.

Mr. SHIVELY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. KERN] is absent from the Chamber on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PAGE in the chair). Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at the conclusion of my remarks on Friday last I was discussing the question of freight rates. I did not have a chance to conclude what I had to say upon that subject. I have a table showing the United States domestic freight rates from Chicago to New York, Buffalo, Mobile, New Orleans, San Francisco, and from Pittsburgh to those same points, also from Birmingham to the same points upon rails, pig iron, billets, and finishel products, and also the foreign freight rates from the mills, factories, and furnaces in Germany and England to the principal ports of the United States, inland and ocean-freight rates combined, from foreign mills to New York, Mobile, New Orleans, and San Francisco upon the same products. I do not desire to take the time of the Senate to go through those rates, but I submit the table.

United States domestic freight rates.

	Rails per gross ton.	Pig iron per gross ton.	Billets per gross ton.	Finished products per 100 pounds.
From Chicago to—
New York	$4.70	$4.62	$4.95	$0.30
Buffalo	2.80	2.80	3.00	.18
Mobile	4.00	6.272	6.272	.28
New Orleans	4.00	6.272	6.272	.28
San Francisco	11.00	[1].50	[1].60	.80
From Pittsburgh to—
New York	2.60	2.45	2.60	.16
Buffalo	1.65	1.75	1.80	.11
Mobile	4.44	6.72	6.72	.29
New Orleans	4.44	6.72	6.72	.29
San Francisco	13.50	14.00	16.44	.85
From Birmingham to—
New York	.....	5.92	5.95	.29
Buffalo	.....	4.90	4.90	.....
Mobile	2.50	2.75	2.75	.12
New Orleans	3.00	3.00	3.00	.13
San Francisco	11.75	13.20	13.20	.75

[1] Per 100 pounds.

Foreign freight rates from the mills, factories, and furnaces in Germany and England to the principal ports in the United States (inland and ocean freight rates combined).

	Rails per gross ton.	Pig iron per gross ton.	Billets per gross ton.	Finished products per gross ton.
From foreign mills to—
New York	$2.85	$2.85	$2.85	$3.00
Mobile	3.35	3.35	3.35	3.50
New Orleans	3.35	3.35	3.35	3.50
San Francisco	7.50	7.50	7.50	8.75

Ocean freight rates from Great Britain and North Sea ports.

To—	Boston.	New York.	Philadelphia.	Baltimore.
Iron ore	$1.75	$1.75	$1.65	$1.65
Pig iron	1.50	1.50	1.50	1.50
Rails	1.65	1.65	1.65	1.65
Billets	1.65	1.65	1.65	1.65
Bars	1.75	1.75	1.75	1.75
Plates	1.75	1.75	1.75	1.75
Structural	1.85	1.85	1.85	1.85
Sheets	1.85	1.85	1.85	1.85
Tin plates	1.85	1.85	1.85	1.85
Rods	1.75	1.75	1.75	1.75
Wire	1.75	1.75	1.75	1.75
Tubular products	1.75	1.75	1.75	1.75

In connection with the rates given in the table, perhaps I had better call particular attention to what they really mean to the American manufacturer. The result, if the House bill became a law, would be that the foreign manufacturer would monopolize the entire business in the heavy steel products within a section varying from 50 to 200 miles wide, extending from Maine to Texas, from California to Washington, along the entire seaboard of the United States. In this zone it would be impossible for domestic manufacturers to compete with foreign manufacturers at the present American manufacturing cost in the whole of the six New England States, about one-half of the State of New York, the whole of New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, most of Virginia and North Carolina, the whole of South Carolina, the whole of Florida, the greater part of Georgia, a part of Mississippi, most of Louisiana, practically all of Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona, as well as Oregon and Washington.

Mr. President, from a glance at the map we can see where the manufacturers of these heavy products are located and that a great part of the American market would be open, not upon an equal basis with the foreign manufacturers, but the manufacturers of this country would be absolutely at a disadvantage. Included in this area there are marketed nearly 1,000,000 tons.

The fact has been referred to in this discussion that there have been mammoth fortunes made in this industry, that they have not been measured by millions, but hundreds of millions of dollars. Mr. President, if anyone will study the history of this great industry, he will find that those who have made these enormous fortunes were the pioneers in this industry. They were the men who created it and gave it birth in this country. They were the ones who have through creative powers perfected it until it is the greatest industry as to the quantity of goods manufactured of any in all the world. They started at a time when steel rails were selling in England at $96 per ton. At that time there was a duty upon rails of $28, and ever since steel rails have been gradually falling in value.

Mr. President, under the conditions existing to-day, Mr. Andrew Carnegie could not make the money he has made in the past. Under present conditions Mr. Schwab could not make the money that has been made by him and his associates in the past. He so testified before the committee. Mr. Schwab, in his testimony, stated that he had labored with the Bethlehem Steel Works a great part of his life and his pride was to build it up and make it a model institution, and up to the present time he had not drawn one cent in dividends. He also said that he could lose all he had invested in the company and not affect him much, as he could live without it and did not have an heir to leave his wealth to.

I thought at the time Mr. Schwab made that statement how much happier and contented a man must be who is blessed with a wife and children, bending every energy that his labors might be crowned with success and encouraged by those who actually love him and always ready to share with him success or failure, wealth or poverty, general applause or public condemnation than one without an heir, even though he has been successful in making millions. Wealth, though measured by millions, is not the greatest gift to man and in but few cases brings real happiness.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PAGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish simply to correct what I think is an inadvertance on the part of the Senator from Utah. I do not remember that Mr. Schwab testified that he had given his life to the Bethlehem Steel Works or that he had been connected with that institution during the greater part of his life. Mr. Schwab's association with the Bethlehem Steel Works is of very modern origin and he made his fortune, as the Senator knows, in connection with another enterprise and with other associates.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, Mr. President. His association with the Bethlehem Steel Works has not been as long as I stated. I will correct that statement, but I desired to have it appear that he spent most of his life in this industry and that he is familiar with every detail of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think, Mr. President, that while the Bethlehem Steel works, now capitalized at about $15,000,000, last year paid 10 per cent dividends on the $15,000,000, the stockholders have never subscribed and have never paid in outside the earnings of the company except about $300,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has made that statement once before and I would——

Mr. SIMMONS. I read that from a letter of Mr. Schwab.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been unable to find out where he secured the information, because Mr. Schwab testified that not only all the profits made by the company had been put back into the industry, but other large sums of money besides.

Mr. SIMMONS. I made that statement from the authority of a letter which I read from Mr. Schwab himself.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean to say that the Bethlehem Steel Co. declared a dividend payable to the stockholders last year of 10 per cent?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is my recollection.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is mistaken in that regard.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not be mistaken about the letter which I read from Mr. Schwab, in which he stated——

Mr. SMOOT. I know in the testimony of Mr. Schwab he stated that he had never taken a penny out of the business—not one penny.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is true unquestionably that he said he had never received a penny out of the business. The earnings of the plant have gone into improvements and into enlargement and expansion, but the fact I state, and I think it sustained by the letter which I will try and find and read a little later, is that the stockholders had contributed but $300,000 of this enormous plant capitalized at $15,000,000, and the result of that $300,000 in actual cash the stockholders have to-day a plant worth $15,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. That is for about 50 years.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the testimony of Mr. Schwab here, but the Senator can turn to it and see exactly what he said in relation to that matter. However, I do remember positively that he said he had not drawn a penny from the earnings of the company and every dollar that had been made from the time it started had been put back into the business. Mr. President, deposit money in a savings bank and compound the interest every three months or every six months and see what it will amount to in 50 years and you can then have an idea of how rapidly a business will increase, if successful, by allowing its profits to accumulate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the Senator ought to do Mr. Schwab full justice in regard to this matter. I do not think Mr. Schwab said or intended to say that the Bethlehem Steel Works had never paid dividends. I think he meant to say that after he had left the Carnegie Co., and after the organization of the United States Steel Corporation and during his association with the Bethlehem Steel Works, and he became, I think, one of its large owners at that time, he had not taken dividends from this organization. I do not believe he intended to say that there never had been anything paid on capital during the history of this concern.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps I had better read the testimony, Mr. President, as I have it here.

Senator STONE. What is the per cent of profit on the product to the stockholders?

Mr. SCHWAB. Most of the stock belongs to me, and I am sorry to say I have never taken a penny out of the concern the years I have owned it.

Senator WILLIAMS. Do you mean by that you have made no profit, that you have put it back in the business?

Mr. SCHWAB. I have not made sufficient profit to feel that the best interests of the concern justified me in taking a dividend.

Senator WILLIAMS. So you have put it back in the business—increased the business?

Mr. SCHWAB. I have put it into bettering the business. People speak of 20 and 25 per cent being an unusual profit on a manufactured product, too great a product in the manufacture of iron and steel. I want to say if they will study the history of the industry to see how plants have had to be rebuilt every 5 or 10 years, new processes introduced, they will take a different view. I know of no concern in these 30 years making 20 per cent profit that has been able to pay its stockholders one-third of it.

Senator STONE. Can you tell me this, how much you have taken out in the form of a dividend?

Mr. SCHWAB. Yes. I can tell you the earnings if you would like to know that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], who is intimately acquainted with all these developments, could tell the Senate exactly when Mr. Schwab acquired his ownership in the Bethlehem Steel Works.

Mr. SMOOT. You mean in the present company?

Mr. CUMMINS. In the present company.

Mr. CUMMINS. He was not connected with it before——

Mr. OLIVER. I think it was about 1903 or 1904.

Mr. CUMMINS. That was my recollection.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, all the examinations made of the difference between the cost of producing steel products in this country and in a foreign country, and all the information that we have in this regard is virtually a one-sided proposition, and in order to show how impossible it is to obtain information of the cost of production in a foreign country, I will read from Herbert Knox Smith's report on page 8.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator reverts to that, may I call his attention to what Mr. Schwab's testimony was concerning his own plant? He states on page 302, speaking of his own plant:

In taking the earnings, year by year, of our plant—which is typical of the industry—I find, for example, in 1908 our earnings were 2.66 per cent on the stock; in 1906, 2.54; in 1909 they were 12.22. That was a good year. In the last two years they have been about 6.75 per cent. But the average of the whole business for all this period is 4.3 per cent earnings upon the stock.

Mr. SMOOT. I will call attention in a few minutes to some of the earnings of the great steel companies of Germany and England, and what dividends they are paying.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from North Dakota, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, has not made clear what relation the stock bears to the investment. I venture to say that the stock upon which he said the returns have been small is nominally four, five, or six times the amount of the independent capital invested in the business.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think not. I remember clearly the evidence in that case and I am certain, as I recall the evidence, that there was a very close relation between the amount of stock issued and the actual cash which has gone into the business. In another section of the testimony that is covered in full, and I am very certain the Senator is in error even in supposing that stock is a half greater than the amount of the capital invested.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am unable to sustain my statement at this moment. I am not now speaking of the accumulated investment growing out of the earnings, but I feel very sure that the independent capital invested in this enterprise is not one-fifth of the present capitalization.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, continuing the testimony of Mr. Schwab, Senator STONE said:

I would like to have the net earnings.

Mr. SCHWAB. From 1905 up to 1911, inclusive, my company earned $9,871,000 net; that is 7 years. That is after deducting all bond interest, fixed charges, etc. That left for my stock, after deducting depreciation, in those 7 years, an average of 4¾ per cent.

Senator STONE. On the stock?

Mr. SCHWAB. On the stock.

Senator STONE. What is the amount of the bonds?

Mr. SCHWAB. Twenty-five millions.

Senator STONE. And thirty millions of stock?

Mr. SCHWAB. Thirty millions of stock.

Senator STONE. What is the interest on the bonds?

Mr. SCHWAB. Some 5 and some 6 per cent; an average of 5½ per cent.

Senator STONE. Are you a large owner of the bonds?

Mr. SCHWAB. Yes, sir.

Senator STONE. Do you own most of them?

Mr. SCHWAB. No, sir; I have sold the bonds. I still have some for sale.

Senator STONE. You have a good, large salary list to be paid to what you call the overhead men?

Mr. SCHWAB. Yes; a fairly good salary list.

Senator STONE. What is your salary?

Mr. SCHWAB. I have none.

Senator STONE. You work for nothing?

Mr. SCHWAB. Yes.

Senator GALLINGER. You have some places for high-class men now, have you not?
Mr. SCHWAB. I have; yes.
Senator STONE. Who are the stockholders?
Mr. SCHWAB. They are very widely scattered.
Senator STONE. I did not mean to say stockholders—I meant directors.
Mr. SCHWAB. Do you want the names of the directors?
Senator STONE. Yes.

Mr. Schwab then gives the names. I thought I could turn to the testimony of Mr. Schwab to show just what had been paid for stock in actual cash in the formation of the company, and also what had been credited in the shape of dividends. I am quite sure the Senator will find that he is mistaken when he says it is only one-fifth of the stock issued.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, I have not the letter here but I will read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where it is incorporated in a speech made in the other House by Representative PALMER. He says, after citing some tables:

These conditions obtained during the same period of time covered by the statement of the president of the Bethlehem Steel Co. when he wrote, under date of November 5, 1909:

"The capital stock of the Bethlehem Steel Co. amounts to $15,000,000 (all owned by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation), divided into 300,000 shares at $50 par. While nominally only $1 per share has been paid in, the surplus of the company is practically sufficient to pay the stock in full, and the company intends to issue stock to represent this surplus."

Then the speaker makes the following statement:

Apparently this intention of the company was carried out and the earned profits added to the capital account, for in 1910 we find that the Bethlehem Steel Co. earned, net, after liberal additions to depreciation and furnace relining reserves and considerable redemption of funded debt, the comfortable amount of $1,789,462.09, which was sufficient to nearly double the then surplus and declare and pay a dividend of 10 per cent, amounting to $1,500,000 on the capital stock of the company, which, according to Mr. Schwab's statement, consisted of $300,000 contributed in cash and $14,700,000 earned profits.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know nothing of the statement. All I know is that it is not correct, as Mr. Schwab testified before the committee that the total capitalization of bonds and stocks in the company was $55,000,000.

Referring again to the question of obtaining information as to what goods cost in foreign countries, Herbert Knox Smith, in his report, makes this statement:

The bureau made a comprehensive investigation into the costs of the raw materials and finished products of the iron and steel industry in the United States, the principal results of which are presented in this report. It also attempted to get similar costs of manufacture in the chief foreign producing countries, but, while much information of a general character was obtained relating to the subject, it was found impossible to obtain any comprehensive information as to the costs as shown directly on the books of account.

So, Mr. President, I am not here disputing the cost of producing pig iron or steel rails or billets in this country, as shown by the report of Herbert Knox Smith, for before making the report the mills in the United States were visited, freedom was given to Mr. Smith or his representatives to examine the books of all the companies, and every possible facility was offered him to ascertain the actual cost of producing these articles in this country. I accept the statement in all the reports made by Herbert Knox Smith; but, on the other hand, the testimony of Herbert Knox Smith and of Mr. Charles M. Pepper, the only two men who have made a statement relative to the cost of goods abroad, says that it is impossible to get accurate information of the cost of making goods in a foreign country. The German manufacturer or the English manufacturer is not going to let a man from this country go into his establishment and examine his books to find out what it costs to make an article when he knows the information is sought for the purpose of levying a duty upon the article sufficient to protect the American manufacturer as between the cost in this country and the cost abroad.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. Assuming that it is impossible, what does the Senator from Utah intend to do about it? Does he intend never to make any revision of this schedule? Does he intend to permit the duties that are now in it to remain indefinitely? We must be able to do something somehow; we must rely on some testimony procured somehwere at some time. What is the program of the Senator from Utah in view of the fact that it is impossible to secure access to the books of foreign manufacturers?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think before we undertake to revise the steel schedule we ought at least to be in possession of the same kind of information that we are in possession of in relation to the wool and cotton schedules; or in other words, I think that there ought to be a Tariff Board report. The only information we have is the report made by Mr. Smith and Mr. Pepper. Mr. Pepper was not sent to Europe to study the cost of producing steel abroad; he was a special agent representing the Department of Commerce and Labor sent to report upon trade conditions. That is the only authority he had, as I am informed. I will say, without fear of contradiction, that Mr. Pepper has never claimed that he knew what it cost to produce pig iron, billets, or steel rails in a foreign country.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not in the confidence of Mr. Pepper nearly so much as is the Senator from Utah. I only know what Mr. Pepper's mission abroad was by referring to his report. I assume that he reported upon the subject he was commissioned to examine and investigate. He did report upon the cost of making these things abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. He reported upon what the trade said the cost was.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; and almost every man who goes to Europe reports upon what somebody else says is the cost. It is the only avenue of information he has.

The Senator from Utah speaks of the Tariff Board report upon wool. I said the other day that I held that report in high regard, but I may be permitted to put my judgment against that of the Senator from Utah at least; and I say that the report of Mr. Pepper, in regard to foreign cost of pig iron and subsequent forms of iron and steel, is a great deal more satisfactory to me than the report of the Tariff Board respecting the foreign cost of wool. The Tariff Board says, with regard to Australian wool, for instance, after pointing out some instances in which wool is produced there for less than nothing, that probably the cost in Australia, taking it as a whole, is a few cents a pound, and the Senator from Utah and myself will presently be called upon to apply our doctrine of protection upon that statement with regard to the cost of producing wool in Australia, that it costs a few cents. I think that is all the information the Tariff Board could acquire; I do not believe it could have discovered more if it had spent years in Australia. It says, in regard to the wool industry in South America that the cost is from 4 to 5 cents—somewhere along there. I do not conceal from myself the meagerness of our information with regard to these costs; but we have all the evidence we will ever get, and we can supplement it by very satisfactory proof with regard to the conditions of trade and prices at which iron and steel sell abroad. That is, I think, one of the most satisfactory supplements that we can bring to our aid in determining the parity or disparity which exists between the foreign manufacturer and our own.

I hope the Senator from Utah, because we have not that same nicety of information with regard to the books of our rivals in other countries that we have in regard to our own, will not take the position that these duties having been imposed by somebody at some time without any such information, we must allow them to remain for all time.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; the Senator will find that I am perfectly willing that there should be a change wherever it is shown or can be shown that there are rates that are oppressive or excessive; but I do believe that the testimony and all the information that we have before us show that the rates that are imposed now—50 per cent in many instances—under the act of 1909 are not really excessive.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that is a perfectly logical position to take, but I hope that the Senator will not take the position that he outlined before. I believe if the burden of proof as to foreign cost is on anybody, it is rather upon the manufacturer than upon the users of iron and steel; and if we get all the information we can and find it difficult to reach an accurate conclusion, then those who are benefited by the duty ought to supply whatever there remains of knowledge upon that subject.

Mr. SMOOT. We must not forget, Mr. President, that the manufacturers of this country have freely and voluntarily opened their books for examination as to the cost of their products. They are perfectly willing at any time for the Government to know exactly what it costs to produce goods in this country. Now, let us see from the reports what it does cost to manufacture pig iron in Germany and in England, and let us take the report of Mr. Pepper and see if the present rate is not justified by that report. I will take the amount of wages required in producing steel rails and bar iron from the iron ore to the finished product, then apply the principle that it costs double in this country, so far as wages are concerned, what it does in a foreign country and then see what the present rates are as compared with that difference.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator whether there is anything in Mr. Pepper's report which shows that the iron and steel manufacturers of Germany and Great Britain refused to give him such information as he desired in the investigation which he was sent by the department there to make? I do not know how that is, but my impression is that the report made by Mr. Pepper upon foreign cost was very full; that it was a detailed report, and my impression is that he had no difficulty in getting reasonable information. I do not know whether or not they opened their books, as some of our manufacturers have done, and put them at his command. I do not remember as to that, and I wish to ask the Senator if there is anything that shows that Mr. Pepper was denied reasonable information as a basis for making his calculations?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no statement in the report that he was denied this information by the foreign manufacturers, but it is stated that the information obtained came from disinterested trade authorities; or, in other words, Mr. Pepper has taken the statements of trade papers.

Mr. SIMMONS. Would not the Senator consider disinterested trade authorities as tolerably reliable sources of information?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think they know any more about the cost of manufacturing steel and iron in Germany or in England than do the trade papers of this country know about the cost of manufacturing steel and iron in any American mill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have understood, Mr. President, that in England there is a fuller and probably a franker disclosure of manufacturing conditions, which is accessible to the trade associations there, than we have in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not accessible to the general public. It may be to the syndicate that controls these particular products.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will allow me to ask him another question, I understood him to say that probably Mr. Pepper did not have access to the sources of information sufficiently to enable him to make an accurate and reliable report, because the manufacturers would not furnish it to him. Does the Senator think that the Tariff Board would be any more likely to get that information than a special agent sent over there for the purpose of making an investigation? Of course, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me one minute further, neither one of them would have any authority or any right to demand anything of the English manufacturers. It would be a matter of grace in both instances. Now, can the Senator give us any reason for believing that the manufacturers of Europe would be any more likely to open their books and to make full disclosures to a board investigating for the purpose of regulating the tariff than they would to a special agent investigating for the purpose of ascertaining general information?

Mr. SMOOT. Answering the Senator, I will state that if the Tariff Board was making the investigation it would send to Europe men who are familiar with the business from beginning to end and would know whether the report was fair upon its face or not. Mr. Pepper knows nothing of the details of a rail mill. He was correspondent for certain newspapers in this country; and while I do not say a thing against him as a man or question his honesty, I do say this, there is not a man living who is not familiar with the details of a business who could go and make an intelligent and accurate report upon it, as well as a man who has been trained all his life in the business and knows every process and every step necessary to be taken from the production of the iron ore on to the finished product. Therefore I say that the Tariff Board if they were given the power and the time would select a man of that kind, and he could make a more accurate report than a man who knows nothing of the business.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to interrupt the Senator from Utah just once more.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objections.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know the Senator ought to be permitted to go along with his speech, but I think it is due to Mr. Pepper that we should see precisely what he says with regard to the origin of his information. I will read from page 10 of his report:

> In 1908 the conditions as to cost of production approximated closely those which obtained in 1903–4, the general opinion of the trade being that they were a little higher, about in proportion to the difference in the selling price, which in the case of Cleveland pig averaged $14.40 for 1908, as against $12.94 in 1904. The figures of Mr. J. Stephen Jeans, secretary of the British Iron Trade Association, may be taken as trustworthy. According to Mr. Jeans, the cost per ton of making pig iron in the two chief British districts approximates as follows:

Mr. SMOOT. The source of information is as I stated.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. That is the only place to which any American can ever go to ascertain what it costs to make these articles abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is no need of going to Europe. I can sit in my office and get the very identical report that Mr. Pepper speaks of. There is no need of going abroad for that kind of information.

Mr. CUMMINS. The report of the Tariff Board on wool convinces me that there is absolutely no necessity of sending a man abroad to secure the foreign cost.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, then we can never find out what is the foreign cost, and I believe we can approximate the cost as near as the reports we have. The Senator read from Mr. Pepper's report on the British iron industry, and I quoted from his report on Germany's iron and steel industry.

Mr. McCUMBER. Have we not some basis at least from which to arrive at an estimate of the cost of production when we know the wholesale cost at the point of export? We can always assume at least that the product is not sold for less than it cost to produce it, and we can make a fair estimate of what would be a reasonable return upon the investment. If we find that steel rails at the point of export in Germany range wholesale about $25.50 per ton, and we find that in this country we produce them for from $22 to $23 per ton, and we assume that 10 per cent would not be an excessive profit for the German manufacturer to make, then taking off 10 per cent from $25.50 per ton you would get a fair estimate of the cost of production in a foreign country; and if that is true then the cost of production in a foreign country, compared with the cost of production in this country is very much below ours, then it would be impossible to give away much of the amount called for in either of these substitutes.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a most amazing process of ascertaining the cost. We meet Germany in the neutral ports for the sale of steel rails, and we sell them in those ports and markets at exactly the same price as Germany sells them, and a little less, and yet the Senator from North Dakota would take the export price of steel rails at these same markets and take our domestic prices of steel rails in order to reach a comparison. I would a great deal rather trust the process of the Senator from Utah in ascertaining both the foreign cost and the domestic cost than that suggested by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has to admit, I think, that as a rule the German manufacturer year in and year out is not selling his goods at less than cost for export, where the exports constitute by far the larger quantity of what he manufactures. It is an entirely different proposition. As a matter of fact, in order to keep the mills running in this country, it may be that 5 per cent of the output is sold abroad and that 5 per cent may be sold at what it costs to produce it, in order to dispose of the surplus and keep the workingmen employed during all the time.

That is not true in the case of Germany. They sell a great deal more abroad than they do for home consumption. Therefore their wholesale price for export will ordinarily include a fair and reasonable profit upon the cost of production, differing entirely with the conditions in this country, and I have not taken this as a single case.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Dakota I think still fails to comprehend the situation. The United States Steel Corporation exports 20 per cent of its entire product, and it makes a product for export precisely as it makes it for domestic use. It is a legitimate and a continuing part of its business. It does not sell abroad at less than cost. It sells at practically the same price as at home, if it can get that price. But to say the United States Steel Corporation sells 20 per cent of its entire product abroad and sells it as a mere incident, in order to keep its factories open and running, I think is to ignore the evidence all about us. The United States Steel Corporation has almost doubled its capacity for certain kinds of production, notably steel rails, in order to supply its markets abroad.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought the Senator would have to fall back upon the United States Steel Corporation in order to get the basis for the lowest possible price. In speaking of the 5 per cent of exports of the United States, I was speaking of the entire product of the United States, and I think I am borne out in the proposition that taking the entire product, not more than 5 per cent is exported.

I agree with the Senator that the United States Steel Corporation can produce steel rails and pig iron and everything in the matter of steel manufacture for less than any other institution in the United States, and I may agree that it is possible that they need no protection whatever; but assuming they produce 40 or 45 per cent of the entire American product, we can not base our tariff duties upon the one institution that can produce the very cheapest, when by so doing we would cripple every other establishment and give to that corporation a monopoly of the trade in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I think from a business standpoint that the United States Steel Corporation would be justified in selling 20 per cent of its product of steel rails abroad, even if they obtained only cost, for this reason——

Mr. CUMMINS. Would Germany also be justified——

Mr. SMOOT. For the reason that the United States Steel Corporation have mills that do nothing else than turn out steel rails. They start with the ore, and the process is continuous until it comes out in a finished rail. In order to do that they have to keep the mills running all the time, and in keeping the mills running all the time the cost of their product is reduced, and if they get only cost out of the 20 per cent exported, they have reduced the cost of producing the other 80 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Utah another question? It happens that although the capacity of the United States Steel Corporation and its business have grown tremendously since it was organized in 1901, it is true that the capacity and the business of the so-called rival companies or the so-called independent companies has increased more than that of the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. SMOOT. That applies not so much to steel rails and structural steel as it does to the other products in the steel industry—wires, nettings of all kinds, the higher finished products of all kinds; in fact, the independents have almost been compelled to go into this class of manufacture——

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Utah has chosen an unfortunate illustration. The one thing upon which the United States Steel Corporation has pretty nearly a monopoly is wire.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, the plain wire. I am speaking of wire netting and all of the products made from wire.

I fully agree with the Senator from North Dakota that it is impossible for the independents to manufacture rails with the capacity they have as cheaply as it is done by the United States Steel Corporation. No one doubts that. The testimony shows that in some cases the independents have been compelled, in order to keep their plants going, to sell goods abroad and to sell them at less than cost. I do not believe the Senator from Iowa objects to that; but that under certain conditions would say that a manufacturer is justified in doing so, although I have not heard him express himself on the floor of the Senate on that subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do object, however, to the fact that they do sell abroad being used as evidence that they are selling that part of the commodity or that part of the article at cost or below, for they are not doing anything of the sort.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator never heard me say that that was the basis on which I was going to figure.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator from Utah mean to say that the United States Steel Corporation is selling steel rails abroad at less than cost?

Mr. SMOOT. Sometimes they do; other times they do not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean to say that that is a practice of theirs?

Mr. SMOOT. The practice of the United States Steel Corporation is to sell all the steel rails its mills produce, and in order to keep the mills running all the time, so as to make the goods as cheaply as it is possible to make them, and if the market in this country or in foreign countries is such that it has to sell rails below cost, it does so at times.

Mr. SIMMONS. My recollection is that Mr. Gary, chairman of the steel company until recently—I believe he is now; he has been chairman of it, I know—in the hearings before the House committee——

Mr. SMOOT. That was in 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is not too long ago; that is only recently. He testified that they were getting about the same price abroad as they get at home, or a litle bit higher.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact, in connection with the argument just made by the Senator from North Dakota, that only a small per cent of the product of these factories is sold abroad compared with the percentage of the total product; that that statement is not correct as applied to steel rails is shown by the fact that our exports of steel rails are very nearly as great as those of Germany or England.

Mr. SMOOT. I am fully aware of that. I know what are the exportations of this country and what are those of Germany.

Mr. SIMMONS. The argument of the Senator could not apply to steel rails, whatever force it might have with some other product.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not arguing along that line to arrive at the cost of steel rails——

Mr. SIMMONS. But you were discussing the subject of the exportation of steel rails.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. What I am saying is that we exported in 1910 ten million and a half dollars' worth as against England's $13,000,000 and as against France's $12,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not know the facts if he makes such a statement as that. The production in this country is many times greater than that of England or Germany.

Mr. SIMMONS. That may be true.

Mr. SMOOT. The $13,000,000 of steel rails exported by England is 70 per cent of all she manufactures, and I have no doubt that the $12,000,000 worth that Germany exports is over 50 per cent of all she manufactures.

Mr. SIMMONS. The United States to-day is the third exporter in quantity of steel rails in the world.

Mr. SMOOT. Nobody doubts that, but what she does export, even if she is the third country in point of exports, is only a small percentage of what she produces and uses for home consumption.

The Senator from North Dakota was right. The great exporter is the United States Steel Corporation, and it exports not to exceed 20 per cent of its production, and there are only a few independents who export at all. So, the exports, taking the industry as a whole, not confining it to the steel corporation, but including all the independents as well as the steel corporation, amounts to only 5 per cent of the amount produced in this country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. REED. It is just for information. I understand the Senator to say it is a fact that large quantities of steel are sold in Europe at a less price than it is sold here, and, of course, I am referring to the steel made in this country. Do I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. No, I never made the statement in that way.

Mr. REED. I certainly, Mr. President, understood the Senator to say——

Mr. SMOOT. I will say this—that large quantities of steel rails are exported by Germany and England at a less price than they are sold in their local markets.

Mr. REED. I am discussing the other question, and I want to know if I was right when I understood the Senator to say that steel rails were shipped from this country and sold in Europe for less than it cost to produce it in this country, plus freight, and to justify that by the argument that the mills had to be kept constantly going. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SMOOT. Technically I suppose not, but to other countries, yes. In other words, in the making——

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator permit me? I do not think the Senator from Utah understands the Senator from Missouri. The Senator from Missouri speaks of exporting rails from the United States to Europe.

Mr. REED. Yes; I think the Senator understands the question.

Mr. McCUMBER. How many rails are exported to Europe?

Mr. REED. There is a very small percentage going to Europe.

Mr. SMOOT. Rails are shipped to Central America, South America, and Mexico. That is why I said "technically." I understood the Senator to mean from the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is a different proposition.

Mr. REED. I hardly think the Senator from Utah in defense of the Payne-Aldrich bill needs a prompter or a suggester of any kind; but if it is necessary, I will modify my statement so as to include South America.

Mr. McCUMBER. Exclude the others.

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator to say it is a fact that large quantities of steel are exported from the United States to other countries and sold at less than the cost in this country. Is that correct?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a large quantity in comparison with the amount manufactured in this country, but I will say yes; there are considerable quantities of steel rails manufactured in this country and exported to other countries and in some cases sold for less than cost.

Mr. REED. You say it is not a large quantity in comparison, but still a considerable quantity of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. REED. Can the Senator give us an idea of the amount—I am asking for information, and he has studied the bill—that is actually sold abroad at less than cost of production in this country.

Mr. SMOOT. That I could not say, nor I do not think anybody else could give the aggregate amount.

Mr. REED. Can the Senator give us an approximation?

Mr. CUMMINS. May I act as prompter for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Willingly.

Mr. REED. I will accept.

Mr. CUMMINS. While it might seem to make for the position I take in regard to this schedule, the truth is that very little of our steel product is sold abroad more cheaply than it is sold at home. Our people are able to compete with the whole world, without reducing their prices in other markets, and the instances in which they sell abroad more cheaply than at home are rare. We supply Russia, both in Europe and in Asia; we supply Asia and South America with these heavy steel products at prices that yield our producers a very satisfactory profit. I do not think that they do sell any very large amount of their product away from home at substantially less than they sell their products at home.

Mr. REED. I know that is the view of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SMOOT. But it is not——

Mr. REED. But I was trying to learn the views of the Senator from Utah, because I regard the Senator from Utah as the real spokesman on the Republican side of the Chamber upon this and other important matters.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not claim that distinction.

Mr. REED. No; but we grant it gladly. Does he now stand in the Senate and admit it is true that American manufacturers of steel do sell a considerable portion of their product abroad for less than it costs to produce it?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will take out "considerable" I will agree to the statement just made, and I have already stated to the Senate why it was done.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator accept the word "substantial" in lieu of the word "considerable"?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will not accept it, because it is only a small amount of the total produced in this country.

Mr. REED. Did I not understand the Senator to say that they sold it abroad to keep their mills going?

Mr. SMOOT. They do.

Mr. REED. And if they do, then is it not a substantial amount?

Mr. SMOOT. It may be a ton, a thousand tons, or a million tons.

Mr. REED. The Senator does not mean to say that one ton of steel——

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not. I mentioned one in a comparative way and now withdraw it.

Mr. REED. Would keep the mills running, and if they do not sell that the mills would close. Neither would he say that 1,000 tons would do it or 10,000 tons would do it or 100,000 tons, speaking seriously, and the Senator always seeks to be accurate in his statements.

Mr. SMOOT. I said offhand a "ton," but I will say to the Senator a million tons.

Mr. REED. Then we have gotten to the point where the manufacturers will sell 10 per cent of their exports below the cost of production.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand they do sell a part of it below the cost of production. We will let the record speak for itself as to the amount.

Mr. REED. If they sell abroad below the cost of production, somebody has to make up that loss.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; Mr. President——

Mr. REED. And is not that necessarily the man who buys the part of the product that is not sent abroad? And does not that result in taxing the American consumer, charging him a higher price than he ought to pay, in order that goods may be sold abroad for less than their cost?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator certainly has not been in the Chamber or has not listened to what I had to say, or he would not expect me to go over that ground again.

Mr. REED. I am asking the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. Let me tell the Senator one thing.

Mr. REED. I am asking the Senator to give me a concrete answer.

Mr. SMOOT. I will.

Mr. REED. Does not that result in higher prices being paid by the American consumers, who have been taxed for 50 years to protect these concerns?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it does not; and if the Senator will give me his attention for a moment I will tell him why.

Mr. REED. I will be glad to.

Mr. SMOOT. If he will he will not ask the question again.

Mr. REED. If the Senator can evolve a theory that fits those facts, and does not take the money out of some one's pockets, and if it is not our pockets, in the last analysis, I shall regard him as having performed the greatest intellectual feat of this century.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will try and satisfy the Senator. As I have said to the Senate before, the only way to produce steel rails or the products of steel of all kinds is to keep the mill running full time. It costs just as much for labor at the blast furnaces, the overhead charges, yearly salaries, interest, and the taxes upon the property to produce 500 tons per day as it would 2,000 tons per day. Now, can not the Senator see that if the company did not have a market to take the 2,000 tons, daily production, and only had a market to take 1,500 tons, that it would cost more per ton to produce the 1,500 tons than it would the 2,000 tons, and therefore the American consumer is not compelled to pay a higher price for what he buys on account of selling goods abroad at cost, but on the contrary ought to buy them for less; and not only ought he to but he does, and every laboring man employed in the mill receives the advantage of continuous employment.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator kindly figure out how much money a mill makes by selling out of a total production of 10,000,000 tons 2,000,000 tons at a loss of $2 a ton.

Mr. SMOOT. In making that 2,000,000 tons, if sold at a loss, there no doubt would be 40,000,000 tons more made, and the amount that would be made on the 40,000,000 tons, by running the mill to its fullest capacity, would not only make up what was lost on the 2,000,000 tons, but many, many times over; and I should think the Senator could see that.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator pardon one more question? Does the Senator think there would be anything morally wrong in their cutting that price on steel to the American consumer and letting him have the benefit of it instead of giving it to the foreigner?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know but that they do sell it for less to the consumer in this country. In fact, competition has been so keen, according to the testimony, that they have been compelled to.

Mr. REED. They have lost considerable money? I think I had better call on the Senator from Iowa to now prompt the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator needs to call on some one.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not been able to hear the entire argument of the Senator from Utah. I will ask the Senator if he concedes that 2,000,000 tons of steel were sold abroad at less than cost?

Mr. SMOOT. No. That is the example the Senator brought up. It was a hypothetical question.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will turn to the report of the Industrial Commission, published some years ago, I think in volume 17, he will find that that commission, after a very exhaustive research, came to the conclusion that between 1 and 2 per cent of our products were sold abroad at less than in this country.

Mr. SMOOT. That is approximately what I stated, though I did not give the exact figures.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will refer to a document which I had printed some two or three years ago, I think, having called on the Secretary of State to ascertain, through the United States consular officers, what the practice was on the part of the countries with respect to selling abroad at a less rate than the domestic price, he will find that the reports show that there is scarcely a country in the world that does not make an export price less than the domestic price for their surplus products.

Mr. REED. The Senator is speaking more in answer to my inquiry than perhaps in regard to the remarks of the Senator from Utah. I take it that the real burden of his remarks are to this effect, that as other countries sell their surplus abroad for less than they sell it at home, that justifies this country in going abroad to meet that competition.

Mr. GALLINGER. If there is not a demand on the part of our citizens for that surplus, I think they should do that.

Mr. REED. Then the situation comes to this: European countries—let us say England and Germany for illustration—can ship to South American countries, sell for less than it costs to produce, and this country can sell in Europe for less than what it costs, and the citizens of Europe and South America get the benefit of the extremely low prices, but when you undertake to bring in the steel from England—a part of its surplus—and to sell it here your tariff wall is at a point where no man can bring it in and sell it so that our people can get the benefit.

Mr. GALLINGER. We meet the same condition exactly in England. We run against a tariff wall in Germany higher than ours.

Mr. REED. Every nation in the world gets the benefit of this process, and we bar ourselves from the effects of competition and low prices, and a tariff is put on to protect those gentlemen from the very competition they meet elsewhere.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not agree to that at all. It is a mere moiety that is sold abroad, and the question whether any of it is sold at less than cost——

Mr. REED. The Senator was not here when the Senator from Utah conceded that it was done in order to keep their mills running and that it amounted to a large sum.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to again inform the Senator from Missouri that not only does Germany have a protective tariff wall, but in order to secure the trade of the world she pays a bounty upon the export of steel products.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. In England the same thing is true.

Mr. BACON. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, because he has been interrupted so much, but right on the line, I should like to ask him a question or two.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Senator to take the position that the sale of steel rails, coming down to that specific article in foreign countries at less price than they are sold at in the United States, is an exceptional affair, or on the other hand is it true that there are regular quotations at the mills of one price for the domestic consumer and another for the export trade?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question but that prices in Germany——

Mr. BACON. I am not talking about Germany. I am talking about the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I think where American manufacturers are compelled to export, in many cases they are compelled to quote lower prices for exportation than for the market in this country.

Mr. BACON. The Senator misapprehends my question.

Mr. SMOOT. Possibly.

Mr. BACON. I understood from the colloquy which the Senator had with the Senator from Missouri and others that the proposition is this: That the occasions upon which steel rails are sold at a less price abroad than they are sold at home are exceptional, and that it is necessary to do so in order to keep the mills running, but it does not relate to the regular prices of rails sold by producers in the United States to foreign consumers. I do not know whether I make myself clear. I understand the Senator to mean this: That the occasions upon which the producers of steel rails in this country sold their steel rails at a less price to foreign consumers than they sold to American consumers were exceptional; in other words, it was not the rule, but that it was done only upon occasions to keep the mills running.

Now, the question I ask the Senator, if he made that statement which I understood to be his statement, is it not true that there are two regular quotations at the mills in this country, one price for the domestic consumer and a much lower price for materials that are to be sold for export.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course if the demand for steel rails in this country was such that it would take the full product of all the mills, there would be no steel rails exported, and the price would be the same.

In answer to the other question which the Senator asked, as to whether——

Mr. BACON. I do not think that is any answer to either question that I asked.

Mr. SMOOT. In connection with it, then, I will say I have never heard it testified to, nor do I believe it to be a fact, that the regular quotations of the manufacturers of this country are one price for this country and another price for a foreign country, but such quotations are made only in exceptional cases, as stated by the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Now, I want to ask the Senator this question. Does the Senator know that there has been any change in the rule in that regard in the last eight years. In other words, has there been any change in the policy in that matter?

Mr. SMOOT. There were three or four of the independent manufacturers, and by the way none but independent manufacturers appeared before the committee, who testified that there was no such thing as two prices, one for this country and one for foreign trade, but no one who testified as to when the change was made or whether there had been such a practice in the past.

Mr. BACON. Now, will the Senator permit me not simply to put in the RECORD, but to have read to the Senate two letters, one from the president of a railroad company and the other from the general manager of another railroad company, in which the explicit statement is made and the narration given of the circumstances in their own experience upon which that statement is based. Will the Senator permit me to have that read?

Mr. SMOOT. I would rather have the Senator read them in the RECORD in his own time and his own speech.

Mr. BACON. I do not now offer to do it, because I would not impose them on the Senator. That I will do hereafter in order that he may not be unduly interrupted. I will state to the Senator that I have those two letters, one from the president of a railroad company, in which he narrates that he was a president of a railroad which lay partly in the United States and partly in Mexico, and how it was that the regular quotations to him were such that it cost him $5 a ton more for rails bought to be laid in the United States than it did for rails bought the same day to be laid in continuation of the line in Mexico; and in the other the general manager of the other company gives his experience, in which he attempted to buy rails for his road where a certain price was quoted to him, and where he attempted to get a lower price without stating where he was to ship them, or rather without stating that he was to use them in the United States, and where he had been compelled to pay $5 more for rails to be laid in the United States than he would have had to pay from the same mill if he was going to ship them in South America. I will put those letters in later.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am interested very much in that statement. May I ask the Senator from Georgia about the date of the letters?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUMMINS. Are they recent?

Mr. BACON. That is the reason why I asked the question. The letters were written eight years ago.

Mr. CUMMINS. How long ago?

Mr. BACON. In 1904. At that time we were selling rails in Mexico for $10 a ton less than we were selling them at home regularly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know; that may have been one of the exceptional cases the Senator from Utah speaks of; but the letter I have from the Boston railroad, of which I have spoken, figured out in the different prices quoted that the difference was about $5 a ton as a regular thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know nothing of this particular case. I know that in England and in Germany, when rails are being exported, in many cases the purchaser is required to execute a contract assuring the syndicate that the goods exported will not be shipped back into England or Germany, or the country from which they were shipped.

I can not say as to what the manufacturers of this country eight years ago were compelled to do to secure the Mexican business, or what may have been the system at that time, but I know that the testimony shows that to-day there is no such system being practiced.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the whole situation has changed in the last 8 or 10 years with regard to our prices abroad. The truth is that at this time, if the order is a large one at all, the agent of the manufacturer has visited the country in which the rails were to be used and has entered into a contract for the manufacture and delivery of the rails. Of course, he gets all he can get—sometimes the full price in America; sometimes being compelled to sell below the price here. The rails are not a part of an undesigned surplus. The rails are manufactured after the order is given. That is true of nearly all large orders of steel rails.

This notion of sending abroad a surplus that has accumulated because business happens to be depressed at home is purely fanciful. All these articles are manufactured after the order has been given, and if the order had not been given they would never have been manufactured.

Now, if the Senator will pardon me one single remark more——

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to answer that, and then I will yield to the Senator. The Senator may think the notion is fanciful, and that those are the regular orders of the trade, but he must admit if the $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 were not exported, the mills could not run in this country to their full capacity.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do more than that. I admit if we had not a large exportation the mills would not have been built. The mills were built for the purpose of furnishing the countries across the sea with a certain amount of our product.

The only quarrel I have with the Senator from Utah is that he seems to see this sort of situation, that we have a certain capacity for manufacturing, for supplying the needs of our own country; a period of depression comes, a surplus accumulates, and because it is cheaper to operate the plant at or about its full capacity, therefore we ought to be permitted to sell that surplus abroad that is not taken by reason of the depression at home for any price that we can get for it.

That is true. That is a perfectly sound proposition. But when the manufacturer looks over his own country and the world, too, and comes to the conclusion that he can supply a certain output or supply a certain demand and constructs his factory with reference to that demand, foreign as well as domestic, then it becomes, as it seems to me, exceedingly illogical to claim that it is either good business or good morals for him to run his factory for the foreign trade in order to produce cheaper for the domestic trade. That is the only difference I have with the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know where the Senator gets his information. I know that the men before the committee did not make any such statement, that they were building and increasing their plant for the purpose of securing the foreign trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. You made no inquiry of them. Everybody knows they had increased their capacity. The United States Steel Corporation has invested $500,000,000 since it was organized in increasing its capacity and has made it out of the earnings of the company. Jones and Laughlin have increased their capacity——

Mr. OLIVER. Jones and Laughlin testified before the Finance Committee that they did not export.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well, they do not need to export; but they have increased their capacity and they have increased their output, and that is true of every steel company of considerable proportions in the United States. They have all increased their capacity in the last eight or nine years.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the American factories will continue increasing——

Mr. CUMMINS. So do I.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. REED. In connection with the statement made by the Senator from Iowa, I noticed yesterday in reading the trade reports in a large number of papers, particularly those from Pittsburgh, the statement contained in all was to the effect that the demand for steel has increased so that the mills are now compelled to work to their utmost capacity.

Mr. SMOOT. I also have a report this morning showing the net earnings of all the corporations of our country, showing $115,500,000 less in the earnings of the corporations for 1911 than they were the preceding year.

Mr. REED. I am speaking about orders now on the books.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be true of one particular company. One firm may have large orders now, but the general industry as a whole is not booming as the Senator would intimate.

Mr. REED. I want simply to be clear. I do not know whether the general industry is booming or not. I am not a spokesman for the steel industries of this country. I simply make the statement contained in several of the papers yesterday, and notably in the Pittsburgh papers, that the orders for steel rails were such now that they were going to be worked to their utmost capacity.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope that is true, Mr. President, because I want to see them working to their utmost capacity.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. The remark I wish to make is that if it be true that the larger part of the steel rails exported are sold at the same price they are sold in the United States, it seems to me the conclusion is very irresistible that they can compete with the foreign producer in spite of the fact that they have to make these prices at home.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to reply to the query of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Georgia must remember that a great proportion of our exports are into Canada. We are able to compete even with the British manufacturer with his differential in Canada on account of freight rates. We have the benefit, of course, of proximity, of immediate deliveries. We can sell for a very much lower price because, first, we can get immediate delivery in response to their orders, and secondly, we can utilize the Great Lakes to a greater extent than they can, and we can therefore supply the Canadian northwest as against Germany or Great Britain and still have the regular American price.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if we can compete in Canada then why can we not compete in the United States?

Mr. McCUMBER. For the same reason that we can not take rails to San Francisco and compete with Germany, because water transportation is very much cheaper and we have the advantage of the water transportation. The British merchant must unload in the eastern sections and send by rail, and the expenses are so great that we can beat him there.

Mr. REED. Then it comes to this; that we have to ship steel rails, say a thousand miles into Canada by railroad; you can there meet English competition, but you can not meet English competition at the door of your own factory, and you have got to be protected.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I very much prefer to go on if there is no objection on the part of the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I rose to say just a word.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] to make the point that we are unable to compete with the Canadian markets, notwithstanding there is a differential in favor of England of 35 per cent, because of a freight-rate advantage. I think that is the statement of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Freight rates, proximity, and immediate delivery.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, we would seem to have no advantage in freight rates as against England and Germany in Mexico, and yet we are importing to Mexico several times more steel rails than England is importing to Mexico.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Dakota referred to the fact that quite an amount of our exportations of steel rails go into Canada. The question of freight is quite an advantage when shipping to Canada.

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. It is somewhat similar as to South America.

Mr. SIMMONS. There we compete, notwithstanding there is no advantage in freight rates in our favor, and the tariff conditions are exactly the same. We sell more of the products, not only steel rails but the general products of iron and steel and the manufactures thereof in Mexico than England does or Germany does, and if we can go to one of the neutral markets where freight rates are alike, where tariff rates are alike, and there compete with them, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] says, why, in the name of Heaven, can we not compete with them in our own market?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no need of my going over that question again. It has been thrashed over three or four times during this discussion. I think Senators pretty well understand it. It is not a question altogether as to what rails cost; it is a question of getting a market. That is what manufacturers have done in the past and what they will continue to do, if necessary to keep their mills running.

Mr. Pepper's report shows that the cost in the Luxemburg district, Germany, is $11.42 for pig iron and $17.13 for steel. I again call attention to the fact that that cost price is in the Luxemburg district, Germany, and he says the average estimate was $11.42 for pig iron.

Mr. Pepper, speaking of the general average price of pig iron, says it is agreed that pig iron in the Cleveland district has been made at a net cost of $8 per ton by some of the companies controlling collieries as well as ore mines and have exceptional facilities for production.

I want Senators to keep in mind those figures, because if they will take the $14.01 that Herbert Knox Smith says it costs to produce pig iron in this country, and the testimony of Mr. Schwab that it costs $14, and deduct the $11.42 from the Smith cost, it leaves $2.59. The present rate on pig iron is $2.50.

Mr. President, there has been a good deal said in relation to the intercompany profits in this country, Senators stating, or intimating at least, that that class of profits was not taken into consideration in arriving at the cost in England and Germany.

Let us see whether that is the case or not. Herbert Knox Smith at page 13 makes this statement:

The bureau deducted these intermediate "transfer" profits for all the important simpler products. The resulting "revised cost" must, however, be handled with great caution. The margin between this revised cost and the selling price is, of course, much larger than the margin over the "book cost."

We have the American book cost, for Herbert Knox Smith had authority to examine by himself or his representatives every concern in the United States. The companies books were opened to them and the report gave the absolute book cost, giving the detail cost of every item of every description that entered into the cost of production of pig iron.

The report continues—that larger margin must cover all the stages of production, and therefore a much larger investment. The profit above the "book cost" of a subsidiary is to be applied simply to the investment of that company. On the other hand, the profit above the revised cost of an integrated company, carrying through many stages of production, must be set against that entire investment.

And again, it was contended that there had been a great reduction in freight rates amounting to 70 cents a ton since the report of Herbert Knox Smith, and that should be deducted from cost as reported by him. Let us see what Herbert Knox Smith says on this subject:

Another fact of great importance in considering the present costs of Lake ore, as well as the probable costs for the next few years, as distinguished from the comparison for the two periods covered by the foregoing table, is found in the recent change made in the rail rates on ore from the Mesabi and Vermilion Ranges. During the latter part of 1911 (and since the publication of the first part of this report) the Steel Corporation announced reductions in the rail rates for the Mesabi and Vermilion Ranges as follows: The Mesabi rate was reduced from $0.80 per gross ton to $0.60 per gross ton, and the several Vermilion rates of $0.90 and $1 per gross ton were reduced to a flat rate of $0.60 per gross ton. Just what effect these reductions will have on the cost of ore at lower Lake ports depends, of course, on the particular tonnages shipped from each range. For the mines whose costs for the period 1907 to 1910 are comprised in the foregoing table (Table 19) the reduction in average freight rate would be about $0.17 per ton, and this would result in a reduction in the average cost at lower Lake ports of an equal amount per ton. Taking the average book costs of the period 1907 to 1910 as a basis, the cost of ore at lower Lake ports would be reduced thereby from $2.70 per ton to $2.53, and this ore cost would be $0.05 per ton lower than the average cost for the period 1902 to 1906, namely $2.58 per ton.

That is what Herbert Knox Smith reports in relation to the reduction of rates.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to make a correction of what I said a moment ago?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I was stating from memory in regard to the letters when I said the difference was $5 between the cost quoted for rails to be used in the United States and the cost quoted for rails to be used in other countries. I was mistaken. It is $9 difference; not $5. I have just looked over the letter. It is $9 more at the same mills for parties who wish rails to be laid in the United States than they would be sold to the same parties if they were going to ship them to Honduras.

Mr. SMOOT. That would depend entirely upon the price required to secure the order at Honduras. To-day there could not be that wide difference between a foreign price and local price. The market price is generally known to-day.

Mr. BACON. What is the market price now?

Mr. SMOOT. The market price to-day is about $28.

Mr. BACON. Very well. The market price then was $29. That was the domestic price, and it was $20 for the same article at the same mill on the same day to the same purchasers if they were going to ship to Honduras.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case the rails were sold below cost.

Let us take the figures now of the cost of steel rails shown by Herbert Knox Smith on page 30 of his report, viz, $22.23, and accepted by the Senator from Iowa as being correct, and I am perfectly willing to accept the same. Then take the report of the cost on pig iron, as shown by Mr. Pepper, $11.42. The difference between the cost of rails in this country and the cost of pig iron is $8.22, the American conversion cost. Then take $11.42, the Luxemburg cost of pig iron, and add a conversion cost of $8.22. You get $19.64 as the cost in Germany of the steel rails, providing the conversion cost is no greater in Germany than in this country. Deduct that from $22.23—the American cost—and you have a difference of $2.59.

Mr. President, I do not wish at this time to go into the question of cost further than this, but will refer to the cost of labor required to make pig iron and bar iron from the iron ore to the finished product.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall interrupt as rarely as possible, but I do not want the Senator from Utah to understand or to say that I admit the total cost of steel rails is $22.23.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I am mistaken, because I thought the Senator accepted the figures of Herbert Knox Smith, and Herbert Knox Smith reports that——

Mr. CUMMINS. Herbert Knox Smith does not give that as the cost of steel rails.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us see if he does not.

Mr. CUMMINS. The mill cost is $20.97.

Mr. SMOOT. That is outside of the intercompany cost.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, the mill cost, including the intercompany profits, is $20.97 per ton. The way the Senator from Utah gets the $22.23 is by adding $1.26 a ton, which is put in a column called additional costs.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator to state what constitutes the additional cost.

Mr. CUMMINS. And those costs are not in the corresponding table of the English production.

Mr. SMOOT. How does the Senator know they are not?

Mr. CUMMINS. Because it says they are not.

Mr. SMOOT. The Pepper report does not say so.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. Here is what the report says as to cost of pig iron and steel in the Luxemburg district: "$11.42 for pig iron and $17.13 for steel." There is not a word said that the additional costs spoken of by the Senator are not included in these costs.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Utah by a running debate, but I assert it is easily proven, plainly observant, from the mere reading of Mr. Pepper's report that these additional costs of $1.26 are not in his calculation as to the cost of steel rails.

Mr. SMOOT. The costs that Mr. Pepper gives are from certain trade journals. I want to say that if the additional costs to which the Senator refers were not made a part of the cost, the company not taking them into consideration would go into bankruptcy very soon. They are just as much a part of the costs as the purchase price of the iron ore.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree to that, Mr. President, and therefore I add $1.20 to the English cost table as given there.

Mr. SMOOT. The report gives the cost, and it does not contain a word as to whether there is any part of the reported cost not accounted for. If we are to arrive at the cost, every item of cost must be considered, whether it be labor, or materials, or expenses, such as interest, overhead charges, depreciation, and so forth. Those are all elements in the cost of producing a finished product.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Mr. President, suppose they are—although I have not said so and do not agree to it—then the cost in the United States is $22.23 a ton, and the cost in England is $23.35 a ton. Where does the Senator from Utah find in that any cause that we need to protect it by a duty of $3.93 per ton?

Mr. SMOOT. I have said, Mr. President, that Mr. Pepper states that it cost $11.42 for pig iron; add to that $8.22, the American cost of conversion, and that makes $19.64. The Senator, himself, from his own figures, will see that the conversion cost is not more than $8.22.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah reminds me of the attempt of a famous orator from Maine to divide a verse of Scripture. I will not repeat that incident, but if the Senator from Utah will simply examine on page 10 he will find that the cost of pig iron in England, according to Mr. Pepper, is $13.35, and the cost of the steel ingots is $18.49, while the cost of steel rails is $23.35.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not comparing, as the Senator from Iowa is doing, the low cost in this country with the high cost in England, nor am I going to take the low cost in the foreign country and compare it with the high cost in this country and say that that is the difference between producing goods in this country and abroad.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not say that, but the Senator from Utah will certainly have to take the cost of the pig iron out of which steel rails can possibly be made. He is taking up, if I understand him right now, the cost of pig iron in England out of which steel rails never have been made, and, although I am not an expert, I believe never can be made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not speaking of English steel rails; I am taking the cost in the Luxemburg district, as stated by Mr. Pepper in his report, viz, $11.42; and the Senator knows that the Luxemburg district produces pig iron from which steel rails are made.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know that there is a pig iron made in the Luxemburg district out of which steel rails can be made, but the only place in which Mr. Pepper refers to the cost of steel rails is on page 10 of his report, and it is the cost in England to which he refers; and he gives that cost as $23.35.

He is either right or wrong, and I should like to know from the Senator from Utah whether he believes that Mr. Pepper is right or wrong with regard to that statement.

Mr. SMOOT. The trouble with the Senator from Iowa is that he is quoting the highest prices given by Mr. Pepper in his report on the British iron and steel industry, and I now call his attention to Mr. Pepper's report on the German iron and steel industry——

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. And I am quoting figures given by Mr. Pepper in his report on the German iron and steel industry.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not in my discussion refer to that report, but I am perfectly willing to do so. However, what I should like to ask the Senator from Utah is, whether he accepts with equal confidence Mr. Pepper's report with regard to the cost of steel rails in England?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not do that for the purpose of comparison because of the very fact that Mr. Pepper, as well as Herbert Knox Smith, states that it is impossible to get the actual book cost.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose, then, it is just as impossible to get it in Germany as it is in England?

Mr. SMOOT. It is just the same, and therefore, so far as the report is concerned——

Mr. CUMMINS. Therefore the Senator from Utah accepts Mr. Pepper when he testifies according to the Senator's liking, but repudiates him when he testifies in an opposite way.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I do not want the Senator to put me in that attitude, nor am I going to be placed there, either, without giving the reasons for the statements I have made as to the cost of production in Germany, as shown by the Pepper report. I do not claim the figures I have given are the actual book cost of pig iron or steel rails, but used the cost as reported by Mr. Pepper as a basis; but I do not believe that the reported cost in the Pepper report is absolutely correct nor does Mr. Pepper believe so himself. We all accept the cost price as reported for this country, because it is the actual book cost.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does he think it is too high or too low?

Mr. SMOOT. He has not said, and therefore we can not tell.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is quite as likely, then, as I assume, that the cost of the item is too low as that it is too high.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not very likely. The foreigner knew the information was being secured for the purpose of making an American tariff, and it would be unreasonable to suppose he would place his cost below the actual cost of production. I would hazard a guess that it would be as high as he thought it would be believed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; he went there for the purpose of getting information upon which the committee in 1909 could act.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. That committee was not noted for its desire to reduce the duties, as I remember.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we did reduce the duty on steel rails and many other of the steel products 50 per cent.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. I merely want to ask the Senator from Utah a question for information.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Missouri may ask me a question if he desires.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, and, if he will permit me, to ask the Senator from Iowa, whether they are both now agreed that this report of Mr. Pepper's which both of them have quoted is utterly unreliable?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say it was utterly unreliable. I said it was the best information that Mr. Pepper could secure from the sources at his command; but it is not the actual book cost, and no one can get that cost from the foreign manufacturer, in my opinion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that it is entirely unreliable both as to England and as to Germany, but I accept it as the very best evidence we have, and I know of no reason for discrediting it in any respect.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor was I trying to discredit it, but was using the figures for comparison, knowing they were the best we had at our command.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to proceed if there is no special——

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, if the Senator does not care to be interrupted, I will not interrupt him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply want to ask the Senator, as a matter of information in connection with the figures he gave awhile ago, if he had considered the table in the report of the Bureau of Corporations, on page 66, which is headed as follows:

Table 16. Average book cost per gross ton of heavy Bessemer rails, and cost excluding transfer profits for all companies, 1902–1906.

That shows the total book cost of heavy Bessemer steel rails at $21.27. Excluding transfer profits, it shows the cost of heavy Bessemer rails at $18.80.

Mr. SMOOT. But the report also gives the following information:

The following table gives the book costs of heavy Bessemer rails, and the same costs after the elimination of antecedent transfer profits.

You might just as well ask what is the cost of steel rails without any overhead charges; what is the cost of steel rails without any interest; what is the cost of steel rails without any charge for depreciation; or what is the cost of steel rails without taking any of the ordinary expenses into consideration or what the mere cost of running the metal through the blast furnace is as to eliminate transfer profits. That is not the kind of cost we are trying to arrive at.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator, in all of these tables where the transfer profits are eliminated, if that does not refer to the accumulated profits that have been added by the company and its subsidiary companies—for instance, profits on mining of the ore, on its transportation, on its conversion into pig iron and that into ingots, and so forth?

Mr. SMOOT. If a company spends $10,000,000 building a railroad for the purpose of hauling its ore, that does not signify that it does not cost the company more than is actually paid out in wages to employees to haul it. It is no reason why the company investing the $10,000,000 should have no return on the investment, and if it did the manufacturer of steel or the Senator from North Carolina would never invest money in that way.

Mr. SIMMONS. But, Mr. President, suppose we take the case of the steel corporation. They own the iron mines and the ore mines; they extract the ores at a certain cost, and they add a profit for that process. They own the railroads which take the steel rails from the upper Lake ports, and they add a profit for that. They own the steamboats that do the carrying from the upper ports to the lower Lake ports, and they add a profit for that transportation. Then they take the ore to the furnace and convert it into pig iron, and they add a profit for that. Then they convert the pig iron into steel rails, and they add another profit for that. The same organization owns all of the instrumentalities of production from the ore in the ground to the finished steel rail, but in getting at the ultimate cost this concern that is the owner of all these instrumentalities and has done the whole work from the beginning to the end adds a profit at every stage, as I understand. I am not making this calculation myself, but Mr. Herbert Knox Smith in making this calculation, taking into consideration the fact that the steel company made a profit at every point, at every stage of integration added a profit, eliminates those various profits in estimating the cost of the finished product. Is not that the process by which he has reached this result, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if you do not consider the interest upon such an investment "cost," and if every expense attached to the manufacture of steel is not "cost," then the price named by the Senator perhaps could be construed as actual cost; but a corporation is not going to put millions and millions of dollars into a property without some assurance of profit. If the United States Steel Corporation is the purchaser of an iron mine, some claim that their iron ore does not cost them more than the actual labor in extracting it. This is a mistake, for every ton of ore that is extracted is lost to them, so far as the value of the mine is concerned. The ore can not be replaced. It is drawing upon the capital and not using dividends.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there is no disagreement between the Senator and myself from his standpoint and from my standpoint. The proposition that I laid down is that Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, in trying to determine what was the cost to the United States Steel Corporation and to the larger steel corporations that own the ore, the factories, and the furnaces which take the ore and convert it into steel rails, did not allow for any profit in any of the intermediate stages of production. Of course, under that process when you come to determine what would be a reasonable profit to allow to the larger corporations which own all of these intermediate agencies of production, you would have to consider the capital invested in iron ore, in boats, in railroads, and blast furnaces, as well as in the plant which finally converts it into steel rails. All I was calling the Senator's attention to was the fact that Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, following these processes in ascertaining the cost of producing steel rails, had reached the conclusion that the actual cost of producing steel rails, eliminating all profits, was $18.80.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all the independent companies in this country do not own iron mines; they do not own railroads; they do not own boats to transfer the ore; and we are not making a tariff bill to protect the United States Steel Corporation alone. We are making a tariff bill——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that the United States Steel Corporation does not own any railroads or any mines?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I said all the independent companies do not. The United States Steel Corporation does, of course.

Mr. NELSON. They own railroads, mines, and everything else, except the grace of God.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator refers to the United States Steel Co. I was speaking of the independent companies. It has been stated time and time again that the United States Steel Corporation could make steel rails cheaper than can any other company in the United States, but on that account are we going to destroy, by tariff legislation, the independent manufacturers of this country? The representatives of the United States Steel Corporation did not come near our committee during the hearings and did not give a word of testimony. Those who were affected most by this bill were the independent manufacturers of this country; they were the ones who testified before the committee.

Mr. President, I was going to discuss the question of pools and syndicates in foreign countries, as reported by Mr. Pepper, showing how they handle this business, but I see that the time is fast passing, and I have not even started upon the discussion of the different paragraphs. Therefore I shall allow the remarks I made on Friday last on this question to suffice and ask the privilege of putting into my speech the statement made as to the pools and syndicates, not only in Germany but in England, by Charles M. Pepper in his report upon the steel industry of those two countries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From report of Charles M. Pepper on the German iron and steel industry, found in H. Doc. No. 1353, 60th Cong., 2d sess.]

TRUSTS AND SYNDICATES.

The influence of the combinations, which are variously described as trusts, syndicates, or kartells, is exhibited very clearly in the different branches of the iron and steel trade. From the first stage, which is the coal in the ground, to the last stage, which is the making of the most highly finished articles, between 75 and 80 syndicates are concerned in the manufacture and sale of iron and steel products. This industry, therefore, furnishes an excellent means of judging how the principle of combination is worked out in the industrial and commercial system of Germany.

OPERATIONS OF THE SYNDICATE SYSTEM.

All the syndicates are governed by statutes of their own making, which, if they have not the force of statute law, at least have the same effect on the organizations for which they are devised. The details of these regulations are rarely made public, but their general nature becomes known through their operation. A common model apparently has served for the majority of them, the adaptation being made to the special circumstances of the particular industries which may be formed into a syndicate.

The A B C of the syndicate system as applied to the iron and steel industry is concentrated in the following group: The coal syndicate, the coke syndicate, by-product syndicates, raw-iron syndicates, and steel-works syndicate.

Coal, which is as much raw material to the iron and steel industry as is the iron ore, is effectually controlled by the Westphalian Coal Syndicate. The coal industry enjoys no protective tariff duties, as do most of the finishing industries. There is, moreover, the competitive supply of the coal fields of the United Kingdom, with easy water transportation to the German ports and to many of the inland points through the river and canal systems. Nevertheless, the Westphalian Coal Syndicate enjoys a substantial monopoly of supplying coal to the iron trade.

ORIGIN OF THE SYSTEM.

The germ of this syndicate was disclosed in 1878, when a number of the leading mines formed a combination to raise prices to a remunerative level by preventing overproduction. This agreement related to the prices of gas coal, and it was supplemented three years later by one for the control of open-burning coal. For several years thereafter various combinations were made for restricting the output, but they were usually local in their sphere, and their efforts to regulate the selling prices were not wholly successful. A stronger organization was the Mine Owners' Syndicate, which was formed in 1891. This, however, went to pieces in the following year during a period of severe industrial depression. It was succeeded by the Coal Group, which had been established as far back as 1880. Out of the two organizations grew the Rhenish-Westphalian Syndicate, which was formed in 1893 and renewed at various periods, the last one being December 31, 1905, when an agreement was reached for 10 years, or until January 1, 1916.

WORKING MACHINERY AND METHODS.

The working machinery of the syndicate is through a stock company with a small capital, whose shares belong to the owners of the coal mines in the combination. Shares can not be transferred except by the consent of the association.

THE POWERFUL STEEL SYNDICATE.

The "Stahlwerks Verband" (steel works union, or steel syndicate), which occupies an intermediate position between the coal syndicate and the manufacturers of finished products, is not directly affected by the raw-iron situation, since its organization extends until June 30, 1912. It can not, however, remain entirely unaffected. The steel syndicate is in many respects the most powerful and the most completely organized of all the groups of affiliated industries. It has 31 members, of whom nearly one-half are in the Dortmund district, and its individual members are known to the trade the world over. Some account of its organization and methods is of general interest. The administration and executive headquarters are at Dusseldorf, where a large staff of accountants and other employees is maintained.

The policy of the association is controlled by the general assembly, which is composed of all the members. There is an administrative council, but the practical work is carried on by an executive committee. The base of the contract among the members—that is, the participation—is for each 1,000 tons of products, which are described in detail. The contract covers all that the members of the syndicate produce of the following articles: (a) Raw steel (ingots); (b) puddle loops; (c) finished products derived from raw steel and puddle loops.

EXPORT POLICY AND BOUNTY.

The export policy of the syndicates is so essential a feature of the whole system that it requires a brief description. The practice appears to be that the bounty is not paid on the consumption of their own products to the different syndicate members, but rather to the consumers; that is, the reduced rates are in the nature of a premium to the buyers. In 1902, when the recovery was beginning from the severe depression which had followed the boom of 1900, the Westphalian Coal Syndicate and its allied combinations and the raw-iron, half-finished iron and steel, and girders industries established a clearing house with headquarters at Dusseldorf for the special purpose of arranging the premiums on exports. The general principle was laid down that the export premium must, as a rule, not exceed the difference between the foreign and the inland prices, with a reduction of 1 per cent of the premium to cover the working expenses. The application of the principle has become very intricate, and it is doubtful if the members themselves fully understand the workings of the Dusseldorf Clearing House. However, they are clear that exports are promoted by granting premiums, and numerous instances are given of the amounts of these premiums.

The payment of the bounties is worked out somewhat as follows: The coal syndicate pays a bounty to the members of the raw-iron syndicates who own no collieries and who as customers help to work off the coal produced; the members of the steel syndicate, who produce no raw material of their own and who purchase from the raw-iron syndicates, in turn become entitled to a bounty from them, and the process is continued through the multifarious finishing industries which are buyers of the half-finished products of the steel syndicate.

During the active period from 1905 to 1908 the maximum bounty paid per ton on coal was 36 cents; on raw iron, exclusive of coal bounty, 60 cents; half finished goods, inclusive of bounty on coal and raw iron, $3.60; girders of all kinds, inclusive of bounty on coal and raw iron, $7.80. These bounties are reduced, discontinued and restored, and modified from time to time according to the state of the home and foreign markets, but the system is too intricate to be followed in all its details.

EFFECT OF THE SYSTEM.

The effect of this export system is, to some extent, a matter of opinion. In substance it is defended on the ground that while foreign sales are frequently made below cost prices they are not below the actual cost, the general average being made up from the total receipts of both the home and the foreign markets. Nevertheless, in some cases, in order to decrease the overproduction, or to protect the foreign market, it is admitted that sales are made below actual cost. Some anomalous instances are shown of the policy, as in the case of semi-manufactured raw material, which is exported and then reimported at a lower price than the home consumer can obtain. In general the objection made by the finishing industries is that by shipping what should be their raw material abroad at lower prices than it is sold for at home, their international competitors are able to build up business at their expense, and that one class of home industries therefore suffers seriously by the policy. In its broad aspect there is no disposition to deny the syndicates the credit for preventing excessive rises during boom periods, and equally for preventing rapid falls in periods of depression. This is called the "leveling process" and is exploited by all the syndicates in justification of their methods. Since the present depression it is pointed out that the fall in the prices of articles not included in the export-bounty arrangement has been far more rapid than with those included, and numerous examples confirm this claim. In further illustration it is cited that the establishments which expected to profit by the demoralization resulting from the impending dissolution of the raw-iron syndicates found their own products reduced in greater proportion.

POPULARITY OF THE SYSTEM.

In spite of a constant stream of criticism and interrogation it can not be said that as a whole the German people are opposed to the system which is so thoroughly a part of their industrial development. Their fondness for minute organization finds full scope in the syndication, and sometimes their ingenuity proves superior to what seems to be insuperable natural possibilities. Generally, it may be said that both Government and people are committed to the policy of securing a proportion of the export trade for all industries, usually one-third. Often the objection to the foreign prices is not that they are lower than home prices, but that the margin is too great.

[From Report of Charles M. Pepper on the British Iron and Steel Industry, found in S. Doc. No. 42, 61st Cong., 1st sess.]

THE HOME MARKET AND POOL INFLUENCE.

The British home market for rails is naturally a small one, there being little new building and the renewals on the existing lines not being excessive. The home trade is also divided through the agency of a pool. This is a very close combination, with headquarters in London and a regular office with expert accountants in charge. The business is managed by a board which is in session all the year, which fixes prices and which makes the allotments to the various companies, so that the railways in buying rails have not the benefit of selection.

When a railroad is in the market for rails, the pool fixes not only the price but the companies by which the deliveries shall be made. A Scotch railway company which was in the market in the beginning of the present year for an order of 27,000 tons had no voice in designating what proportion of the order should go to the different rail mills. The representatives of the companies put their respective claims strenuously before the board, but none of them sought to question the allotment, which was divided among the north of England and Scotch mills. Several years ago the Scotch mills, which were making chiefly girders, saw an economic advantage in turning out rails as well. It was claimed that they could not roll rails at their mills. Some of them, however, began to do it and also to ship the rails abroad, thus disturbing the balance of the International Rail Syndicate. The result was that they were taken into the British Rail Pool and now have their allotment in all the contracts for Scotland, sharing this with the north of England mills. Allotment is also made them for the export trade. It is understood that the British Rail Pool acts as the intermediary for the smaller mills in their relations with the International Syndicate. The quoted prices of rails since the beginning of 1909 has been £5 5s. to £5 10s. ($25.55 to $26.76) per ton.

COMBINATIONS AND POOLS.

Besides the rail pool there are combinations in other branches of the British iron and steel industry for both the home and the foreign market. The Scotch manufacturers have taken the lead in making these agreements, sometimes forcing the English mills to join with them. The situation is accurately described in the annual review of the Scotch iron and steel industry for 1908 by a leading trade journal, The Iron and Coal Trades Review, January 1, 1909, as follows:

"The course of prices during the year has been downward, but the fall was more pronounced for export than for home business. This is accounted for by the combine system, which controls prices for the home market. The whole of this free-trade country is honeycombed with combines, and these include most branches of the iron, steel, and metal trades. The late severe depression has tested these combines, and in some cases they have broken down. The tube makers, for example, are cutting each other's throat at the present time, and, locally, there are rumors that the bar-iron makers are not quite a happy family. The Scotch steel makers have kept well together and, besides, have a working arrangement with their brethren in England. Since trade fell away it was found advisable to curtail production, and this was accomplished by the closing down of one important steel work under subsidy."

Price conventions or trust agreements exist in the galvanized-sheet industries, the Midland marked-bar makers, and other industries. One of the most effectively enforced combinations is that between the south of England and the Scotch makers of steel plates and angles. The Scotch ship-plate makers work as a unit as to prices for both the domestic and the foreign markets, and the home consumers pay the prices which are fixed by the combination according to the varying conditions of the trade. So thorough is this agreement that it is allowed for in the wage agreements which are entered into with the trades-unions. Under the trades-unions' agreements in fixing the sliding scale of wages, the selling price governs, and in relation to ship plates, etc., the adjustment is made on the basis of both the home selling price and the export prices.

In dull times, when the home demand is restricted and foreign business is wanted badly, a difference of $5 on a ton is about the average between home and foreign prices, but sometimes even a greater discount is made to the foreign buyer. An example of the higher prices which the Scotch home consumer pays is given in the following quotation from the commercial columns of the Glasgow Evening Citizen of February 17:

"For export orders competition is excessively keen and prices are severely cut. Proof of this is afforded in the fact that this week a quantity of steel bars (for which the local official rate is £7, less 5 per cent) have been sold by makers at £5 15s. less 5 per cent, or at a drop of 25s. a ton, a transaction that has taken the trade by surprise."

HOME AND FOREIGN PRICES.

As an example, in pipes and tubes, which are also controlled by the combination, a large machinery-importing house on the Continent gets quotations which are below the quotations for the British market, and obligates itself not to ship any of the material back to Great Britain. In transactions of this kind the material, instead of being sold f. o. b. British ports, is sold free Hamburg, or Rotterdam, or Antwerp, as the case may be.

The formation of these trade combinations, both as to home and foreign trade, is growing among the British manufacturers. It is usually described as a "movement toward cooperation." The success of the International Rail Syndicate is cited as the justification for entering into other international syndicates. The subject received wide discussion in September, 1908, on the address of the chairman of the executive committee of the United States Steel Corporation to the British Iron and Steel Institute.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a great deal has been said in relation to dividends which have been paid by the iron and steel manufacturing companies in this country. I want to say that the dividends of the steel companies of the United States are not so high as are those in Germany. For instance, Mr. Pepper says:

The capital stock of the Harpener Co. is 72,200,000 marks ($17,183,600). On this it paid the regular dividend of 4 per cent, with an extra dividend of 7 per cent, or 11 per cent in all, the total dividend payment amounting to 7,942,000 marks ($1,890,196).

The Phoenix Co., which is located at Laar, near the junction of the Rhine and Ruhr Rivers, is engaged in coal mining and the various branches of the iron industry.

Mr. Pepper goes on to tell how much the company produced in coal, and so forth, and says:

The company paid a dividend of 11 per cent, or 11,000,000 marks ($2,618,000).

The Hoesch Iron & Steel Works, of Dortmund, paid a dividend of 14 per cent, or 2,352,000 marks, for the year 1907–8.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Can the Senator state whether the same methods of capitalization apply in Germany that characterize the capitalization of the United States Steel Trust?

Mr. SMOOT. As to the United States Steel Trust, I can not say, but I can say they apply to most of the independent manufacturers in this country.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I suppose the Senator from Utah will concede that the capitalization of the German companies represents the actual capital invested in those enterprises?

Mr. SMOOT. Or capital and increases by way of profits.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Legitimate increases.

Mr. SMOOT. Just the same as is the case with most of the independent companies in this country.

Mr. O'GORMAN. They do not represent inflated and fictitious values, such as have characterized the formation of many of the corporations in the steel industry in this country?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say as to how many, because I do not know, but——

Mr. O'GORMAN. With that concession, the statement now being made by the Senator from Utah as to the relative rate of dividends is not very illuminating or instructive.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, I know that the independent companies, as they have testified before the committee, claim that their capital stock represents actual cash paid in and profits that may have been added. That is exactly the system that is followed in Germany. I am not comparing the dividends of the German companies with the United States Steel Corporation, but I am comparing them with the independent companies in the United States.

The Republican members of the Senate in discussing tariff rates must take into consideration the declaration made upon the tariff question in the Republican national platform adopted at Chicago nearly four years ago. In order that we may know just what that declaration is, I want to read it now, and then follow with a presentation of the facts covering each paragraph, and see whether the proposed rates of duty in the House bill or the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa are in conformity with the declaration of the Republican Party.

In all tariff legislation the true principle of protection is best maintained by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries, * * * the aim and the purpose of the Republican policy being not only to preserve without excessive duties the security against foreign competition to which American manufacturers, farmers, and producers are entitled, but also to maintain the high standard of living of the wageworkers of this country, who are the most direct beneficiaries of the protective system.

I quote from the national platform of the Republican Party adopted in 1908, to which the people of this country overwhelmingly declared their approval.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Do I understand the Senator from Utah to avow his belief now in the doctrine enunciated in the Republican national platform of four years ago, that tariff laws should be enacted to guarantee a profit to men engaged in the manufacturing industries?

Mr. SMOOT. I believe in a tariff that will protect all of the industries of this country, as the platform of 1908 declared.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Will the Senator state why manufacturers should be guaranteed a profit in their enterprises when the millions of Americans engaged in other activities have to meet the competition of the world and are not fortified by a Government guaranty of successful operation?

Mr. SMOOT. There are no industries in this country that are protected by a tariff that does not indirectly benefit every man and woman whom the Senator has in mind.

Mr. O'GORMAN. By raising prices?

Mr. SMOOT. Not by raising prices, but by seeing to it that American workmen are employed in the manufacture of the goods to supply the American market, and in return purchase the products of the field and farm, and of those to whom the Senator has referred to as having no protection.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Who guarantees the profits of the merchant who deals in those commodities, if I may ask the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, that is entirely a different proposition. The merchant can sell either local or foreign made goods and make his profit; the manufacturer can not.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, he has a foreign competitor, has he not, when a man comes to our shores and opens a shop right beside him?

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, if a foreigner does business in this country by opening a shop beside the American merchant, he must pay the same duty upon his goods as the American merchant and must pay taxes, American wages,

American advertising rates, and must abide by the laws of this country.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, he made a very broad statement a moment ago, and I should like to be enlightened in regard to it. The Senator, as I understood him, said that the protective tariff benefited every person—the Senator made no exception whatever—in the United States. Am I correct?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and I think I am correct in that statement.

Mr. BACON. Well, for a good long time, ever since I have taken any interest in public affairs and have had occasion to give some examination to economic questions, it has been a matter of very serious concern in my section of the country that the men—and I will remark in passing that I am referring to the same matter about which I had a colloquy with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] a few days ago——

Mr. SMOOT. That was in regard to cotton?

Mr. BACON. Yes. It is a matter of very serious concern that the man who raises cotton, the producer of cotton, has to pay prices very much increased by a high tariff on every single article which he uses in the production of cotton. All of his farming implements, his plows, his hoes, and all other agricultural tools, all his chains, all of his harness, and every other thing which is necessarily used in the production of cotton, is very much increased in price, and, not only so, but all the clothing which he and his family wear, and everything which they consume outside of that which they raise themselves, and outside of such things as the tariff may not be able to reach, are very much increased in price to him, if not doubled in price—the pocketknife, the scythe blade, every piece of agricultural machinery is raised in price, not in a small degree but tremendously. I happen to know a little about these prices, as I am myself a jacklegged farmer, not a professional farmer, and how they have been increased within the last few years. Now, that is a matter of concern because of the fact that the price of cotton, that which the cotton farmer produces, is not correspondingly raised by the tariff; but, on the contrary, he has to take as payment for what he produces a price which is fixed in the markets of the world and which is not influenced by the tariff. How does the Senator square that condition of affairs with the statement which he has just made?

Mr. SMOOT. I take issue with the Senator in the statement he has made wherein he says that the price of cotton is not influenced by the production of manufactured cotton goods in this country. If the manufacturers of cotton goods in this country were all destroyed or were not allowed to manufacture such goods or could not do so profitably, for no matter what reason, the cotton grower of the South would not get as much for his cotton as he does.

Mr. BACON rose.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator will say that the price of cotton paid the southern grower is made in Liverpool——

Mr. BACON. It undoubtedly is.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a disputed question. If England, Germany, and France had the buying of all the American cotton, with no sale for it in a home market, I do not believe the American grower would receive as high a price for his cotton as he does; no doubt there would be a combination in those countries such as there is in the iron and steel trade, and they would pay to the producer of cotton in the country the price fixed by the combination.

Take the cotton mills of the South, located right at the door of the cotton grower. The grower is paid a higher price for his cotton than he gets in Liverpool. He has an advantage by having the mill at his door, and the fact that the mill is built there is due entirely to the tariff, and if it was not for the tariff, the cotton mills of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia would not be located there to-day.

Mr. BACON. I wish to say a word simply. That is a latter-day contention and absolutely untrue, something never heard of until this matter has gotten into a condition where the interests of the country at large are a little more regarded than they were in former days, when to a considerable extent the public eye was limited in its range to certain parts of the country to the exclusion of others.

Mr. SMOOT. I have never——

Mr. BACON. Such a thing as that the price of cotton is not fixed in the markets of the world is a latter-day contention. The contention, in the first place, that the mills are the result of the protective tariff, which has encouraged their erection, and that for that reason the price of cotton has been raised is as far-fetched an argument as I can conceive of. The Senator knows very well—of course every man who has had any business experience knows—that the supply and demand are the great factors in fixing prices whenever there is no artificial stimulant or barrier. The world consumes the cotton which its needs require, and it takes a certain supply of manufactured cotton to meet the needs and demands of the world; and if there were not a cotton factory in the United States and if the Southern States raised the cotton necessary for the manufacture of the required amount, that cotton would be manufactured elsewhere.

Mr. SMOOT. Providing the people could buy it in this country, and this is one of the greatest markets in the world.

Mr. BACON. Why could they not buy it?

Mr. SMOOT. Close the cotton factories in this country, throwing their employees out of employment and forcing them into some other fields of endeavor, and see what the result would be in this country.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly if you take any existing industry and suddenly throw out those who are employed in it, there would be a great convulsion and a great disaster. But suppose there never had been one and these same people had been engaged in other remunerative industries, as they would have been, would they not have money with which to buy cotton cloth?

Mr. SMOOT. They would not be in this country. They would be in foreign countries.

Mr. BACON. No, Mr. President, this great country with its great resources and rapid development has called upon the adventurous people of the world to aid in the development of this country, half of which has not yet been developed.

Mr. SMOOT. That has all been accomplished, or at least a large part of it, under the protective system. Let me give you a picture of the growth of the United States in figures.

Mr. BACON. All of which I know is due to the Senator and his party for what they have been doing for a half century. It is not due to the resources of the country; it is not due to the activities and industry and perseverance of our people; it is not due to the sunshine or rain or fertile soil or inventive genius or active, untiring work and industry of our people; but it is solely to the fact that we have a protective tariff.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not rather strange, Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will let me conclude.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Georgia in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I say is it not strange for anyone to claim that the tariff has nothing to do with our growth and prosperity when we look back upon the years 1893–1897?

Mr. BACON. Oh——

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment—and compare those years with the four that followed, and we will see that in the latter period the American people saved $450,000,000 and deposited in the savings banks more than they did in the preceding four years.

Mr. BACON. What about 1907?

Mr. SMOOT. I will compare any four years in the history of this country when the Republican Party has been in power with four years of Democratic rule, and I say that the deposits in savings banks have increased more when the Republican Party has been in power than when the Democratic Party was in power.

Mr. BACON. That is a very old story which has been thrashed out in this Chamber a good many times.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator does not like the comparison. Most Democrats do not.

Mr. BACON. I wish to ask the Senator one question. If it be true that with no tariff on cotton, by reason of the fact that we have cotton manufactures, the price of cotton is kept up, why would it not be equally true, if we had free wool, that the price would be kept up by the fact that we had woolen manufactures? Why does the Senator insist on a duty on wool if it be true that the factories in the country are sufficient to keep up the price of it?

Mr. SMOOT. I, myself, believe——

Mr. BACON. I do not wonder the Senator hesitates before replying.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not hesitate. I, myself, believe that if the wool was grown at the door of the mill and manufactured, the same as cotton is grown at the door of the mill in the South, there would be a higher price paid for the wool than the grower would be able to get by selling in a foreign market; but the comparison is not an apt one because the difference between the cost of producing wool in this country and producing it in a foreign country is greater than the cost of producing cotton here and abroad.

Mr. BACON. Yes; but for the Senator to stand here and say that because we have cotton factories in this country it compensates the producer of raw cotton for all the burdens that that tariff lays upon him, in the fact that the general tariff so raises the price of the raw cotton to such a great extent, leads inevitably and irresistibly to the conclusion that if you will apply the same rule to the woolen manufactures that the compensation to the grower of wool would be so great by reason of the fact that we have woolen factories, that that increase in the price of wool would be ample without any tariff to protect the wool.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will let me finish, because I have not quite completed the proposition. Of course I have the floor by his courtesy alone.

Now, the proposition of the Senator is this—and he must go back and apply the whole of it—that the fact of the influence of the general tariff upon other articles so raises the price of raw cotton that it will compensate in the increased price of raw cotton occasioned thereby for all the burdens that the grower of cotton has to bear on the articles he has to consume. That is the proposition of the Senator, because he has said that in its benefits the tariff compensates every man, and that includes the grower of cotton, for the burdens which he has to bear. If that is true, it would be equally true that the producer of raw wool would be fully compensated, even if his product was without a protective tariff, by reason of the fact that the tariff on other articles would so increase the price of wool as to fully compensate him for the burdens which he bears in paying increased prices by reason of the tariff on all the articles he consumes. One must stand by one as well as the other. The Senator says it would be true if wool were at the door of the factory. Wool is as much at the door of the factory as is cotton.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say so.

I call the Senator's attention to this point: He does not take into consideration the fact that in the United States there is more cotton grown than it is possible to use in this country.

Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. SMOOT. And we have to ship the cotton to a foreign country. But that is not the case with wool.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Wait until I get through.

Mr. BACON. It is in order to ask him if I understand him. Do I understand the Senator to say more wool is grown in this country than we can use?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I said there was more cotton raised in the United States than it is possible for the United States to use in her manufactures.

Mr. BACON. That is a different proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. But that is not the case with wool.

Only two-thirds of the wool used by the manufacturers of woolen goods in this country is produced in the United States, and therefore we are compelled to go abroad and purchase wool; and I do not think the Senator will claim that wool can be produced in this country as cheaply as it can be in Australia and South America or in any of the great wool-producing countries of the world.

Mr. BACON. There have been annually between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 bales of cotton produced outside of the United States and produced by the cheapest labor in the world—in India.

Mr. SMOOT. All of which is not as much as the American crop exported every year.

Mr. BACON. Of course not.

Mr. SMOOT. If the time ever comes when the cotton produced in this country is not sufficient to supply the cotton mills of this country and there is cotton raised in the world that competes in price with American cotton, I will be one who will be only too glad to have a duty placed on cotton.

Mr BACON. I do not want to bring the Senator to that conclusion; that is not what I am after.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that is not what the Senator is after.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. But that is my conclusion and that is my position.

Mr. BACON. The Senator would do that, but that does not affect the question which the Senator raised, and of which he made such a strong enunciation—as to the influence on the price of raw cotton of the tariff on the articles which the cotton producer has to consume.

I want to make one other observation to the Senator, but I am afraid I am interrupting him unduly, but it is simply to complete this matter and then I will not interrupt him further: If it were true that the general tariff had the very great influence upon the price of raw cotton which the Senator contends, then it would necessarily be true that the continuance of the protective tariff generally on other articles would steady the price of cotton. The Senator does not say it would be a slight influence. The Senator does not contend that it has a slight influence. His contention is that it is a very great influence, and when the cotton grower has to pay 30 or 50 per cent—more often 50 than 30; sometimes 100 per cent—more for the articles he consumes than he otherwise would have to pay, and when the Senator says that as the result of that he has such an increased price for his cotton as to compensate him for the great burden, the Senator, of course, means that that is a very great compensation.

The point I want to call the attention of the Senator to is this: If it has, as it were, this tremendous influence, and no slight influence, we would not have the great fluctuations in the price of cotton that we have had. The protective tariff on other articles would steady its price. Less than 18 months ago the price of cotton was from 15 to 20 cents a pound and with the same tariff law on the books it is this year down to 7 and 8 cents a pound. Why does not the protective tariff hold up the price of cotton? And with the protective tariff what it is now I have seen cotton go to 4 cents a pound. Why did not the protective tariff hold up the price of cotton like it does the price of steel rails and other articles directly protected?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is entirely mistaken in the statement that the tariff holds up the price of everything that is protected. That is not the case. Supply and demand is a great regulator of prices. It is true that in normal times and under normal conditions the tariff acts as a protection to the American manufacturer.

Mr. BACON. Yet the tariff has kept up the price of steel rails for 10 years at $28 a ton, and even through a panic they were not sold for less.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if steel rails can be made cheaper to-day than 10 years ago.

Mr. BACON. Well, I do not suppose they can be.

Mr. SMOOT. Then why do you expect steel rails to be less in price?

Mr. BACON. And cotton can not be made any cheaper now, when it is selling for 7 or 8 cents, than when it was selling, 18 months ago, at 15 to 20 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. The tariff has not advanced the price of rails. The price of rails in Germany and England is higher than it was 10 years ago.

Mr. BACON. I do not doubt that. But there is no doubt about the fact that the tariff has kept up the price of rails, unless the Senator is ready to assert that steel rails can not be made cheaper in England than they are made here.

Now, the tariff has undoubtedly prevented steel rails from coming into this country. I have not looked up the statistics of the last few years, but I know when we had the tariff debate here three years ago I did look into them, and I remember that our importation of steel rails was an absolutely negligible quantity. Why? Simply because the tariff shut the door and does not permit those who can make them at cheaper rates to bring them into this country. But it shuts no door to the producer of cotton. It compels him to buy the things he consumes in a protected market, while he sells his product in the free markets of the world, and not the market of a protected country.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says the cotton grower pays about 50 per cent more, and in some cases 100 per cent more, for what he consumes than does the foreigner.

Mr. BACON. I did not say that. I did say from 30 to 50 per cent, more often 50 per cent than 30, and sometimes 100 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator said at most times 100 per cent.

Mr. BACON. The Senator can look at the RECORD and see.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us see if your contention is true.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us take what a man wears and eats. Does the southern man pay more for anything he eats than the man in Germany?

Mr. BACON. I believe it is true that he does not, and for two reasons. He eats the same articles, which I will mention in a moment, but he produces largely what he eats, and so far as other articles of food are concerned, which he does not produce, while the advocates of the protective system make the claim that the prices to the agriculturist producing the other articles are enhanced by reason of it, except in rare instances like the present, when there is a shortage in the potato crop——

Mr. SMOOT. Shortage happens in most every kind of crop, even the cotton crop.

Mr. BACON. The tariff had nothing to do with that. The Senator asked me about what these people consumed. I am telling him what they eat is not very much increased by the tariff, because they produce largely what they consume in the way of food, and I do not think the tariff has very much influence on most of their other articles of food. It does have upon certain articles, such as sugar and some other things, the price of which has been very largely increased. But when you come to clothing, its cost, I say, is very nearly double. Of course you can find quotations for articles of clothing which are very cheap, but you take the same things, grade for grade, and quality for quality, and the cost of clothing in this country is about 50 per cent to 100 per cent greater than elsewhere. The blankets under which a man sleeps, and the carpets on his floor, and all the other things essential, not only to luxury but to comparative comfort, have been decidedly increased, and in some instances doubled in price.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us take up the question of cost, item by item, and compare prices paid in America and in Europe. Sugar: The American people buy their sugar cheaper than it is purchased in any civilized country, with the exception of England.

Mr. BACON. I do not want to go off on that.

Mr. SMOOT. I am mentioning the articles the Senator himself mentioned. I will say further that every shoe the American consumer purchases, he buys cheaper than the consumer pays in any other country. The cotton goods he wears, his overalls, shirts, and underwear, are just as cheap in this country as in any other country.

The laboring man in this country can buy a ready-made suit of clothes that will fit him better, look better, and wear as long at as low a price as the foreigner pays for his suit.

The Senator from Georgia can not purchase a tailor-made suit as cheaply. The Senator, if he wishes to get a suit of clothes, has them made to order by a tailor that will charge him $55 for the suit, the cloth in which will net the manufacturer not more than five to six dollars. That same cloth made into a suit by a ready-made-clothing manufacturer would retail to the consumer for not more than $17 to $18, and allowing the retail-clothing merchant a large profit as well. The Senator can purchase a tailor-made suit or overcoat in London cheaper than in America, for the tailor in London does not charge for making them what the tailor in the United States does. The Senator knows this to be a fact. He can do the same in France. The cost of the cloth in a tailor-made suit or overcoat has mighty little to do with the price at which it is sold.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. SMOOT. Let us proceed with other items——

Mr. BACON. Let me say something about clothing before you go to wool.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BACON. The Senator applies the argumentum ad hominem. We all clothe as we—that is, we all wear like grades of cloth——

Mr. SMOOT. I say no.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will not even permit me to complete a sentence.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is going to answer me, I want him to base his statement upon what I did say. I said the cost of clothing was not so much the cost of the cloth as it was the cost of the making.

Mr. BACON. I entirely differ with the Senator. What I want to call his attention to is that under the present system of the protective tariff, as the Senator, I think, will recognize—he speaks of the advantage which comes to those of us in circumstances enabling us to get the best class of goods—if I recollect aright the figures that we had before us three years ago, the tariff on the common article of goods, the tariff on the articles which the common people have to wear, the tariff on the cheaper class of woolens, the tariff on the cheaper class of ready-made clothing, the tariff on the cheaper class of blankets, and everything of that kind which our factories mostly produce, and which the common people use, is very much higher than the tariff on the higher class of goods such as the Senator wears and such as his family uses.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that he certainly has not examined the actual results of the tariff on this class of goods as demonstrated by the report of the Tariff Board. The Tariff Board reports show plainly that the class of cheap goods spoken of by the Senator, with an equivalent ad valorem duty of over 100 per cent and with very few importations into this country, the competition has been so keen between American manufacturers of this class of goods that the price they have been sold at not one-third of the duty imposed by the present law has been taken advantage of.

Mr. BACON. Would not the Senator hold in such a case that the duty was three times as high as was necessary?

Mr. SMOOT. This comes from assessing the duty on the basis of the goods being all wool when they have but little wool in them. The cheap blankets the Senator speaks of, which he says the poor people buy, are not all-wool blankets, and competition in this country is so keen that in many cases mills have failed in trying to make them.

Mr. BACON. Then the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to ask Senators to address the Chair before interrupting.

Mr. BACON. It is my fault.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah is not interrupting. I am perfectly willing to yield at any time to the Senator from Georgia, and if the Senator from Georgia desires to further interrupt me I am not going to object.

Referring again to cheap blankets, if the Senator will examine the price at which the blankets are imported into this country, he will find their appraised value about 24 cents a pound. Are they wool? Everyone knows they are not. There is enough wool in the blanket to make the American people believe they are a wool blanket. It is a deception, and the present law provides that if such goods are imported they must be assessed as all wool.

I do not know whether the present system of levying duties on woolen goods will be changed or not; but if not, I do not think it will make much difference in the cost of cheap blankets to the American people, because the competition between American manufacturers has been so sharp that in the past they have been sold in many cases at actual cost.

Now, I wish to proceed and enumerate other articles the southern planter pays no more for than the foreigner does, and not only that——

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator passes from that——

Mr. SMOOT. When we get to the end of the list we will find that he does not pay for the bulk of what he consumes and wears much more than the laboring man has to pay in England, Germany, and France; this does not apply to luxuries, but to goods used by the laboring people. And what does he get in return? The best market in all the world for his labor and for what he sells.

Mr. BACON. For his cotton?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; for his cotton. It is the best market in all the world for his cotton. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. To buy in and to sell in.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; as the Senator suggests, to buy in and to sell in.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me right there, the idea of the cotton planter being indebted to the protective tariff for a market in which he sells his raw cotton is something that I think the Senator will find it very difficult to convince anyone who has to pay the cost of production and has received the price of his sales.

If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, the Senator went on and I could not of course interrupt him, but I want to say a word in connection with what he said in regard to the low price of articles of clothing, blankets, and so forth, in this country by reason of competition. If there is any such very great benefit coming to the American people as the very low price which he has mentioned, of which I confess I do not think the American people themselves have been very sensible, it is not due to the protective tariff. If it is so that they can sell goods under keen competition at one-third of the amount of the tariff, which I understood to be the statement of the Senator, if they can afford to sell their goods under competition at one-third of the amount of the tariff, then the tariff must be imposed in order to enable them, whenever conditions will permit them to do so, to sell at 300 per cent more than would compensate them in the manufacture and sale of the goods.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is assuming something that is absolutely impossible. As I have stated to the Senate many times, there can not be a trust in the woolen industry. There are over a thousand different mills in the United States, and I tell the Senator now that all those mills are competing for American business, and their success in keeping their mills running depends greatly upon the selling samples they produce in the opening of the heavy-weight or the light-weight season. No two mills make the same line of samples and finish them the same. Therefore, one year a mill may make samples that the trade demands and secure all the orders that it can possibly fill. The next year the samples of the same mill may be a failure on account of pattern and finish. The colors may not blend. The styles may be wrong. One year the mill will be prosperous, the next the reverse.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, I will try not to interrupt him again. I do not say I will not, but I will try not to do so. The Senator is rather provocative of interruptions, but I will endeavor not to interrupt him, because I feel that I have trespassed upon his courtesy fully as much as I would be justified in doing.

I want to say, in leaving the discussion or colloquy, that it is a little surprising to me sometimes how a man forgets certain things. I recollect something the Senator said three years ago that was so very remarkable it astonishes me that I had forgotten it; but I had forgotten it until the Senator repeated it to-day. It is that he believes the protective tariff in regard to the class of goods he was discussing is a humanitarian purpose and that purpose is not to benefit the manufacturers of this country, but to protect the consumers in this country from fraud to be perpetrated by manufacturers in foreign countries.

That was the statement the Senator made three years ago. It is a most astounding one, and it is astonishing to me that I should have forgotten it. I do not think I will ever forget it again.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can put his own construction upon any statement I have made. While I am not going to object to his construing for his own satisfaction any remarks made by me, I want to say that I never made such a statement that it was from a humanitarian standpoint that the tariff upon low-grade goods was imposed.

Mr. BACON. The Senator did not use the word "humanitarian."

Mr. SMOOT. No; of course I did not. Mr. President, it is too big a question to go into at this particular time, but I could tell the Senator exactly the reasons for it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. The Senator has just observed that the United States is the best market in the world, both to buy in and to sell in. He makes that statement in the midst of an argument in which he proved that goods are as cheap here as they are anywhere else and as high everywhere else as they are here.

Mr. SMOOT. We were discussing the question of cotton and what advantages and disadvantages the man has who raises the cotton.

Mr. GORE. The Senator observed that shoes were as high in other countries as they are here; that cotton was as high in other countries as it was here; that clothing was as high in other countries as it was here; and I was just wondering what special advantage there was in the United States which rendered it the best market in the world, both to buy and sell in.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator want me to answer?

Mr. GORE. Yes; I would like to know how you make that discrimination. It is a finer discrimination than I am able to make.

Mr. SMOOT. The articles mentioned by the Senator are not the only ones manufactured in the United States and sold as cheaply as similar goods in foreign countries. Out of the total manufactured products in the United States we consume in this country nearly 93 per cent. These goods are made by American workmen, consumed by American citizens, the happiest, most contented, and most prosperous people upon the face of the earth and——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that if we destroy the protective system there is only one result, a lowering of the American standard of living to that of European countries. I never want to live to see that day, nor do I want my children to live to see the day when the standard of living in America and the wages paid to American workmen will be the same as paid in foreign countries. I do not refer to China or Japan, but to such countries as England, France, and Germany. I noticed a little while ago the French railroad employees struck for an increase of wage from 80 cents to a dollar a day. I hope to God the time never will come when American railroad employees will be compelled to work for even a dollar a day.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. Is that the reason why this is the best market in the world?

Mr. SMOOT. That is one of the reasons, Mr. President, and there are others that I can give to the Senator, if he wants to know.

Mr. GORE. It is true that the railway employees in the United States receive much higher wages than the railway employees in France.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and the employees of every other industry.

Mr. GORE. That is true, protected and unprotected, and the highest wages paid in the United States are in the unprotected industries.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say that the highest wages paid in the United States are in unprotected industries? What are the unprotected industries?

Mr. GORE. As a general rule, I will say. Perhaps there might be several exceptions.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator wants that statement to go to the country.

Mr. GORE. I insist that as a general rule the wages in the unprotected industries in the United States are better than those in the protected industries. Take the cotton mills or the woolen mills or the steel mills. There the wages are not so high as the wages of carpenters, stonecutters, bricklayers, and the empolyees in many other industries in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. What would carpenters and masons and all other laboring men do in this country if they did not have a market for their labor created by a protective tariff? Mr. President, referring to what the Senator said in relation to the wage paid in cotton mills and in woolen mills and the steel industry, I want to say to the Senator that the wages in all of these industries in this country are more than double what they are in any other country in the world.

Mr. GORE. That is entirely true, Mr. President, not only of protected industries but of unprotected industries. I merely make the point that our laborers enjoy comparatively as high wages in the unprotected as in the protected industries when compared with laborers in foreign countries. That is true on the unprotected cotton farms. The wages paid to farm hands in the South are just as high, compared with the wages paid to farm hands in India and in Egypt, as the wages paid in the cotton mills are higher compared with the wages paid to the employees of the cotton mills in France, Germany, and England.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly the Senator must know that the wage paid in protected industries is what keeps up the wage of those who are employed in unprotected industries. Throw them out of employment, take them from the protected industries, and I will assure the Senator that not only their wages, but the wages of everyone employed in the unprotected industries in this country, will fall immediately.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the same argument was made in England when the proposal was made to go from high protection to free trade that is now advanced by the Senator, but it did not work out. Wages have advanced in England during her free-trade policy, and wages are higher in free-trade England than in protected France; they are higher in England than in protected Germany. How does the Senator reconcile that undeniable fact with his contention that high wages in the United States are due to protection?

Mr. SMOOT. The policy of the German Government is to give her people employment by manufacturing goods not only for her own people, but for the world. Germany must, of necessity, find a foreign market for the great bulk of her manufactured goods. She levies duties to prevent the importation of goods that can be made by German manufacturers, but, on the other hand, she is compelled to export more than half of all that she produces and not 3 or 4 per cent, as we do. In order that she may accomplish this, her wage scale must be no higher than the wage scale of the country that she sells to or the country that she becomes a competitor of.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. GORE. The cotton goods and woolen goods and clothing and shoes manufactured and sold by Germans sell as high as those manufactured in this country, do they not?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course their cotton costs them as much as——

Mr. GORE. I mean the finished product.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I can not say that they are all the same. I know the price of ordinary plain cotton goods at the present time is about the same in this country as it is in Germany.

Mr. GORE. Shoes and clothing?

Mr. SMOOT. Shoes, of course. The protective tariff——

Mr. GORE. Protection has really nothing to do with these prices.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, it has. I suppose this country leads all the world, not only in the production of shoes, but it leads all the world as to styles; and if there is no change in the style of shoes made in a foreign country, there is no chance whatever that they will take the American market even with free trade.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator is entirely right on shoes and everything else.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not on everything else, because the Germans to-day lead the world in the styles of manufactured woolens and many other lines of manufacture. She can manufacture cotton goods just as well as they can be manufactured anywhere else in the world, but she does not manufacture shoes equal in style to those made in the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. But she may, after a while.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and especially if she knew our market would be free to her.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. GORE. The point I am getting at is this: If the cost of production is less in Germany, France, and England on cotton goods, shoes, clothing, and woolen goods, how are they able to sell them at as high a price as we are?

Mr. SMOOT. I spoke of plain cotton goods. The American has one advantage in making these to-day. We have in many mills an automatic device for changing the shuttles without stopping the loom not yet introduced into Germany. German manufacturers will adopt this in time. This is only used on looms making plain cloths. The great bulk of cotton goods imported into this country are the finer grades and higher-priced goods, and they are made in France, England, and Germany cheaper than they can be made in this country.

Mr. GORE. This loom will greatly reduce the cost of production both here and abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. It has reduced the cost here and will abroad, when introduced.

In all tariff legislation the true principle of protection is best maintained by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries.

* * * the aim and purpose of the Republican policy being not only to preserve, without excessive duties, that security against foreign competition to which American manufacturers, farmers, and producers are entitled, but also to maintain the high standard of living of the wage earners of this country, who are the most direct beneficiaries of the protective system.

I quote from the national platform of the Republican Party adopted in 1908, when the people of this country overwhelmingly declared their approval of such tariff principles.

According to the Cyclopedia of Political History, by John J. Lalor, American protectionists have more generally favored specific duties, while American free traders have contended for ad valorem duties. This cyclopedia points out that the greatest obstacle in the way of making duties ad valorem is the impossibility of arriving at the proper valuation of the goods to be taxed. In discussing the defects of the ad valorem system this author says:

It can easily be seen how many opportunities there are for fraud; how easily, on the one hand, the Government may lose enormous sums by the carelessness or venality of its officers; how easily, on the other, commerce may be impeded or destroyed by the arbitrariness of the officials. The United States Government loses enormous sums every year by undervaluation. In the case of silk goods it is estimated that the Government loses from 15 to 20 per cent on account of undervaluation, in spite of the most earnest efforts to prevent it. But worse than this loss is the delivering over of trade and commerce to the mercy of a set of officials. To leave an opportunity of arbitrary interference on the part of officials is to introduce into commerce an element which can never be estimated. Even the storms and winds of ocean may be subjected to an estimate of probabilities, but the whims of a bureaucracy defy all attempts at computation. This uncertainty bears hardest on the small importer, for if he gets into trouble with the customs officials he has neither time nor money to carry on the contest. He must make a compromise immediately or be ruined. As a result the man of small capital must disappear from the ranks of importers, as he has, in fact, disappeared in America. There is another objection to the system of ad valorem duties. It prevents even the wholesale dealer from taking full advantage of the fluctuations of trade, for the duties must be paid according to the ruling market price, and even if a merchant has purchased a lot of goods at favorable prices he must pay just as much duty as if he had paid the ordinary price, and he is thus deprived of a part of his gain. In this manner the very foundation of all healthful trade is constantly undermined. If we add to these points two other considerations we shall readily understand why ad valorem duties are gradually disappearing from the tariffs of civilized nations.

The first of these is that we need officials of a much higher grade to administer a system of duties ad valorem than to administer a system of specific duties, and that they must consequently be paid much higher wages. The United States Government must now pay very large salaries to a great number of experts, most of whom could be dispensed with under a system of pure specific duties. The second is that, as the vigor of a system of ad valorem duties depends more completely on the administration, there is always danger that the customhouses of the various cities will vie with each other in leniency in order to attract trade from one port to another. Some charges of this sort have been made in our own country by the officials of one city against those of another.

Mr. R. H. Inglis Palgrave, author of an English Dictionary of Political Economy, also points out the defects of an ad valorem tariff system. Mr. Palgrave says:

At first sight this form of taxation appears the more equitable one. In practice, however, customs duties ad valorem have been found to work out with great inequality, and also to be inconvenient to levy for various reasons, among which are the following: (1) The difficulty of ascertaining correctly the values of the goods charged with the duty; (2) the opening to fraud; (3) the delay and hindrances caused to importers and others.

Mr. Leon Day, in his Dictionnaire des Finaces, says of ad valorem duties as used by the French Government:

The experience which the French customs service had with ad valorem traffic from 1860 to 1880 demonstrated that this system, while it is deductive in theory, is unsatisfactory in practice. More than any other system it encourages frauds because of the difficulty of recognizing inaccuracies in declarations. It robs the treasury, which is deprived of a part of the customs dues; it causes injury to honest merchants whom it involves in litigation, and tends to dishonest competition on the part of unscrupulous traders. It is only advantageous to the fraudulently inclined.

A German authority, the Handwörterbuch der Staatswissenschaften, has this to say of ad valorem duties:

The technical accomplishment of assessment of duties according to the value of the merchandise suffers from great inefficiency. The declarations of the person responsible are not always reliable and the customs authorities only seldom capable to correct their deficiencies. The regulations and other precautionary measures promulgated, as a rule, are ineffective. In order to prevent undervaluation by the owner, officials of the treasury have been authorized, in some cases, to make an addition, usually 10 per cent, to the declared value, as a vorverkaufercht (literally, first sale right) or right of purchase. Also expensive bureaus have been established to ascertain permanent or average market values of merchandise (official values, fluctuating values), or, as a last resort, in doubtful cases persons with expert knowledge on the subject have been requested to value the merchandise. These persons have, however, given their services unwillingly. The expense of these elaborate supervisory bureaus for controlling importations have made it necessary to curtail the number of bureaus and to permit importations at but few places, which gives rise to unhealthy centralization. All these circumstances have made the assessment of ad valorem duties, as a whole, very unpopular, yet recently, at least, they have again been partially adopted.

In regard to the specific system, the Handwörterbuch der Staatswissenschaften says:

Measure or specific duties (weight and piece duties) are assessed according to the measure, weight, or number of pieces of the imported merchandise. They are easier, simpler, and cheaper to collect, cause less burden on commerce, less drudgery and litigation, give less inducement to frauds, and can be easily collected at a great many customs stations.

It is thus to be seen that the tariff authorities have agreed upon the impracticability of a tariff system based exclusively upon ad valorem duties. As I have said before, nearly all the leading nations use specific duties almost entirely, ad valorem duties being resorted to only in certain special cases. These countries are Austria-Hungary, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Mexico, Brazil, and Venezuela. Canada, Japan, and certain South American countries have tariff systems in which ad valorem duties seem to predominate. The Underwood bill would place the United States in the latter group of countries, so far as its tariff system is concerned, if we are now to adopt an ad valorem basis which the foremost commercial nations have discarded.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will yield to me——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire, before moving to proceed to the consideration of executive business, to suggest, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], that it is rather astonishing to me to find any Senator in the year 1912 arguing that the protective policy of the Republican Party is not a benefit to the people of the United States. We had a great many woolen mills in New Hampshire in 1892. We had free wool as a result of a Democratic tariff law, and more than one-half of our woolen mills went out of existence in three years. During those four years of low tariff the laboring men and others in the little State of New Hampshire drew out of our savings banks over $12,000,000 to meet the common necessities of life; and I say it is rather astonishing to me that anybody should argue that the protective policy is not an advantage to all classes of people of this country. But we will discuss that later on.

I now, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, as he is tired——

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield the floor for the day.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PHASES IN POLITICAL SITUATION.

Mr. STONE. I desire to give notice that on to-morrow, Tuesday, following the routine morning business, or at the earliest practical moment thereafter, I will submit some remarks on the modern Damon and Pythias and correlated subjects pertaining to current American politics.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 21, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 20, 1912.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Herbert W. Hawes to be collector of customs for the district of Wiscasset, in the State of Maine.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 20, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the source of life, the fountain of wisdom, the inspiration of all good, renew our life, imbue us plenteously with wisdom, and fill our hearts with purity that we may choose wisely, act nobly, that our work may be well pleasing in Thy sight and redound to the good of mankind. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar day, and suspension of the rules, and so forth.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTION FROM LANDS OF ALLOTTEES OF THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4948) to amend an act approved May 27, 1908, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Who is in charge of this bill? The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act approved May 27, 1908, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes," be amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "This section shall apply to the lands of all deceased allottees who died prior to the passage of this act," so that section 9 of the said act as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That the death of any allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes shall operate to remove all restrictions upon the alienation of said allottee's land——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is quite a long bill, and I ask unanimous consent that we discontinue the reading of the bill until the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] appears. This is his bill, and it is desirable that he be present when the bill is considered.

The SPEAKER. There are only a few more lines, and the reading can be finished now and save trouble hereafter.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

Provided, That no conveyance of any interest of any full-blood Indian heir in such land shall be valid unless approved by the court having jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate of said deceased allottee: Provided further, That if any member of the Five Civilized Tribes of one-half or more Indian blood shall die leaving issue surviving, born since March 4, 1906, the homestead of such deceased allottee shall remain inalienable, unless restrictions against alienation are removed therefrom by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner provided in section 1 hereof, for the use and support of such issue during their life or lives, until April 26, 1931; but if no such issue survive, then such allottee, if an adult, may dispose of his homestead by will free from all restrictions; if this be not done, or in the event the issue hereinbefore provided for die before April 26, 1931, the land shall then descend to the heirs according to the laws of descent and distribution of the State of Oklahoma, free from all restrictions: Provided further, That the provisions of section 23 of the act of April 26, 1906, as amended by this act, are hereby made applicable to all wills executed under this section. This section shall apply to the lands of all deceased allottees who died prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent to pass over this bill informally without prejudice until the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] comes in.

Mr. MANN. I understand that passes it over for the day.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would rather have it passed over to-day than to have it called up in the absence of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER, N. DAK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6160) to allow the Great Northern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River, in the State of North Dakota.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Great Northern Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the mouth of the Little Missouri River, and not farther south than the south line of township 147 north or farther north than the north line of township 148 north, of the fifth principal meridian, in the State of North Dakota, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE YELLOWSTONE RIVER, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6161) to authorize the Great Northern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Yellowstone River, in the county of Dawson, State of Montana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Great Northern Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Yellowstone River, in the county of Dawson and State of Montana, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, and not farther south than the south line of township 21 north of the Montana principal meridian, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 7, by striking out the comma after the word "River," and striking out all of lines 8, 9, and 10, and the words "Montana principal meridian," in line 1, page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "At a point suitable to the interests of navigation, to be selected by the said company and approved by the Secretary of War, either in Mackenzie County, N. Dak., or Dawson County, Mont."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS TO MEXICAN WAR SURVIVORS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14054) to increase the pensions of Mexican War survivors in certain cases.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension to survivors of the Mexican War who are now on the pension roll, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, February 17, 1897, and February 6, 1907, shall be $30 per month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the general pension bill that was recently passed includes the same provisions as are included in this bill, and that being true I do not see any use in passing this bill.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that this bill provides for a pension of $30 per month to Mexican War veterans.

Mr. RUSSELL. And under the bill that has been passed they will get $30 per month.

Mr. MANN. Not unless they were of a certain age and had served two years.

Mr. FOSTER. Not unless they had served 60 days. It says "60 days."

Mr. MANN. I know, but not at $30 a month.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; $30 a month.

Mr. MANN. To Mexican War veterans?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; all Mexican War veterans who have served 60 days will receive $30 a month.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, Mexican soldiers who served 60 days are entitled to $30 a month without reference to age.

Mr. GARNER. That is under the general bill, which applies equally to the veterans of the Mexican War and the Civil War. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman from Missouri?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The same rule in the law recently passed, known as the Sherwood bill, applies to the veterans of the Mexican War as to those of the Civil War.

Mr. RUSSELL. My understanding is that Civil War soldiers must have served 2 years and be 75 years of age to be entitled to $30 per month, but only 60 days in the case of the Mexican War soldiers; all of the survivors of that war are now over 75 years of age.

Mr. MANN. Is it not $30 a month?

Mr. FULLER. It is $30 a month to all Mexican soldiers in the law that was recently passed.

Mr. GARNER. There are mighty few of them left.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the provisions of this bill are already covered by the general bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to pass over this bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 2117, an act to promote the efficiency of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, without reading this bill, I would like to reserve an objection.

Mr. FOSTER. In the last Congress there was a bill passed the House increasing the efficiency of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service containing a provision, if I remember right, authorizing the Public-Health Service to issue certain bulletins and do certain work in addition to what they are already doing. I observe by this bill that all that provision contained in the bill which was introduced and passed at the time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was chairman of the committee is left out of this bill, so that there is no provision in it with reference to that matter whatever. I would like to ask the chairman if he can give some reason why that was not included?

Mr. ADAMSON. During the last session of Congress there were protracted and voluminous hearings on the subject of health before our committee. Under the lead of the gentleman from Illinois, then our able and distinguished chairman, we prepared a bill in the nature of a verdict made up by us as a jury on the trial of all the issues and put in everything that the committee was willing to put into it. We thought it was the best arrangement to promote the efficiency of the Public-Health Service already established and working so well, inasmuch as the representative of every department was willing that everybody else should be put into the Department of Health except his own bureau, but did not want his own bureau put in. But the committee unanimously reported and brought into this House the bill. Gentlemen on my side of the Houses, affecting to be more ultra-Democratic than I was, objected to it because it invaded private and local affairs, and they made a bitter fight on it.

Now, when we came to make up the bill this time we left out everything that had been fought. We put in only the provision to increase the salaries in order to endeavor to hold the surgeons and officers in the service. We thought that was necessary for the efficiency of the service, and we postponed the disputes about everything else for future bills.

Mr. FOSTER. So the gentleman's idea was that to increase the efficiency it was only necessary to increase the salaries of the officers to increase the service to the people of the United States?

Mr. ADAMSON. We had for a long time been considering the question of equalizing the salaries. Some complained that they did not get enough, that other departments outbid them, and took away the men whom they had trained. They begged us to increase the salaries enough to hold them, and we tried to do it in good faith because we believed that the plea was just. I am perfectly willing for every one of the other provisions to go into the bill. I did not want to bring them in and have a fight, and so we brought in the provisions that were uncontested.

Mr. FOSTER. There was no objection as far as the Marine Hospital was concerned to putting the provisions in?

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, no. I am willing and they were to pass the bill just as the gentleman from Illinois and I agreed upon it, as it was passed through the House at the last session, but other Members are not.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Georgia remembers that the bill that was passed under the suspension of the rules by two-thirds majority had this provision in it, and so it could not have been a very severe fight.

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, they fought it pretty hard, with their tongues at least.

Mr. FOSTER. It passed under suspension of the rules.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; and I am willing to do it now.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry that the gentleman did not do it this time.

Mr. ADAMSON. I could not do it; I was not the boss; I only preside over my committee. [Laughter.] I do not run it entirely.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I was opposed to the reporting of the bill without some increase in the work. I am not opposed to the increase in salaries.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will be candid and honest; if you pass this bill as it is, and the Senate will restore to it every provision in the Mann bill, I will not object.

Mr. FOSTER. The Mann bill was so important, so far as the public-health bureau is concerned, that it seems to me that this bill ought not to pass without those provisions.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to put them in I will not object.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the bill ought not to pass without that provision in it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill increases the salaries more than the Mann bill did in the last Congress, and leaves out the most valuable part of that bill. It is impossible, in my judgment, to consider this bill by unanimous consent, because it ought to be amended in order to make it more valuable to the country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I was conscious of the positions of the two gentlemen from Illinois, but I think it is due to the gentleman from Alabama, who reported the bill, and in my absence, when I was at home on leave of absence on account of sickness, placed it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. The gentleman from Alabama reported the bill, and I was going to say, if I could have the opportunity, that he is absent from the city and I would like to defer action till his return.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House, the gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION FOR INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 19239) authorizing an appropriation for the Interparliamentary Union for International Arbitration.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to the Secretary of State, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the quota of the Congress of the United States as its contribution toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration at Brussels, Belgium.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to know what is sought to be accomplished by this bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will be glad to make an explanation in the absence of the chairman of the committee, Mr. SULZER. This bill authorizes an appropriation for the maintenance of the International Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union at Brussels, Belgium. It is a matter peculiarly our own. It is not an executive affair, it only concerns the national legislative bodies of the world. All the parliaments of the world are now represented in the organization, as is the Congress of the United States since the year 1904, and all the congresses, all parliaments are contributing toward the maintenance of that international bureau.

Two years ago the Congress provided for the first time an appropriation of $2,500 as our share, which had been estimated in accordance with the population of this country, and this year when I offered an amendment to the diplomatic bill favorable to the proposition a point of order was made against it, but it was inserted in the Senate and it is now a law. So Congress has already appropriated twice for that purpose. This bill merely contemplates putting the authority of law behind such an appropriation, and is merely an authorization.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does the bureau do that is of any value toward the promotion of peace?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. This bureau is conducting the affairs of the Interparliamentary Union.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is that—a voluntary association of members of different parliaments?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is a voluntary association.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then why should they not maintain their own headquarters?

Mr. MANN. Do not they have enough expenses to pay now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I think not. They want Congress to appropriate $50,000 to conduct the convention this year in the United States, and they have reported a bill for that purpose.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I think I can satisfy the gentleman on that point. The members of the national legislative bodies who belong to the Interparliamentary Union are paying out of their own pockets every year the expenses of travel to the locality where the union meets. That is a considerable personal sacrifice which these members make for the benefit of a great cause.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What have they ever accomplished?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They have accomplished a great deal. That is a long story, Mr. Speaker. I think the Interparliamentary Union is responsible for the meeting of The Hague conferences, the first as well as the second, and The Hague conferences, to my mind, have accomplished a great deal. I think the gentleman is conversant with that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I shall not get into a controversy with the gentleman from Missouri as to the responsibility for the creation of The Hague conferences, but with a very slight modification this would make a permanent indefinite appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States toward the maintenace of this quasi official bureau.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not expect or intend, if this bill shall be passed by the House, that it shall be amended in the Senate so as to make a permanent indefinite appropriation?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; that is not our intention.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not sure whether some enterprising gentleman may not construe this as making a permanent indefinite appropriation in any event.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is no such intention whatever.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know, but Congress frequently unintentionally does things that could never possibly be done if we knew exactly what would happen afterwards. How many countries participate in maintaining this bureau?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Twenty countries are now contributing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is $50,000. What do they do with that money in this bureau?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a further explanation, so that this matter may be understood.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman says that 20 countries are contributing; and if they contribute the same as the United States, $2,500——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But they do not. That is our pro rata share, in accordance with the population of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, then, as usual, the United States pays the lion's share of the expense.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The United States pays about as much as Great Britain does, and France pays a little less, and Germany pays a little less, and, of course, the small countries, like Switzerland and Denmark and Norway, pay still less. Many of the parliaments of the other countries have gone so far as to even defray the traveling and other expenses of their delegates to these conferences.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That will be the next step here, if we go far enough. We are progressing a little every day.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. When that is suggested, I think we will consider it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman has already suggested it. He introduced a bill, which has been reported favorably, to appropriate $50,000 to transport the foreign and domestic representatives to this conference about the United States, and that comes about as near to paying the expenses of the delegates as we can go at this time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman is mistaken. It is not for transportation or traveling expenses at all. That appropriation of $50,000 is asked for the purpose of extending the hospitality of the United States to five or six or seven hundred members of foreign parliaments who come here when the next conference is held, and I want to say that it will not be held this year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand what that means. That puts it in a little nicer English. It is extending the hospitality to foreign visitors and paying the traveling expenses of those participating in the convention, both from this country and abroad.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Of course I may be mistaken, but if small countries like Switzerland or Denmark or Holland or Belgium could entertain such distinguished visitors in a proper manner, I had an idea that probably the United States could afford to do the same thing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no doubt it is a great benefit and will greatly further the civilization of other countries to have distinguished representatives of this body visit and sojourn in those countries indefinitely, if possible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman reserve his objection and agree to strike out of the bill the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," so that it would be only an authorization for an appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in this Congress three or four bills have been called to my attention, and possibly there are others that have not been called to my attention, that have been introduced, the purpose of which, as stated in the reports, is to enable appropriations for specific purposes to be in order upon appropriation bills, appropriations which under the rules of the House are not now in order. I do not believe it is desirable to enact legislation that will make in order upon bills that carry annually the money necessary to maintain the Government appropriations for all sorts of enterprises which really have very little relation to the maintenance of the Government. That is the chief reason for my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6848. An act authorizing the Cooper River Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of South Carolina, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Goose Creek, in Berkeley County, S. C.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 6848. An act authorizing the Cooper River Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of South Carolina, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Goose Creek, in Berkeley County, S. C.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

STEAMSHIP "DAMARA."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22907) to provide American registry for the steamer Damara.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the steamer Damara, rebuilt at San Francisco, Cal., from the wreck of the British steamer Damara, wrecked in the harbor of San Francisco and abandoned by her owners as a total wreck, to be registered as a vessel of the United States whenever it shall be shown to the Commissioner of Navigation that the cost of rebuilding said vessel in the United States amounted to three times the actual cost of said wreck and that the vessel is wholly owned by citizens of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

STREET RAILWAY, SOUTH HILO, HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18041) granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18041) granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

Be it enacted, etc., That wherever in this act the following words and phrases appear or are used they shall be held to have the following meaning, unless the context clearly indicates otherwise:

(a) "Association" shall mean and include Leland S. Conness, W. H. Johnson, and their associates and assigns, or such corporation as may be organized by them to take over and exercise the rights and privileges conferred by this act.

(b) "Governor" shall mean the governor designated as such in the organic act.

(c) "Superintendent" shall mean the person from time to time acting as the superintendent of public works of the Territory of Hawaii referred to in the organic act, or any lawful successor in power or duty.

(d) "Railway" shall mean the rails, tracks, roadway, with its appurtenances, appliances, and connections, and the poles and underground or overhead equipment, which may be placed in, along, or upon the highways, streets, roads, thoroughfares, and places on the island of Hawaii, under the provisions of this act.

(e) "District" shall mean that portion of the island of Hawaii which is included in the political subdivision known as the South Hilo district, as now defined in act 84 of the Session Laws of 1909.

(f) "Board" shall mean the board of supervisors elected for the county of Hawaii, and acting under the provisions of act 39 of the Session Laws of 1905 and all amendments thereto, or any lawful successor in power or duty.

SEC. 2. That, subject to the provisions, conditions, requirements, and limitations in this act contained, the right and authority is hereby granted to the association to take over and exercise the rights and privileges conferred by this act; to construct, maintain, and operate a railway and railway system, for the transportation of passengers, freight, mail, and for other purposes, upon and along the streets, roads, and places hereinafter described and indicated, either of single or double track, or partly single and partly double track, with such curves, switches, turnouts, spurs, poles, wires, with underground or overhead conductors of power, and all equipment, appliances, and appurtenances as may from time to time be necessary or suitable for the efficient use and operation of a street railway system. The railway shall be laid, constructed, maintained, and operated upon and along the following streets, roads, and places in said district, namely:

(a) From a point on Front Street extension not over 2 miles from the county bridge across the Wailoa River, along said Front Street extension, and along Front Street to its intersection with Waianuenue Street; thence mauka along Waianuenue Street and the extension thereof for a distance of 3½ miles; and along any road, street, or highway hereafter laid out or constructed between said Front Street extension and the water front.

(b) From a point on said Front Street extension over, across, and through the Government land of Waiakea, subject to existing leasehold rights therein, to any wharf or wharves hereafter constructed in Kuhio Bay, upon such exact location as may be approved by the superintendent.

(c) From the intersection of Cocoanut Island Road with Front Street extension, along said Cocoanut Island Road to Wharf Street, and along any road or street now or hereafter laid out or constructed and leading from said Cocoanut Island Road.

(d) Along Wharf Street from its junction with Cocoanut Island Road to its junction with Front Street, and along the unnamed street leading from Wharf Street to Front Street extension parallel with the Wailoa River.

(e) From a point on the Volcano Road not exceeding 1 mile on the Puna side of the Waiakea mill, along said Volcano Road to Volcano Street, and along said Volcano Street to its junction with Bridge Street, thence along Bridge Street to its intersection with Waianuenue Street.

(f) From the intersection of Waianuenue and Pitman Streets, along said Pitman Street to Wailuku Street, thence mauka along Wailuku Street to the junction therewith of Wainaku Road, thence along said Wainaku Road to Honolii Gulch.

(g) Whenever the majority of adult persons who are bona fide residents within a distance of 500 feet from any street or road, or section of any street or road, in said district shall, in writing, petition the association to construct a railway upon or along said street or road, or section of street or road, and the governor shall approve thereof, such railway may be constructed thereon and thereafter maintained during the unexpired term of this franchise.

SEC. 3. That the motive power for the operation of said railway, for any and all purposes, shall be electricity, applied either by the overhead trolley system or the underground conduit system, or by storage batteries, or by such other method or methods as may be an improvement upon either, or the motive power may be supplied by compressed air or such other motive power as the association may from time to time elect, subject always to the prior consent and approval of the governor: And provided also, That the railway may be operated in part by one motive power and in part by another or others, with the consent and approval aforesaid: And provided further, That no car, engine, or other vehicle emitting smoke, steam, or offensive odors to such a degree as to be a public nuisance, or, with animals attached, shall be operated or used upon the tracks of the railway.

SEC. 4. (a) The railway, together with all its branches, parts, and connections, shall be thoroughly and substantially constructed according to the best modern practice, with rails level with the surface of the street where laid, and in such manner as to cause the least obstruction to the free use of the streets, roads, and places where laid; and the location in the streets shall be such as may be directed or approved by the board, subject to the provisions of this act.

(b) All passenger cars shall be of approved and modern construction for the comfort, convenience, and safety of passengers, and be provided with fenders and brakes, and in the case of cars weighing more than 30,000 pounds, with air brakes of the best pattern, with proper lighting and signaling appliances, and with proper numbers, route boards, or signs, all as shall be approved by the governor, which approval may from time to time be modified in accordance with the best engineering practice.

(c) The association shall pay all expenses and damages and save the Territory and any subdivision thereof harmless and indemnified from all loss, cost, damage, and expense occasioned by or arising from the construction, maintenance, use, and operation of the railway; and shall also make and pay for all grading, filling, paving, repairing, and other work occasioned by or required for the construction, alteration, maintenance, use, or operation of the railway and every part thereof.

And the association shall so provide for their electric current and provide such conductors thereof, and of return currents, that avoidable injury or deterioration shall not occur, nor be done to the water pipes, sewer pipes, gas pipes, or other property of the Territory, or of any political subdivision thereof, or of any person or corporation, and shall save the Territory and any such subdivision or any person or corporation harmless and indemnified from all loss, cost, damage, and expenses by reason thereof.

(d) In constructing or repairing said railway not more than one block shall be closed to traffic at any one time, and all established crossings shall be maintained or substitute crossings provided during the progress of the work, and the work in any block shall be carried on continuously until completed.

Whenever any road or street shall be less than 18 feet in width in surfaced roadway the track of the railway (except switches or turnouts) shall be laid as nearly as possible parallel with but not upon said surfaced roadway.

(e) The construction of the railway shall be commenced and, at least, the sum of $20,000 shall have been expended or contracted to be expended within two years after the approval of this franchise by the Congress of the United States, and at least 2 miles shall be completed, equipped, and ready for the transportation of passengers within two years after such commencement.

Within 90 days after the approval of this act by the Congress of the United States the association shall execute and deliver a bond to the county of Hawaii in the sum of $5,000, to be approved by the governor as to form and sufficiency, conditioned for such completion, equipment, and complete operation of at least 2 miles of said railway within said two years; and in case of a failure to comply with these requirements this franchise shall cease and be null and void.

At least 2 additional miles of the railway shall be completed, equipped, and ready for operation within six years from the approval of this franchise by the Congress of the United States, and in case of failure to comply with such requirement the privileges granted by section 2 of this act shall cease as to any streets, roads, thoroughfares, or places not then occupied.

Provided, That if there is any period during which work shall be suspended by reason of actions, suits, or injunctions, impeding or delaying construction or use, the time so lost shall not be counted as part of the periods of limitations above specified.

(f) The tracks shall not exceed 4 feet 8½ inches in width between the rails, and the style of rail to be used, the manner and detail of track foundations, substructures, and construction shall be subject to the approval of the board: Provided, however, That the weight of such rails shall not be less than 56 pounds per yard and that the tracks shall be laid flush with the streets, and the paving, grade, and macadamizing of the entire space between the tracks, and between the outside rails of double tracks, if more than one track be laid, and for one foot outside of the outer rails, and switches, turnout, and sidings, and outside the rails wherever occupied by the track or substructure, shall correspond and be maintained at all times with the grade and character of paving, or macadam of the remaining portion of the street, except as otherwise directed by the board: Provided, however, That when the tracks shall be laid parallel to but not upon any surfaced roadway, the above provision relating to paving and macadamizing shall not apply. The board may in writing require any work to be done or repairs made to conform to the requirements of this section, and the same shall be made by the association within a reasonable time from the receipt of such order.

(g) Whenever it shall be necessary to cross the tracks of any other railway or railroad, the association may construct and lay down, at their own expense, proper crossings and intersecting tracks, laid in a substantial and workmanlike manner and according to the best engineering practice, removing the rails so crossed for that purpose; but such removal and construction shall be so done as to interfere as little as possible with the traffic of such other railway or railroad; and after such crossings are laid the expense of maintenance thereof shall be borne equally with the owners of said track.

(h) Trolley wires shall be of a height of not less than 16 feet above the street. All guard wires above and on both sides of the trolley wire shall be such as the board may deem expedient or necessary. The size and location of such wires and the manner of supporting them shall be subject to the approval of the board.

SEC. 5. That the association at all times shall maintain and operate such number of cars upon the railway for the carriage of passengers as the public convenience may require.

SEC. 6. That the board, with the approval of the governor, from time to time may make reasonable general rules governing the speed at which cars may be operated, and with like approval may make reasonable special rules of similar character for particular sections of the district; for each violation of any such rule the association shall be subject to a fine of not more than $100, to be recovered in the district court of South Hilo, at the suit of the county attorney of the county of Hawaii, or its successor, or any other person to the use of the county of Hawaii, or its successor: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as exempting the association from liability for loss, damage, or injury to persons or property occasioned by the association in operating its railway, whether the rate of speed of cars shall or shall not be in excess of the limits prescribed in such rules.

SEC. 7. That the association may charge, as rates of fare for transportation of passengers upon the cars of the railway, the following: For a continuous trip anywhere between any two extreme points within a radius of 3 miles from the intersection of Front and Walanuenue Streets, not to exceed the sum of 5 cents: Provided, That children under 17 years of age, going to and from school, shall not be required to pay over half fare, for which purpose tickets shall be sold: And provided further, That children under 4 years of age, accompanied by a person paying fare, shall be allowed to ride free. Rates of fare outside of such radius may be fixed from time to time by the association, subject to the approval of the governor.

Upon a continuous trip persons riding upon the cars shall be entitled to receive transfers from one car to another within the radius above mentioned at any point or points where one line of the railway connects with, crosses, or intersects any other line thereof without the payment of extra fare for such transfer: Provided, That such passenger shall take the first available car passing the transfer point for which such transfer has been issued.

Policemen, firemen, and letter carriers, when on duty and in full uniform, shall be entitled to free passage over any of the lines of the railway.

The association, its agents, and employees in charge of any car may refuse passage to any person or persons who refuse to pay the lawful fare, to any drunken, disorderly, or diseased person or persons, or vagrants or criminals, and may eject with force, if necessary, any such person or persons from the car.

If the association, or any agent or employee thereof, shall demand or charge a greater sum of money for fare on the cars of the association than that fixed by this act the association, such agent, or employee shall forfeit to the person thus overcharged the sum of not more than $100 nor less than $25, to be recovered in a civil action in any court having jurisdiction thereof.

Upon the trial of an action for any of the sums forfeited as provided above, proof that the person demanding or receiving the money as fare or for the sale of a ticket was at the time of making the demand or receiving the money engaged in an office of the association, or on any vehicle belonging to it, shall be prima facie evidence that such person was the agent, servant, or employee of the association to receive the money and the ticket mentioned.

SEC. 8. That the association, with the approval of the governor, shall make reasonable and just regulations regarding the operation of the railway, and on failure of the association to make the same within a reasonable time after the receipt of written notice from the governor so to do the board, with the approval of the governor, may make such regulations. All regulations may be changed from time to time as the public interests may demand, at the discretion of the governor.

The cars lawfully occupying and using the railway shall have the right of way upon its tracks, with due regard and warning to other vehicles and to pedestrians, except that in case of fire such right shall yield to fire engines and patrol, and in cases of emergency to the police authorities.

SEC. 9. That the entire plant, system, tracks, rolling stock, poles, wire, conduits, and other apparatus of the association shall at all times be subject to inspection by the board or its representative designated for that purpose.

SEC. 10. That the association shall also have the power to acquire, construct, maintain, and operate at such place or places as may from time to time be deemed necessary, adequate power stations or houses and such other buildings and structures as may be convenient, necessary, and desirable for the conduct of its business, and may install and use therein machinery for such purpose.

SEC. 11. That the association may acquire, take, hold, sell, or otherwise dispose of any property, real, personal, or mixed, deemed necessary, convenient, desirable, or incidental to the proper conduct of its business and shall have the power to borrow money when deemed expedient, and secure the payment thereof, with interest, by mortgage or by the issuance of bonds secured by deed of trust, of all or any portion of its property and the franchises and privileges granted or obtained by virtue of this act or otherwise, together with all future acquired property, as well as income and receipts from whatsoever source derived, in such form and under such terms as may be deemed advisable. Nothing herein contained, however, shall operate to prevent the association from obtaining the usual business credits and making promissory notes without security.

SEC. 12. That the association shall have the right to condemn lands, leaseholds, and other property for sites for power stations, or houses and buildings, and for rights of way for poles, lines, wires, cables, conduits, pipe lines, flumes, and other appliances for the generation, transmission, distribution, and supply of electricity, railways, tracks, and other like purposes necessary for the full enjoyment, operation, construction, and maintenance of the railway system authorized or permitted under the terms of this act, and all proceedings therefor shall be as near as may be in accordance with the provisions of chapter 64 of the Revised Laws of Hawaii, and all amendments thereto now or hereafter made.

SEC. 13. That any person who shall willfully or intentionally injure, molest, or destroy any of the poles, lines, wires, or other appliances, railway, tracks, or the material or property belonging thereto, or shall without permission or authority of the association connect or cause to be connected by poles, wires, or any device anything with the wires, cables, or conductors of the association, for the purpose of obtaining current for light, heat, or power, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect the right of the association to recover by action at law damages for any injury done by such unlawful action.

SEC. 14. That whenever the association refuses or fails to do or perform or comply with any act, matter, or thing requisite or required to be done under the terms of this act, and shall continue so to refuse or fail to do or perform or comply therewith after reasonable notice given by the governor to comply therewith, unless other provision is herein specifically made, the board shall, with the consent of the governor and the attorney general, cause proceedings to be instituted before the proper tribunal to have the franchise granted by this act, and all rights and privileges granted thereunder, forfeited and declared null and void.

SEC. 15. That the rights, privileges, and franchises hereby granted to the association shall continue until the expiration of the term of 50 years from the date of the approval of this act by the Congress of the United States, subject only to the limitations in this act contained.

SEC. 16. That all property of every kind and nature forming or used as a part of the railway and power system of the association, including this franchise, shall be exempt from any and all taxation under the laws of the Territory of Hawaii until the expiration of 10 years from and after the approval of this act by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 17. That the association shall, within one month after the expiration of each calendar year, file with the board a detailed statement showing all of its receipts and expenditures during the preceding calendar year; and all of its books, papers, records, and accounts shall, at all reasonable times, be open to inspection by the governor, the board, and their respective agents appointed for such purpose.

The association shall not issue stock, nor shall it incur indebtedness, to an amount in excess of the actual cost of its property and 10 per cent in addition thereto.

The association shall pay each year to the county of Hawaii, or such other political division as the legislature shall from time to time indicate, an amount equal to the amount, if any, which it shall pay in dividends in excess of 8 per cent for that year upon its capital stock, and in any event shall so pay each year, after 10 years from the approval of this act by Congress, not less than 1 per cent of its gross receipts.

SEC. 18. That this franchise may at any time be amended or repealed by the Congress of the United States or by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, with the approval of the Congress of the United States; and the rights, privileges, and powers by this act conferred shall not be construed to be exclusive.

SEC. 19. That the Territory of Hawaii, the county of Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, within or including the district of South Hilo, may at any time after the expiration of 20 years from the date of the approval of this act by the Congress of the United States, and upon six months' notice in writing to the association, given pursuant to proper authority, acquire by purchase all the property of the association, subject to the then existing charges thereon. The amount to be paid to the association for such purchase shall be determined by a commission of three persons, one to be appointed by the association, or in case it should fail to do so within 30 days after requested to do so by the purchaser, then by the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Hawaii, one by the purchaser, and the third by the two so appointed, or in case they should fail to agree upon the third member within 30 days, then by said chief justice, but such amount shall in no case exceed the actual cost of the property and 20 per cent in addition thereto, less the charges thereon.

Either the association or the purchaser may appeal to the Supreme Court of Hawaii from the decision of such commission by filing a written notice of appeal with the commission within five days after the decision is rendered. It shall thereupon be the duty of the commission immediately to certify up to the supreme court the record of its proceedings, showing in such certificate the valuation claimed by the association, the valuation claimed by the purchaser, and the valuation as determined by the commission. Such certificate shall be accompanied by copies of all papers, documents, and evidence upon which the decision of the commission was based and a copy of such decision. Upon any such appeal the supreme court may, in its behalf, take or require further evidence to be introduced by either party.

Within six months after the determination of the purchase price, as aforesaid, the same shall be paid to the association.

SEC. 20. That this act shall go into effect and be law from and after the date of its approval by the governor of the Territory of Hawaii, subject, however, to the approval of the Congress of the United States, such approval to be secured within four years from the date of this act becoming law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to know something about the time limit of this franchise. How long does it run?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to know the limit of time for this franchise.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, they have to begin work in one year.

Mr. BUCHANAN. How long does this franchise continue?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Fifty years.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I see here in one section:

That the association may acquire, take, hold, sell, or otherwise dispose of the property, real, personal, or mixed, deemed necessary, convenient, desirable, or incidental to the proper conduct of its business.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. From what section is the gentleman reading?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Section 11.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object to giving that right and I object to giving the franchise for that length of time, and therefore I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Could the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will reserve my objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this bill, if the gentleman has followed it, is hedged about by as many conditions as any bill that ever granted a franchise. Here is a town of about 7,000 people and this company proposes to build an electric railway line for the benefit and convenience of these 7,000 people. I do not know in this country of any town of 7,000 people that has no interurban connections that can get an electric line built in it. This franchise allows this company to make 8 per cent on their capital actually invested, and of all above the 8 per cent 75 per cent goes to the county of Hawaii and 25 per cent to this company. The only grant in here that is liberal is the one for 50 years, and it does seem to me, considering the benefits to accrue from this franchise to the people of this little town, that the gentleman may forego his right to object upon a proposition that is considered proper by everybody who is charged with the duty of legislating for those people.

This bill, when introduced in the House, had already been passed by the Legislature of Hawaii and had received the approval of Gov. Frear and the general public of the Territory. It is intended to provide cheap transportation for the town of Hilo, the second city of Hawaii. At the present time the only means of communication is by Japanese bus or hack, the lowest rate being 15 cents, and from that up to 75 cents, for the service which will be given by a street-car company for a single 5-cent fare.

While the bill had received the approval mentioned above, at the suggestion of Gov. Frear a number of amendments have been made for the purpose of safeguarding the public interests. One of the most important of these limits the amount of stock which may be issued to that paid for in cash and $50,000 additional. This effectually prevents the watering of stock, which has been done in so many cases of similar companies. In addition to this, the franchise virtually limits the dividends upon the stock to 8 per cent. Should the company pay over that amount, it must pay to the Territory three times the sum so paid to its stockholders. Another amendment of importance forces the company to extend its lines in any desired direction in case it shall be shown to the satisfaction of a designated board that the company, with such extension, will be able to pay this 8 per cent dividend. The force of these two amendments results in the restriction of the dividend paid, while the amount of capital stock can not be increased save by the issuance of more stock which must be paid for in cash. All features of the new forms of franchise acts, as they have been adopted in various cities in the United States in recent years, are included in this franchise.

According to the census of 1910 the town of Hilo had 6,745 inhabitants. The town is alone and without surrounding towns to which connection might be made, and only the fact that water power for the generation of electricity may be obtained enables the construction of a street railroad. There is no town in the United States of the size of Hilo, and without interurban connections, which is supporting a street-railroad system. For this reason the term of 50 years, which is the ordinary length of street-car franchises, is short rather than long. A shorter term, combined with the restriction of capital stock and of dividends, would prevent the financing of the system.

The equipment and construction, as called for under the franchise, is first class in every way, and the company is required to make all such repairs and improvements as may be reasonably called for by the Government. It is further provided that the system may be bought by the Government at the end of 20 years at a price not to exceed the actual cost plus 20 per cent. One year is allowed for the completion of the financial arrangements before construction starts, and four years for the completion of 4 miles of track, which will be ample for the town under existing conditions.

Within the year it is expected that the large section of Government land now under lease and located about 2 miles from Hilo proper will be open for homes. At the present time at existing prices it is practically impossible for a man in moderate circumstances to buy a home in Hilo. With cheap transportation a poor man could buy one of these Government lots, erect a small house, and thus own his home, being able to travel back and forth to his work for 10 cents a day. Without a street-railroad system this would cost him a minimum of 30 cents a day with a maximum of a dollar, which would render the transportation charge so high as to effectually prevent his taking up the land. A further reason for a street-car system comes in the fact that there is now under construction a new deep-water wharf, located 2 miles from the Hilo post office, for which quick and cheap transportation will be necessary. The Hilo Board of Trade, in a meeting held in February, passed special resolutions indorsing the street-car franchise, and especially that section permitting the system to carry freight. A line of the Hilo Railroad Co.—steam-car service—will run to these new wharves, but it was felt that the competition of the street-car company in the handling of freight would make sure cheap rates and good service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that one of the purposes of building this railroad is to enable the workingmen who live in the town and whose employment would be at the water terminus to go back and forth without paying the charges they now have to pay for conveyance?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And is it not essentially an advantage to the men who derive their bread and butter from this Government contract on the coast and who must necessarily go back and forth to the town, some miles away, and who now, if they ride, must ride in vehicles for which they are charged at the rate of 25 or 50 cents per head?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is even stronger than the gentleman suggested.

Mr. CANDLER. If the gentleman will permit, I was there, and my recollection is I paid 50 cents.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There is, as I have just said, a large tract of land between the thickly inhabited part of the town of Hilo and where they are going to build the new wharf. That land is Government land and at present under lease; in a short time the lease will expire and it is the purpose to open this land up to small settlers, to laborers at this wharf and laborers in the town. Now, these men if they have to go to work in this thickly settled part of the town or at the wharf have to pay a transportation cost at present of from 30 cents to $1 for a round trip. This road will transport them back and forth for 10 cents a round trip. I was going on to say, every person who has had to deal with this matter—the Legislature of Hawaii, the governor of the Territory, the Delegate representing it, and the Committee on Territories, after long and arduous labor and careful consideration of this measure—has indorsed it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman ever been to Hilo?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I have never been there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think they can make 8 per cent on a railroad built there?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I have never been there, but I should think it is extremely doubtful. I think the men who are financing this enterprise are taking a great risk and I think if we turn down this bill we are not acting in the interest of the people of Hawaii, because here is a proposition to give them cheap transportation facilities which they could not get without some measure of this kind.

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon his objection to this bill. I think the very best answer that can be made to his objection is the fact that it means a development along the line of American ideas in every way on that island, and I ask to read from the report of the committee, which epitomizes the whole matter, which, I think, will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Illinois.

The necessity for a street railway in Hilo, Hawaii, which is a town of but 7,000 inhabitants, according to the census of 1910, arises from two facts—that the various sections of the town lie far apart and public transportation at present may only be had by Japanese bus or by hacks at high rates, and the fact that a cheap means of transit is necessary to connect with new Government wharves which are being constructed 2 miles from the town proper. In the latter case, under the terms of this bill, the fare will be but 5 cents as against a minimum of 25 cents under present conditions. In addition to this, the installation of a street-railway system will give easy access to a large tract of Government land which may by this means be developed for residence and homesteading purposes and which otherwise would be almost impossible to settle on account of the lack of transportation facilities. The franchise is one which was approved by the Legislature of Hawaii with but one dissenting vote and received the official approval of the governor of the Territory.

If the gentleman will examine the report he will find that this franchise is hedged about as carefully as legal ideas or an honest consideration of the development of that country can possibly make it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. CONNELL. I am reading from the report of the committee on this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does this bill provide any limit of charges? I have not noticed any limitations.

Mr. CONNELL. No; it does not provide any limit of charges, but that follows in the development of the railroad. It does provide, however, that if all the things to be done under this franchise are not lived up to in every particular it may be repealed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I never saw a company yet looking for a franchise, no matter how profitable it was, that they did not do it under the cover of benefit to the public in that locality. They usually use the working people for a buffer in many of their schemes to secure franchises. I am willing to concede that my colleagues who have considered this probably know more about it than I do. But I want to say, a 50-year franchise sounds to me as though it is a dangerous proposition to concede to any company. I believe that is too long a time.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will ask the gentleman this question: If there is a town of 7,000 people in his community, with no interurban connection, that has a street railway of the character of the one in this bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want to say to the gentleman in this connection, that we are putting electric lines all through the country, and he knows as well as I do that the companies to whom are granted those franchises and operate those street railways claim that they are doing it for public good, and collecting dividends on watered stock for the benefit of the public.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This provides there can be no watered stock. You have not read this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have just listened to the Clerk read it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to make this statement: I am not familiar with the terms of the bill, but five years ago I was in the Hawaiian Islands. The town of Hilo is the only town on the island of Hawaii, the largest island of the group. I think in 20 minutes to half an hour I walked all over this little community. It had an open roadstead. Back in the country are sugar plantations, and they are also attempting to raise coffee on one side of the island. The Government has built a breakwater in order to make the harbor safe. Conditions are such that before the breakwater is built vessels must lie there, with steam up, and during the prevailing storms must go to sea.

The Government wharf is being built at that breakwater. So far as I am personally concerned, if anybody would be willing to put money into a street railway in that community in the hope that he would ever make money out of it, I think it would be such a benefit to the community, and its prospects would be so slight, that I would give him a franchise without any restrictions. There is no possible great development there. It is a small, insignificant town. They say there are 7,000 inhabitants, but I think its population is from 7,000 to 10,000. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and myself walked all over this community in half an hour one evening after dinner. Were it not for the fact that the dock is to be built off the breakwater, about 2 miles away, I do not think it would be possible to find enough places to which to run this railway in order to get people who would ride.

I am not familiar with the terms of the bill, but if anybody can be encouraged to put money into transportation facilities on these islands, I think we should help them as far as possible to do.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS]?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I think legislation of this sort ought to pass. It ought, however, to receive the same sort of attention as if it were a franchise being granted to a corporation in the city of Washington, under our tutelage and care. There are two propositions involved in the measure that would come in for the first order of consideration if this were a home subject. The first is, whether the capitalization may be watered. The second is on the question of the rates of fare to be charged, and who should have the whip hand in determining those rates—the Government or the grantee of the franchise. I have two amendments, which I purpose offering if that state be reached, looking to the improvement of the bill on those lines.

First, now, in regard to watered stocks, there is no minimizing the circumstance that in this country we have reached an aggravated condition with regard to the so-called fictitious capitalization of public utility corporations. I wish to challenge the statement by any Member of this House that the privilege of watering stock and bonds is a privilege of real value even to capital. It has been a curse to the public welfare. It is true this bill provides——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LEWIS. In just a moment. It provides that the stock may be watered to the extent of $50,000.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I would like to interrupt the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD]?

Mr. LEWIS. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. After we get the bill up the gentleman will have an opportunity to offer his amendments, and we will then consider them. The question now is whether the bill will come up by unanimous consent.

Mr. LEWIS. I hope the House will give consent to its consideration, because it is an outrage to deny the people of Hawaii the government we have taken away from them. We ought to give them the privilege of a hearing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman withdraws his objection, I simply wish to reserve one.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, while this bill was being considered in the committee I took the very position the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] now takes relative to the length of time of the franchise proposed to be granted to this company or corporation—which is 50 years, and entirely too long a period. I maintained that position until I was entirely satisfied that the committee had amended the original bill and so hedged it about with all the safeguards that it was possible for the ingenuity of the committee to invent for the protection of the people of the town of Hilo, and that the people would be entirely protected in every way, including the regulation of the charges for fares, the same being limited to 5 cents, and that the earnings of the company could not be above a fair rate, which is stipulated in the bill to be 8 per cent; and a fair share of the earnings above that rate should be for the benefit of the city. The bill being thus safeguarded and it appearing from the evidence before this committee, which was to the effect that the bill, being so safeguarded that the enterprise could not be successfully financed with a shorter term of the franchise, and while I am very much opposed to the granting of a franchise generally for so long a period, yet under the peculiar conditions existing upon the Hawaiian Islands, as shown by the hearings of the committee, I am of the opinion now that to make the franchise less in time than stated in the bill, with it hedged about as has been done and fully safeguarded, it would be equivalent to denying the people of that locality the street railway that they desire, for I am firmly of the belief that the project could not be financed if the time of the franchise was lessened; and I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to state to the House and to the gentleman from Illinois that I had an opportunity at one time to be in this little city of Hilo, and the conditions as stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, practically exist there. The statements made in the report of the committee, I can state from my personal knowledge, are substantially, if not absolutely in toto, true and correct. Therefore it seems to me that if the people of this community, this small place of 7,000 people, are willing to invest their money in an enterprise for their own development and for the development of their community and the surrounding country, they at least ought to have an opportunity to do so, especially in view of the fact that the legislature of the islands of Hawaii has passed this bill practically unanimously—as I understand it, with but one dissenting vote—and it has been approved by the governor of the islands, and certainly it is a matter that should have the consideration of the Congress of the United States, when those people can not act and can not move without the approval of Congress. To deny them the right even of consideration in the House of Representatives, it seems to me, is not a rule which should be applied to a bill of this character.

As stated by several members of the committee, it has been hedged about by every possible means, and so far as the limitation of the charter is concerned, limiting its existence to 50 years, we have charters in perpetuity in many of the States of the Union, and there are few, if any, States that grant charters requiring less than 50 years. I think that provision is sufficient, and therefore I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] will at least withdraw his objection and permit the House to consider the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a couple of questions in regard to the matter. What is the kind and character of the capital that is going into this enterprise?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is money. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. Is that as definite and intelligent an answer as the gentleman expects to give to the question?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is as intelligent as the question.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, under those circumstances, I object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California objects.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is in keeping with the gentleman's conduct—to defeat a great public enterprise because he is angry with me.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am not angry with my distinguished colleague from Virginia, and to assure him that he has misjudged me I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] withdraws his objection.

Mr. RAKER. I asked the gentleman, plainly and fairly, what kind and character of capital is going to be invested in this enterprise, meaning, undoubtedly, whether it was American capital or foreign.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am not prepared to answer. I made all the inquiries I could in reference to that, and my opinion is that the bulk of it will be American capital. I was informed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] that friends of his in Baltimore would be willing to finance this franchise if it was granted in the way it was asked for by the Legislature of Hawaii. We have put on a number of restrictive amendments since then, and my opinion now is that it would be a combination of Hawaiian and American capital that would build the railroad.

Mr. RAKER. What I wanted to know, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, was whether or not the Japanese Government or any other Government was interested, through their agents, in building this railroad.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I am satisfied that neither the Japanese Government nor Japanese capital is interested in this enterprise.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say that about 75 per cent of the residents of Hawaii are Japanese.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. RAKER. I am quite certain I am not mistaken. I have the Government report in which that statement is plainly made.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Not 75 per cent?

Mr. RAKER. Practically from the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor, which has not been published yet, that statement is made, that 75 per cent of the residents of Hawaii are Japanese. I do not know why the report has not been made public, but I have a copy of it in my office, and I can show it if there is any question about it in this House.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. RAKER. I think not.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is true that a large proportion of the population are Japanese, and there may be some Japanese who will put their money in this franchise. I do not know about that. But the Japanese as a whole are not financing it. I understand that it is to be financed by American and Hawaiian capital combined.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, one other question, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] will permit. It is this: Whether or not the city of Hilo has any electric plant now? Has this city any electric plant?

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. They have an electric-light plant.

Mr. RAKER. Owned by the city or by private individuals?

Mr. KALANIANAOLE. By private individuals.

Mr. RAKER. Why could not the city take up the question of putting in a railroad and running it by electricity?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not suppose the city would care to undertake it. They have not the money to do it. It is going to be a difficult matter to raise three or four hundred thousand dollars to build an electric railway line in a town of 5,000 or 6,000 people without any interurban connection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it to be what we call an interurban line?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; there is no interurban line about it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is there any other line that would connect with it?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There is not. The wharves are 2 miles from the town of Hilo. This road is going to be run between the town and the wharves, and we hope that the intervening territory will be built up. There is a large tract of Government land that will soon be thrown open for settlement between the town and the wharves, and it is the hope and expectation of the Hilo people that it will be taken up by the working people if they can get back and forth to this intermediate territory for the small sum of 10 cents for transportation both ways.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is expected that they will get cheaper and more sanitary homes, is it?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Very much cheaper, because they can not get any homes at all in Hilo at present. I presume they will be more sanitary, and they can get from their homes to their work under this proposition for a railroad for 10 cents a day, whereas now it costs them 30 cents or a dollar.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will it cheapen the cost of transportation to the people in that community over what it is compared with present conditions?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There is not the slightest doubt about that. The only method of transportation from the town of Hilo to the wharves, 2 miles, is by Japanese busses, and the cost is from 15 to 50 cents one way.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And under this proposition they will get one way for 5 cents?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Five cents one way and 10 cents both ways.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And it is Japanese money that is now invested in these busses.

Mr. LEWIS. How many miles of railway are necessary under this proposition?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The bill provides that they shall build 4 miles within a specified time, and, in addition, if the board of supervisors of Hawaii think it is necessary to build more, the company shall build the additional road.

Mr. LEWIS. It is contemplated to build 4 miles now?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, a 50-year franchise usually arouses my suspicion that somebody is going to get more than they are entitled to, but after the statement by the chairman of the committee and other Members as to the necessity for this legislation and the difficulty of getting it constructed under a shorter franchise, I shall, although reluctantly, withdraw my objection. There are some features about the bill that I do not like because they are not in harmony with my ideas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] reserved an objection to the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I objected to this bill, but since that I have examined it, and I propose to offer three amendments, two of which are acceptable to the chairman of the committee. With the understanding that he will support those two amendments, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, unless some one desires to have a vote on some amendment considered separately, as there are 15 or 16 committee amendments, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments may be reported altogether and disposed of altogether.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the committee amendments may be read and disposed of together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

Page 3, line 12, strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

Page 7, line 19, after the word "within," strike out the words "two years" and insert the words "one year."

Page 7, line 19, after the word "the," strike out the word "approval" and insert the word "passage."

Page 7, line 20, strike out the word "franchise" and insert the word "act."

Page 7, line 24, strike out the word "approval" and insert the word "passage."

Page 8, line 2, insert, after the word "dollars," the words "with good security."

Page 8, line 3, after the word "form," insert the word "security."

Page 8, line 10, strike out the word "approval" and insert the word "passage," and strike out the word "franchise" and insert the word "act."

Page 8, strike out all of lines 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 and insert:

"Provided, That if there is any period during which work shall be suspended by reason of bona fide actions, suits, or injunctions, instituted through no fault of the association, but causing delay in the construction or commencement of operation of said railway, the time so lost shall not be counted as part of the periods of limitations above specified.

"Additions and extensions of the railway shall be constructed by the association and, when so constructed or constructed by others, shall thereafter be maintained and operated by it whenever, after notice and an opportunity to be heard, it shall be directed so to do by a committee consisting of the governor, the secretary, and the chief justice of the Territory, the circuit judge of the fourth circuit, and the chairman of the board of supervisors of the county of Hawaii, or other officer designated by the legislature: Provided, That the commission shall not so direct unless in its opinion the earnings of the association when operating such additions and extensions, together with its previously existing railway system, will be sufficient for its reasonable expenses of maintenance and operation, interest and sinking fund on its indebtedness, and dividends of 8 per cent per annum on its issued stock; and the commission may likewise permit the association to cease the maintenance and operation of any portion of the railway wherever in its opinion conditions so warrant or require."

Page 10, after line 18, insert the following:

"Upon the failure of the association to perform such work within a reasonable period of time after the receipt in writing of such requirement, the board may in its discretion proceed with said work or repairs, and the cost of the same shall be charged against the association and shall constitute a lien on the profits and assets of the association."

Page 11, line 20, after the word "may," insert the words "in the opinion of the governor."

Page 16, line 3, strike out the word "or" before the word "houses," and after the word "buildings" insert the words "necessarily pertaining thereto."

Page 16, after line 13, insert the following:

"The association shall be, and is hereby, granted a right of way along and across, under and over, the roads, streets, bridges, and thoroughfares in the county of Hawaii for such poles, wires, conductors, and conduits as may be necessary and suitable for the transmission of electrical and other power from such power stations as may be hereafter constructed and equipped for the use of said railway to such point or points as it may see fit to deliver such power for use upon its lines."

Pages 18, line 2, strike out the word "approval" and insert the word "passage."

Page 18, line 9, strike out the word "approval" and insert the word "passage."

Page 18, strike out all of lines 18 to 25, inclusive, and on page 19, lines 1 to 3, inclusive, and insert the following:

"The association shall not issue stock in excess of the amount paid to it therefor in cash and $50,000 additional, nor shall it issue bonds at less than 90 per cent of their par value; and the entire proceeds of its stock and bonds shall be applied to capital expenditure.

"The association may pay, out of any earnings available for the purpose, after paying its expenses of operation and maintenance, interest and sinking fund on its bonds, and any other expenses properly payable out of earnings, cumulative dividends upon its stock at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, and shall pay each year to the county of Hawaii, or such political division as the legislature shall from time to time designate, an amount equal to three times the amount, if any, which it shall pay in dividends in that year in excess of such cumulative dividends."

Page 21, strike out all of section 20.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following additional committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 22, page 16, strike out the period, after the word "lines," and insert in lieu thereof a colon; after said colon add the following:

"Provided, however, That the lease or grant of any water power or other water privilege to the association by the Territory of Hawaii, or its officials, for the purpose of producing electricity, or other purpose, shall be made to the association only in the event of its being the highest responsible bidder therefor, at public sale, after due advertisement and notice of such proposed sale by the proper officials of the Territory."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to all the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 7 by adding, at the end of line 8, page 13, the following:

"Provided, That the board, subject to the approval of the governor, shall have power from time to time to revise and reduce the rates of fare promulgated under this act or by the association."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. We will accept that amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 17, by striking out, in line 5, page 19, the words "fifty thousand dollars."

Amend section 17, by adding, after the word "of," in line 4, page 19, the following: "One hundred and fifteen per cent of."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as to the first amendment I should like to raise a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it is an amendment to an amendment which has already been adopted by the House, and, therefore, is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, just a few words of explanation in regard to this amendment. We are all familiar with the fact that public-utility corporations usually issue bonds and stock. Frequently, in this country, distinguishable from other countries in the world, the stock is all, or nearly all, water. Under the terms of this bill the road might be built by the issue of bonds, as to which under the bill 10 per cent can be water. That is, a bond can be issued for $100 on $90 of subscription, and therefore you have 10 per cent of water capitalization possible on the bonds. With regard to the stock, the bill now provides that no stock shall be issued except for money actually subscribed, excepting "an additional $50,000," which, in terms, may be water. The road might be built with bonds, and then $1,000 of stock bona fide paid for might be issued, when under the terms of this bill $50,000 of the stock might be issued as pure water, or about $12,500 a mile on the contemplated cost of construction of 4 miles. The amendment proposed is this: That they will be limited in issuing stock to 15 per cent more than the money actually paid in. Thus they can issue $115 of stock for $100 of actual money subscribed for stock. It is important, I may say to the House, in the way of example, that we give this subject proper consideration. Whether in striking the line at 15 per cent as the permissible margin of fictitious value for the needs and purposes of the promoter I have fixed the line right, I do not have the assurance to say; but I do say this: That the time has come when this national assembly ought to take up this subject and indicate the national policy. Are we to go on forever, or as long as private control of these public utilities last, allowing promoters to issue counterfeit capital—a procedure I may say that does not obtain in any of the countries of Europe? This amendment is directed specifically to that point; that a restriction of the amount of water in this stock, if stock be issued, shall be fixed at 15 per cent maximum, and that watered stock shall not be issued except to the extent of 15 per cent of the amount subscribed for stock.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. As to the form of the gentleman's proposed amendment, I understood it is to strike out the words "fifty thousand dollars."

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Ought not the word "and," in line 5, and the word "additional," in line 6, be stricken out in order to make sense?

Mr. LEWIS. Possibly so; yes. Of course I would gladly accept any amendment of that kind. This amendment that I have offered was hastily drawn. As amended it would read:

The association shall not issue stock in excess of 115 per cent of the amount paid to it therefor in cash—

And so forth.

I think the word "and," in line 5, and the word "additional," in line 6, ought to be added to my amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman further whether he considers the Congress of the United States in legislative enactment ought to recognize and make valid the issuance of any amount of water in a public utilities corporation?

Mr. LEWIS. I do not understand that by this amendment we would be doing that. We will be fixing a limitation upon the natural excesses of the promoter, and that is all.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is it not practically a governmental approval of 15 per cent of watered stock?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; and is only pardonable because otherwise there would be $50,000, which might mean 99 per cent of water in the amount of stock issued, or about $12,500 a mile of the road to be built.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will not adopt this amendment. The Committee on the Territories very carefully considered this matter and reached the conclusion that $50,000 as a promoter's bonus was not extravagant; that the people who were getting up this corporation and were going to make a very considerable investment in this small town would be at a large expense. This bill granting the franchise first had to go through the Territorial Legislature, and then they have had men here who appeared before our committee, and who are still here, with the hope of getting the bill through the House and the Senate, and this $50,000 covers everything in excess of the money that is to be actually expended in grading, railroad ties, equipment, and so forth. All of the proceeds of the stock issue must be expended in constructing the road and equipping it, and in addition to that, $50,000 of stock will be sold as surplus, or promoter's bonus. We considered this was not a very liberal proposition from the standpoint of the men who were getting up this enterprise. The bill was carefully considered by a subcommittee. They went carefully into it, and this provision that is incorporated here is the suggestion of the governor of Hawaii. It is not the proposition that passed the legislature. That bill authorized a watered stock of 120 per cent, but the governor thought that was entirely too much, and we agreed with him; and the governor of Hawaii suggested this, and the committee, after careful investigation, decided to give this company this bonus of $50,000.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. What is the mileage of the proposed road?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It must build 4 miles in a specified time, and it must be extended whenever a commission, consisting of the governor and the chief justice and the members of the board of supervisors, decide that it shall be extended.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Then in the original construction of 4 miles this would be permitting a water of $12,500 per mile.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Exactly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I suppose the issue of bonds is to construct the road?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The issue of bonds and stocks; yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. And there is nothing to compel these promoters to buy more than a thousand dollars' worth of stock for cash and then have practically the whole control of the road by virtue of fictitious stock?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Why, it will take between $250,000 and $300,000 to construct this road and the power plant to run it with.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will not that be done by the issue of bonds?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; but the issue of bonds will be somewhere in the neighborhood of $300,000, and we provide a bonus here of $50,000.

Under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland the bonus will be $45,000. It might be more than $50,000, because here is a commission of Hawaiian people authorized to force this company to extend its line whenever they think the community demands and the facts justify it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The question of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] indicates that he believes that a market has been secured for these bonds. I understood him to say that the road would be built from the proceeds of the sale of bonds. Now, is there any certainty that the bonds of an enterprise of that nature in a small town, in an island such as this, will be sold as high as 90 cents on the dollar?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, the bill provides they can not be sold for less.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Suppose the capitalists are not willing to take them at that figure?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Then the enterprise fails.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The railroad will not be built.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The enterprise fails. Now, I hope this amendment will be voted down, because I do not believe that this enterprise can be financed if it is hedged about with any more conditions than the Committee on Territories have already hedged it about with.

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to ask the gentleman before he takes his seat, Is the gentleman willing that the American Congress shall give an example of a franchise openly authorizing fictitious and counterfeit stock?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not believe there is any fictitious stock about it. In order to finance this franchise it will cost something. Lawyers' fees have to be paid; men went to Honolulu, and some came here to give information to the committee—all of this costs. They will have to employ men to finance their scheme, and I do not believe there would be very much of the $50,000 left. As to going on record, I am perfectly willing to go on record in the encouragement of an enterprise such as this to help develop an island in the mid-Pacific.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman ever visited Hilo?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I never have.

Mr. CANNON. Some years ago I did. It is stated in the report there are about 7,000 people at Hilo. It is on the western side of the island, as I recollect, and they get about 300 or 350 inches of rain annually, and on the eastern side of the island about 4 or 5 inches—a dense forest, a tropical country. The gentleman has cause to believe that somebody would build this road?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes, sir; we made inquiry into that.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman is satisfied, I will vote for it, but the Lord knows, with this population and considering the country, I would not want to buy any of the bonds or take any stock, and I merely want to suggest to the gentleman, considering the conditions down there, if there is the faintest hope that anybody will furnish the money to build this road it is not necessary to burden the legislation with something by way of precedent constituted by the American Congress to prevent the watering of that stock.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I fully agree with the gentleman from Illinois, and I will say this, that I entertained the doubt that the gentleman does that anybody would finance this enterprise, and I was informed by my friend from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] that friends of his in Baltimore who had investigated the question said they would aid in the financing of it. I fully agree with the gentleman that this bill ought not to be weighted down with any further limitations or conditions. I hope that this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] will be voted down and the amendment as proposed by the governor of Hawaii, which we have incorporated in this bill, will be adopted by this House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily in this country a city council or village board determines the franchise of a street railway, but here, having granted a Territorial legislature to the Territory of Hawaii and reserving our authority over franchises, we quibble and quarrel over the terms of a franchise for the building of a street railway in a town in Hawaii. Now, there is not a Member in this House who would invest one dollar. If it were in this country, the town of Hilo would determine the terms on which the company would build under the act of the legislature, but we will not permit the town of Hilo to say anything about it; we will not permit the Territorial legislature to determine in regard to it; but we seek to inject into the bill every fad and fancy of every gentleman who has particular or peculiar views in regard to street railway franchises. If anybody is willing to put his money into this street car company upon the terms of this bill as reported from the committee, it is a tribute, not to the intelligence but to the fairy imagination of the people who invest in it.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I would like for the Speaker to hear me on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have to be heard. The Chair did not understand the gentleman's point of order, either because the gentleman did not fully state it or because the Chair did not understand it; but the gentleman's point of order against the first amendment was good. There is a ruling exactly in point on page 388, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents, section 5766, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] was in the chair in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That identical question was raised and was passed on, and the Chair sustains the point of order on the first amendment, and will now put the question on the second amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the second amendment again reported.

The second amendment was again reported.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There is an amendment from line 4 down to 18, an amendment which the House has already adopted, and this is an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is true; the gentleman did not raise a point of order on the other.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. But I raise it now.

Mr. LEWIS. Too late, and too late on the other, too. The gentleman accepted the other amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. As soon as I heard the amendment read, I asked to have it reported; I did not know what the amendment was.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, explicitly I declined to reserve my right to object to this measure and may have influenced in some degree another——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. LEWIS) there were—ayes 6, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 17 by adding the following after line 18, on page 19: "No member of the association, or of any assignee or successor of the same, and no stockholder or officer of any corporation securing any or all of the rights herein granted to the association, shall become interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract made by the association, its assignees or successors, for the construction of any part of the railway or for the supply of its rolling stock.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I agree to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] be voted on in view of the statement he made about his not objecting to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland be voted on. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. LEWIS. That is not the one.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The first amendment was agreed to. Is that the condition of the Journal?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to be clear about that.

The SPEAKER. Which amendment now are the gentlemen talking about?

Mr. LEWIS. The first amendment, on page 13, section 7. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] accepted that. I want to know if that is the condition of the record.

The SPEAKER. Let us find out how the matter stands. How many amendments did the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] offer?

Mr. LEWIS. I offered two, on as many separate sheets.

The SPEAKER. There were two amendments on one sheet?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, then, offered three.

Mr. MANN. The first amendment the gentleman offered was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The first amendment the gentleman from Maryland offered was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. But this situation arose, as I understood it: The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], after accepting it, suggested a point of order against it.

The SPEAKER. That was on the first amendment on the second sheet.

Mr. MANN. That was the $50,000 amendment.

The SPEAKER. The $50,000 amendment. Is that the one? The first amendment was adopted without any contest.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Now, we understand, Mr. Speaker, we can go ahead.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment on the second sheet.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; not the first amendment on the second sheet but the amendment on the separate sheet.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's first amendment was agreed to without any objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman does not care to have the amendment on the second sheet voted on.

The SPEAKER. Then the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] is superfluous.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 8 by adding the following after line 17, page 14: "If at any time there shall be constituted by or with the authority of Congress of the United States a public utility board for the regulation of public utility corporations in the Territory of Hawaii, the power of making the regulations given by this section shall be vested in said board."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The committee agrees to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The committee can not agree to anything.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I wanted to state to the Chair the agreement between the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the committee.

The SPEAKER. That is all right.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 15 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, strike out all of lines 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, just a word with reference to this amendment. Section 16 exempts all the property of this corporation from taxation for a period of 10 years. I am opposed to this, not because I believe this exemption would mean exorbitant profits to this street railway, for I share the belief with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and others to a very large degree that it is very questionable, indeed, whether this is an undertaking that offers any prospects of financial success. But, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the principle, either in this bill or in any other bill, of exempting property of any public utility from taxation. In the first place, if this corporation can not offer sufficient inducements without this provision, then it ought not to exist at all. If it is going ahead to create property there, then this exemption from taxation means a bonus to this company by the taxpayers of the Territory of Hawaii for the construction of this road. It is wrong in principle. I am opposed to its being in this bill, and I shall oppose it in any bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 18, page 19, insert as a separate paragraph: "That the construction and operation of the railways shall, except as otherwise provided herein, be at all times under the supervision and control of the board."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I would just like to know what that amendment is an amendment to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Reserving a point of order, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. If I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee for just a moment, I wish to say that I find no provision in the bill, from a rather hurried examination of it, relative to the general supervision and control of these operations. From a hasty reading of the bill I do find some provisions in regard to the supervision by the board of certain matters; that is, the board can regulate the speed of the cars and other matters. There are some provisions with regard to supervision to be exercised by the governor, but there is nothing in the bill, so far as I have been able to find, that provides for a general supervision of the operations, either as to construction or as to operations subsequent to the construction, by anybody; and the gentleman will note that there are many acts to be performed under this bill that should be supervised by somebody.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Did the gentleman hear the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]?

Mr. MONDELL. As I understood the gentleman's amendment, it provided for supervision in case there should be a public-utilities board established in the future. But there is already a board of supervisors in the county of Hilo, island of Hawaii, and that board, or the municipal corporation itself, if there be one, should have general supervision and control of these operations.

Who is to say whether the trolley wires shall be elevated above the street the distance required by this bill? Who shall say how the poles shall be placed and how the wires shall be strung? Who is to supervise this work as the authorities of a municipal corporation always supervise such work of construction?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, let me read to the gentleman the eighth section of the bill, on page 14. It provides—

That the association, with the approval of the governor, shall make reasonable and just regulations regarding the operation of the railway, and on failure of the association to make the same within a reasonable time after the receipt of written notice from the governor so to do the board, with the approval of the governor, may make such regulations. All regulations may be changed from time to time as the public interests may demand, at the discretion of the governor.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that section covers the matters that I have in mind at all. Those regulations would be as to how frequently the cars shall run, and matters of that kind.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. COOPER. Do I understand the gentleman from Wyoming to ask who would regulate the height of trolley wires? That is found on page 11, under section h.

Mr. MONDELL. There is a provision there that the trolley wires shall be of a certain height. There are many provisions in the bill as to what the company shall do, but——

Mr. COOPER. It says "with the approval of the governor," in section 8.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me call the gentleman's attention to a very important provision on page 16—the provision which grants to the association the "right of way along and across, under and over the roads, streets, bridges, and thoroughfares in the county of Hawaii for such poles, wires, conductors, and conduits as may be necessary," and so forth. There is no place in the bill where there is any provision as to who shall supervise that work and the exercise of that very wide authority to use the streets of the city of Hilo, and there should be somebody, some individual or some corporate body, whose duty it would be to supervise that grant—that very wide grant of power and authority.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is done in section 9. That shall be done by the board of supervisors of the county of Hawaii.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to ask the gentleman this question, if he will examine section 4—whether he does not think supervision is properly given by that section?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not pretend to have gone over the bill as carefully as the gentleman who prepared it, but I find this: That in various places in the bill there are provisions for the supervision of certain acts, but there is no general authority in the bill for any general supervisory power and control—none whatever—and there are many acts provided for which would be absolutely without any supervision at all unless there was an amendment.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will ask the gentleman further if the provisions of the bill are not so constructed as to give general supervisory power over all acts? If it is not given by implication, it is specifically provided for by section 4.

Mr. MONDELL. No; just one moment. If this were a municipal corporation making this grant, the supervisory control of the municipal corporation would follow as a matter of course. But Congress is making this grant, and Congress has no such supervisory control, and in the absence of a specific provision for such supervisory control there is none, and they could go on the streets and tear them up as they saw fit, and they could place their poles along the streets as they saw fit, and the only way by which that could be controlled would be by bringing a suit in court.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman would not make that statement if he had read the bill.

Mr. DAVENPORT. The gentleman, if he will read the bill, will find that the power is vested in the board of supervisors.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will point out any place where there is a general power of supervision vested in the board of supervisors or anyone, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Section 4 provides that—

(a) The railway, together with all its branches, parts, and connections, shall be thoroughly and substantially constructed according to the best modern practice, with rails level with the surface of the street where laid, and in such manner as to cause the least obstruction to the free use of the streets, roads, and places where laid; and the location in the streets shall be such as may be directed or approved by the board, subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. MONDELL. There are certain definite provisions and specific things with regard to which the board has control.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Each provision is subdivided.

Mr. MONDELL. But there is no supervision or control at all except where it is specifically provided here and there.

Mr. DAVENPORT. You will find in another subdivision in relation to the superintendent where it says that it shall be done so as not to interfere with the water pipes or the sewers or the public travel.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but there are many things which would occur in connection with the use of the streets with regard to which there is no supervision.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is there any doubt that, except as provided in this bill, if it becomes a law, all of these matters are subject to the jurisdiction of the Territorial legislature with reference to the use of the streets and everything else in connection therewith?

Mr. MONDELL. I have doubt about it, inasmuch as we have withheld from the Territorial legislature the power of providing for franchises.

Mr. MANN. Providing for franchises, but we have not taken from them the control over their streets.

Mr. MONDELL. But Congress has given the company a very broad authority without any limitation whatever as to general supervisory control; I doubt if the Territory of Hawaii would have anything to say about it. It has been deemed necessary in several places in the bill to give the board specific control, but there is no provision made for general control and supervision. If it is necessary to make the provisions for control which have been made here, is not it necessary to make provision for control in all cases?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that, as I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming, it is only to the effect that except as otherwise provided in the bill the regulation shall be made by this board. Now, if the gentleman from Virginia is correct in his construction, this amendment can do no possible harm. If the gentleman from Wyoming is correct in his construction, then certainly the amendment ought to be in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Would it not directly and flatly conflict with the provision that gives the governor authority over certain regulations?

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all, because that is excepted.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment specifically provides "except as otherwise provided in the act."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired. Does the gentleman from Virginia withdraw his point of order?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes; and I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, on page 12, line 22, I move to strike out the word "four" and insert the word "five," so that the bill will read "children under 5 years of age shall be allowed to ride free," and so forth.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 22, strike out the word "four" and insert the word "five."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to amend the amendment by striking out the word "five" and inserting the word "six."

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the rule that obtains generally throughout the country on that subject?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If my memory serves me right, it is for children under 7 in Chicago.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will say that the prevailing rule is 5 years, as I am informed, and if so, I will say that that amendment will be agreeable.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] says it is 6 years in his State and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY] says it is 5 in Massachusetts, and I thought that 5 would be equitable and right.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 18, line 8, by striking out the words "10 years" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "1 year."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, line 8, strike out the words "10 years" and insert the words "1 year."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the opinion of the committee was that the very best which this road could expect to do would be to pay a dividend at the end of 10 years; that it would be at least 10 years before it could pay running expenses and a dividend. For that reason we thought it right to exempt the road from taxation for 10 years. The bill provides that at the end of 20 years, if the people of Hilo want to own this road, they can condemn it and take it for the actual cost of the road, plus 20 per cent, the cost to be ascertained by a commission appointed by the authorities there. The evidence was undisputed; those who appeared before the committee and those who wrote to the committee were of one accord—that they could not expect this road to pay its running expenses for a number of years, and that in all probability it would not pay the running expenses for 10 years; and in order to encourage the enterprise, in order to get the road built for the convenience and benefit of the people, in order to enable the incorporators to raise the money to put it there, we exempted it from taxation for 10 years, and we think that that exemption ought to be given to them.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think any corporation should undertake to build any great enterprise unless it has funds sufficient to pay the ordinary taxes which the Government imposes on property, and for that reason I hope this amendment will pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were 12 ayes and 33 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, on the same page, 18, line 8, I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The amended bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit with instructions, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LEWIS moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Territories with instructions to report forthwith with the following amendment:

"Amend section 17 by striking out, in line 5, page 19, the words 'and fifty thousand dollars additional,' and amend section 17 by adding after the word 'of,' in line 4, page 19, the following:

"'One hundred and fifteen per cent of.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit with instructions.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEWIS) there were—ayes 4, noes 36.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, the Clerk will call the roll, and the question will be taken on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 29, nays 192, answered "present" 12, not voting 159, as follows:

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. JAMES. I voted "no." I would like to change my vote and vote "present."

The name of Mr. MCCALL was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. SCULLY. I voted "no." I would like to change my vote.

The name of Mr. BROWNING was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors, and further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with. The question is on passing the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BROWN was granted leave of absence for three days, on account of sickness in family.

GRANT OF LANDS, SCHOOL PURPOSES, POWELL, WYO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21221) making a grant of lands for school purposes in block No. 31, town site of Powell, Shoshone reclamation project, Wyoming.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue patent conveying block 31, town site of Powell, on Shoshone reclamation project, Wyo., to school district No. 2, Park County, Wyo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS FOR SCHOOL SECTION WITHIN AN INDIAN OR OTHER RESERVATION, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 19344) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, in regard to this bill, the title of which has just been read by the Clerk (H. R. 19344,), the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has not had time to examine it, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 19344 be passed without prejudice.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Under the rule is it competent to make such a disposition of a bill upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair thinks it is.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to know whether passing a bill upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar with a view to returning to it is in accordance with the spirit of the unanimous-consent rule?

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair thinks it is, and that has been the uniform practice. The first time the question arose was on a bill that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. CLAYTON] had up, and for some reason or other he was detained at his room or somewhere else, and that bill was at the head of the calendar, and it was asked that it be passed over until he could return to the Hall, and the matter was thrashed out, and it was decided that that was the proper practice, and it has been continued ever since.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Unanimous Consent Calendar is to give precedence to bills in the order in which they are filed. Now, if this bill is not disposed of, then it takes precedence over other bills that probably would be considered. And the fact it is disposed of in a different way instead of as provided by the rule, if objection is made and it goes off, we are putting it back again——

Mr. MANN. This bill has already been stricken from the calendar once and could not go back again. That is the reason the gentleman asked to have it passed over. I will be frank with the gentleman. I would not let it go through by unanimous consent to-day but the gentleman says he has a letter from the Department of the Interior that might and may persuade me so that I will not object hereafter.

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, I have no objection, of course, under those circumstances.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to passing this bill without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

USE OF RECLAMATION FUND IN CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE ACROSS SNAKE RIVER, WYO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21171) authorizing the use of the reclamation fund in the construction of a bridge across Snake River, Wyo.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21171) authorizing the use of the reclamation fund in construction of a bridge across Snake River in Wyoming.

Whereas in the administration of the reclamation law the United States Reclamation Service has constructed at the outlet of Jackson Lake, Wyo., and the source of the Snake River a retaining storage dam; and

Whereas the use of this dam to store the flood waters of Jackson Lake and the Snake River watershed, and the release of the surplus waters thus stored into the channel of the Snake River for utilization in irrigating lands under reclamation projects, maintains high water in the Snake River at all periods of the year; and

Whereas through the maintenance of high water the Snake River, previously fordable for a large part of each year, in its course through the Jackson Hole region is now rendered unfordable at all times, and at times when large volumes of water have been discharged existing ferries have been swept away and rendered useless, and the residents of the Jackson Hole region and the towns and settlements of Jackson, Grovont, Cherry, Elk, and Zenith cut off from the railroad and other communication for freight and travel: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use such portion of the reclamation fund, as may be necessary for the construction of a bridge across Snake River, at a point in township 41 or 42 north, range 116 or 117 west, Wyoming, to be determined by the Reclamation Service, with the view of best serving the people of Jackson Hole and adjacent territory in Wyoming.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if I can get some information from the distinguished gentleman who introduced the bill. This bill proposes to pay for one half of the construction of a bridge out of the reclamation fund. The Senate passed a bill the other day, I believe—I am not sure whether it passed, but the gentleman can inform me, perhaps—to pay for this bridge out of the general funds in the Treasury. Am I correct?

Mr. MONDELL. I know such a bill was reported, but I am not informed whether it passed or not.

Mr. MANN. I took it for granted the gentleman would be informed if it had passed.

Mr. MONDELL. The last I heard of it it had not passed, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It was up for consideration in the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not know as to that.

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman, as usual, is well informed.

Mr. MANN. But I would not say it passed, but that is my recollection, and I had supposed the gentleman would know. Now, there is quite a difference whether this bridge shall be paid for out of the reclamation fund or whether it shall be paid out of the general fund. I would like to ask the gentleman whether if this bridge is made necessary by reason of reclamation work, as stated in the report, and is to be paid out of the reclamation fund, why it should not be charged to the reclamation projects which cause the necessity for it?

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman desire an answer to all the questions or the last question first?

Mr. MANN. I do not care how the gentleman answers them.

Mr. MONDELL. It is my personal opinion, and that was the view taken by the House committee, that the bridge should be constructed out of the reclamation fund, and it would follow without any specific provision in the bill, I think, that it would be charged to the projects using the water.

Mr. MANN. Then would the gentleman be willing to accept this amendment: "Provided further, That the amount of the reclamation fund so used shall be charged as a part of the cost of the reclamation project or projects, the construction and development of which have caused the necessity"?

Mr. MONDELL. I certainly should have no objection, because I have assumed if the bill passes that is what would follow—that is, that the Reclamation Service would have no other option than to charge it to the project using the water.

Mr. MANN. I think if the gentleman is willing to accept the amendment I shall not object, although I am very much afraid when the bill goes over to the other end of the Capitol and then comes back again it will come back with all the bill stricken out after the enacting clause and providing that the bridge shall be constructed out of the General Treasury funds.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think we should have a change of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The report on this bill shows the construction of this dam has affected the conditions of travel only two months in the year, or two and a half months. Why should the United States pay one-half the cost of building the bridge?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman indicates that he gives greater weight to the report of the Reclamation Service than to the report of the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be true, but I assume those who made this investigation for the Reclamation Service were at least on the ground, and the members of the committee were not and could not have been.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, because I am very familiar with the conditions——

Mr. MANN. There are instances where a bridge is only needed one month in the year, yet it has to be built.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not be needed when this railroad is completed, and they think it may be built in a short time.

Mr. MONDELL. The building of a railway has nothing to do with it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is another matter. The gentleman suggests he is willing to have the cost of providing the bridge apportioned to those who have taken up lands under the reclamation projects. If I read the report correctly, the lands irrigated from this particular reservoir are located outside the State of Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but I will say to the gentleman that on the reclamation project known as the Shoshone project in my State the Reclamation Service has spent over $60,000 for roads and bridges, which have been charged to settlers in my State.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If they have that power, why not exercise it in this instance?

Mr. MONDELL. They feel that they have reached a rather shadowy zone. They think they have the power to do this, but the bridge is some distance from the reservoir on one side and some distance from the land to be irrigated on the other, and the service did not feel, under the circumstances, like taking the responsibility for doing what it would have done if the crossing had been in the immediate vicinity of the work, although the fact that there is some distance between the reservoir and the land irrigated should not in justice change the situation at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What per cent of the portion of the lands irrigated would be affected and to what extent would the value of the lands that would be taken be affected?

Mr. MONDELL. I assume there are at least 200,000 acres of land that will be irrigated from the waters of the Snake River.

Mr. MANN. They can afford to build a bridge.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then this bill provides that this money should be paid out of the reclamation fund. My recollection is that the reclamation fund was depleted, and the Congress was required to advance not less than $20,000,000, and the issuance of bonds for the purpose of obtaining that money was authorized.

Mr. MANN. The reclamation fund is constantly having money poured into it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And more constantly having it poured out.

Mr. MONDELL. It would simply be charged against the project, and there is money in the fund.

Mr. MANN. I believe in charging money against the project.

Mr. FERRIS. I would like to hear the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois again. I think I am opposed to the whole performance here.

Mr. MANN. The amendment is:

Provided further, That the amount of the reclamation fund so used shall be charged as a part of the cost of the reclamation project or projects, the construction or development of which have caused the necessity for such bridge.

Mr. FERRIS. Are the settlers in that particular project able to have any more piled to their present charge per acre for irrigation service?

Mr. MANN. If we believe——

Mr. FERRIS. I am opposed to passing a bill by unanimous consent, letting the reclamation fund, which belongs to the various States, any longer to be diverted and sent off on different missions. Surely no one intended the reclamation fund to be used for bridges, roads, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. That is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. For instance, our State contributed about $6,000,000 to this fund and as yet has never had anything expended. We are anxiously asking that something be expended. Here we are appropriating $20,000,000 to reimburse a depleted fund, and they come along here and ask to build a bridge out of it.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman has studied the question, he will see that we are not depleting the fund. The gentleman certainly does not want the irrigation of lands to interfere with the highways of those not interested or helped. Now, let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that no reclamation project has been built in the United States where it was not necessary to build roads and bridges. The gentleman certainly would not have the Reclamation Service tear up the whole countryside, dig great channels, and not restore the roads as they were. And the service is doing that all the time.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman would feel most gracious if he could get one cent in his State for irrigation and we would build our own roads and bridges.

Mr. MANN. That is what they all say in advance.

Mr. FERRIS. There is yet much land to irrigate, and here you are trying to build bridges out of the funds of the people and the Federal Government reclamation funds. No such diversion ought to be thought of or proposed seriously.

Mr. MONDELL. The settlers pay for this bridge.

Mr. MANN. As to the question of the lake, if the reservoir backs up the water so a bridge must be built, it seems to me it is properly chargeable to the cost of that project.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I was not in the committee when this bill was reported. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, will every cent of the cost of that project be reimbursable and be returned to the reclamation fund, as the reclamation laws provide?

Mr. MANN. It will.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, outside of the State of Wyoming.

Mr. MANN. It will all be returned, the same as in other reclamation projects.

Mr. FERRIS. We will have, you think, as good an opportunity to get this back as we have the other spent for legitimate reclamation?

Mr. MANN. A better opportunity to get this back than most of them.

Mr. FERRIS. There is such a thing as demanding so much of a settler he will never pay any part of it. What does the project cost per acre in this particular project?

Mr. MONDELL. There are three or four projects in Idaho, and I think the highest is comparatively low.

Mr. MANN. The limit of this expenditure is $18,000.

Mr. FERRIS. This is not to be taxed to three or four different projects, is it?

Mr. MONDELL. It will be charged to the land watered by water from the Snake River impounded in Jackson Lake.

Mr. FERRIS. Did the gentleman, or did he not, accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; because I think that would do what would occur in any event.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will yield——

Mr. FERRIS. I have not the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The committee understood, as the gentleman from Wyoming said, that it would be chargeable to that project or to projects irrigated by the river below this project, and if there is any question about it, I think it would be perfectly proper to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FERRIS. If the amendment is adopted, so that the reclamation fund will be reimbursed, what is the amount per acre on top of the reclamation charge?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We have not figured that out. If there are 200,000 acres and you distribute $18,000 over them, you can figure it out.

Mr. FERRIS. There probably is not that much. What acreage will this be assessed against?

Mr. MONDELL. I think one Government project on that river has 150,000 acres, and one of the private projects has almost as much, and there are other projects on the river besides.

Mr. FERRIS. What would be the legal effect of incorporating an amendment on this bill now imposing a charge on the settlers after they already had an irrigation ditch constructed for them? How could we legally impose such a condition upon them?

Mr. MONDELL. Those charges are being added all the time.

Mr. FERRIS. I have this in mind: Suppose I, as a settler, go into an irrigation scheme with the Federal Government, and I agree to reimburse the Federal Government for its outlay in 10 annual installments, and the Federal Government agrees with me that the cost will not be more than $60 an acre, or whatever the cost may be—a definite sum. Then can such an amendment as the gentleman from Illinois suggests add on five, ten, or fifteen dollars more per acre without my consent?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They are doing that all the time.

Mr. FERRIS. If that be the case, this will result in only one thing, and that is the diverting of $18,000 from the reclamation fund.

Mr. MONDELL. It is not diversion of the fund, but use of the fund for an entirely proper purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. This is a part of the legitimate cost of the project.

Mr. FERRIS. But what has the gentleman to say about this proposition: Suppose five years ago the Federal Government went out into Wyoming, or into Arizona, or wherever it is, and put in a reclamation project under a contract that they should have that irrigation done at $34 an acre, for example. What right has the Federal Government to come in later and say, "You must pay your proportionate part for a bridge costing $18,000 in addition"?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MONDELL. Would not the Reclamation Service under such circumstances have the right to change the amount to be paid by each settler?

Mr. MANN. The Reclamation Service has not the power to do that.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. But the Reclamation Service can not foresee the total cost of these projects. A great many things arise after they begin construction and after they have contracted with the farmers and water users—things that they can not foresee—and the cost of the project may be much more than it was estimated it would be in the beginning. And yet the contracts with the water users are being adjusted from time to time to cover these additional costs, and this is not at all unusual. Really this is an advantage to——

Mr. FERRIS. How many bridges has the Government built out of the reclamation fund, in the past 10 years, of $60,000,000 they have expended?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. About 32 projects are being constructed——

Mr. FERRIS. How many bridges?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I do not know as to that.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I think I can throw some light on that if the gentlemen care to know. The building of bridges is a common necessity in these irrigation works. For instance, in the Bellefourche project in my own State there is what is called the main diversion canal, which carries the water from the river to the storage reservoir—6 miles—and that crosses a public highway, because of the existing public highways, every mile. It goes through a country where no bridges were needed until they cut that deep and wide canal, and in the construction of the irrigation enterprise the Government would, of course, put a bridge over the canal on every highway where they constructed a canal through; otherwise the highways could not be used.

Mr. FERRIS. Do they do that as a part of the original project or after the project is completed?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. They did it as part of the original project.

Mr. FERRIS. That is another matter altogether and not in point. The facts stated do not fit this case at all. This is simply a case of diverting funds, and it ought not to be done now or in the future. There has been too much favoritism already in that fund. I think, Mr. Speaker, we had better not divert any more of this fund. If they have general power to build roads and bridges it ought to be taken from them at once. As soon as I get time I think I shall interest myself in that matter and try to repeal any such powers.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman that roads and bridges are constructed, being built by the Reclamation Service, where in the construction of their works they flood roads or otherwise render them difficult or impassable. In this particular case the service does not consider the damage done so direct that they are justified in building the bridge or contributing toward it without the direction of Congress.

Mr. FERRIS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

RAILWAY THROUGH CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS, OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23837) to authorize the Clinton & Oklahoma Western Railway Co. to construct and operate a railway through certain public lands, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Clinton & Oklahoma Western Railway Co., a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Oklahoma be, and the same is hereby, empowered to survey, locate, construct, maintain, and operate a railway, telegraph and telephone lines through the following public lands, to wit: The southwest quarter of section 29, township 14 north, range 20 west of the Indian meridian, and the southeast quarter of section 30, township 14 north, range 20 west of the Indian meridian, in the State of Oklahoma, upon such line or lines as may be determined and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to occupy and use for all purposes of railway, telegraph and telephone lines, and for no other purpose, a right of way 50 feet in width through said public lands, reserved for Indian school purposes, with the right to use such additional ground where cuts and fills may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 100 feet in width, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no part of the land herein authorized to be occupied shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used such portion shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That before the said railway company shall be permitted to enter upon any part of said public lands a description by metes and bounds of the land herein authorized to be occupied or used shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the said railway company shall comply with such other regulations and conditions in the maintenance and operation of said road as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is to grant a right of way to a railroad company to construct and operate a railway through certain public lands. There is no provision requiring that any compensation shall be paid by the railway company for the use of this 150-foot strip. Would not the gentleman from Oklahoma be willing to amend the bill so that the railway company shall pay what shall be reasonably fair for this land?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I will state that on the 22d day of June, 1910, Congress enacted a law granting a right of way through an Indian reservation to an electric railroad without requiring the company to pay for the right of way. In drawing up this bill I followed the precedent of that bill.

Mr. MANN. How wide was that right of way?

Mr. MORGAN. That was 50 feet.

Mr. MANN. And this is 150 feet.

Mr. MORGAN. No; only where they have sidetracks. It is 100 feet following the general route of the railway.

Mr. MANN. This is 100 feet, then. The gentleman thinks that because we imprudently gave away a strip 50 feet wide, therefore we should imprudently give away another strip 100 feet wide?

Mr. MORGAN. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that this little reservation is probably 50 or 60 miles from a railway. There is a company trying to build a little railroad up through that country. The citizens and the farmers generally donate the roadway and the towns give a big bonus. It is difficult to get capital to work there. I do not think the railroad would have any serious objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I have already discussed the matter with the gentleman from Oklahoma and told him that I should object unless he offered an amendment. I presume the gentleman has the amendment, and if he does not offer it I shall object.

Mr. MORGAN. In view of the possibility of it being objected to on that ground, I have prepared an amendment, which I will offer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the further consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "lands," insert the words "for Indian school purposes."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 8, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the words "one hundred."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, after the word "roadbed," insert the words "and sidetracks," and in line 13, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and fifty."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 2, after the word "the," insert the word "construction."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 4, page 3, by striking out the period after the word "interior," and insert the following words, to wit, "and pay for such roadway the appraised value therefor, which shall be ascertained under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the proceeds thereof shall be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the use and benefit of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe school.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman if the word "roadway" includes the sidetracks as well as the roadway in his amendment? It simply says "the roadway." I would like to ask whether that includes the side tracks?

Mr. MANN. There would be no side tracks unless there was a station.

Mr. MORGAN. I should think the side tracks would be a part of the roadway.

Mr. FOSTER. Would not the gentleman be willing to amend the amendment by including side tracks?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is necessary. The only difference is that the ordinary roadway is 100 feet wide, and where there are side tracks required it is 150 feet wide, so it is all roadway; the whole matter is under the control and discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FOSTER. The only question is whether the word "roadway" includes all the side tracks.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think if the gentleman examines lines 12 and 13, page 2, where it provides for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed and side tracks not exceeding 150 feet in width, he will see that they are both included.

Mr. FOSTER. It says "the roadway 100 feet," and then it speaks about the "roadbed and side tracks."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman understands that it is all the same construction, the only difference being that where there are side tracks the roadway is 150 feet wide, and the other parts of the road are only 100 feet wide.

Mr. FOSTER. As long as you use the words "roadbed and side tracks" it seems to me that the words "side tracks" ought to go into the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the gentleman from Oklahoma willing to include the words "side tracks" in his amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "roadway" the words "and side tracks."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "roadway," in the first line of the amendment, the words "and side tracks."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amended amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COUNCIL FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1309) to establish a council of national defense.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I will object. If the gentleman from Alabama wishes, I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the right to object for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Alabama a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] both reserve the right to object.

Mr. HAY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he would object to having this bill, in the event it is now considered by the House, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs? In view of the fact that there is more of the national defense under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs than there is under the committee which considered this bill, does not the gentleman think that it ought to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. HOBSON. Does the gentleman mean that it shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for a report?

Mr. HAY. Yes; referred to the committee for its consideration.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state what changes or amendments he would like made to it?

Mr. HAY. It is impossible for me to do that, but I would like to have the Committee on Military Affairs have an opportunity to consider the bill and to make any changes in it that the Committee on Military Affairs might deem advisable.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman is perfectly correct in saying that the Committee on Military Affairs is very largely involved in the bill, as is a number of other committees, including the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Appropriations, as well as the Naval Committee. Of course, any one of these committees would have legitimate jurisdiction. I requested its reference to the Naval Committee. I do not see why the gentleman should ask it to be sent to his committee any more than to have it sent to the various other committees involved. I would have no objection, except as a matter of time.

Mr. HAY. I would have no objection to its being considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think it ought to be sent to the Committee on Public Safety? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAY. Yes; if there was such a committee, I think it should be. But if the gentleman objects to that course being taken, I should be compelled to object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman recognizes that if it is referred to the Committee on Military Affairs that is equivalent to its not being considered.

The SPEAKER. The matter is not debatable. The gentleman from Virginia objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

MAKING ASHTABULA, OHIO, A SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2228) to establish Ashtabula, Ohio, a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Cuyahoga, Ohio, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Ashtabula, Ohio, be, and the same is hereby, established a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Cuyahoga, Ohio, and that the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the said subport of Ashtabula, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING APPARATUS ON OCEAN-GOING STEAMERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24025) to amend sections 4400 and 4488 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the inspection of steam vessels, and section 1 of an act approved June 24, 1910, requiring apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean-going steamers.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4400 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4400. All steam vessels navigating any waters of the United States which are common highways of commerce or open to general or competitive navigation, excepting public vessels of the United States, public vessels of other countries, and boats propelled in whole or in part by steam for navigating canals, shall be subject to the provisions of this title.

"And all foreign private steam vessels carrying passengers to or from any port of the United States to any other place or country shall be subject to the provisions of sections 4417, 4418, 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, 4470, 4471, 4472, 4473, 4479, 4482, 4488, 4489, 4496, 4497, 4499, and 4500 of this title, and shall be liable to visitation and inspection by the proper officer in any of the ports of the United States respecting any of the provisions of the sections aforesaid.

"That there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States the same fees for the inspection of foreign passenger steamers carrying passengers from the United States that any foreign nation shall charge the merchant vessels of the United States trading to the ports of such nationality: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have the power to waive at any time the collection of such fees upon due notice of the proper authorities of any country concerned that the collection of fees for the inspection of American steam merchant vessels has been discontinued."

SEC. 2. That section 4488 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4488. Every steamer navigating the ocean or any lake, bay, or sound of the United States shall be equipped with such lifeboats, floats, rafts, life preservers, ring buoys, water lights, ring-buoy lights, line-carrying projectiles, and the means of propelling them, and such other life-saving and fire-fighting devices as will best secure the safety of all persons on board such vessel in case of disaster, and in addition thereto steamers navigating the ocean shall be provided and equipped with a sufficient number of seaworthy lifeboats to carry and transport at one time every passenger and every member of the crew licensed to be carried on board such vessel, and every such vessel shall have such lifeboats provided and equipped with suitable boat-disengaging apparatus so arranged as to allow such boats to be safely launched while such vessel is under speed or otherwise, and so as to allow such disengaging apparatus to be operated by one person, disengaging both ends of the boat simultaneously from the tackles by which it may be lowered to the water; and every vessel shall be equipped with a search-light of sufficient power to be an efficient aid in the safe navigation of said vessel in the nighttime.

"The Board of Supervising Inspectors shall fix and determine by their rules and regulations the character and equipment of lifeboats, floats, rafts, life preservers, ring buoys, searchlights, water lights, ring-buoy lights, line-carrying projectiles and the means of propelling them, and such other life-saving and fire-fighting devices that shall be used on such vessels, and also the character and capacity of pumps or other appliances for freeing the steamer of water in case of heavy leakage, the capacity of such pumps or appliances being suitable to the navigation in which the steamer is employed, but shall have no discretion whatever with respect to the number of lifeboats on steamers navigating the ocean, such number to be determined solely by the actual capacity of such lifeboats to carry and transport at one time all of the passengers and members of the crew licensed to be carried on board the vessel.

"Every vessel subject to the provisions of this title shall, while in operation, carry one life preserver for each and every person allowed to be carried on said vessel by the certificate of inspection, including each member of the crew. It shall be unlawful for any such vessel to sail from any port of the United States without first obtaining from the local inspectors a certificate specifying the number of passengers and crew licensed to be carried on board, and that such vessel is fully equipped as hereinbefore provided.

"Every captain, owner, and charterer of such vessel, and, when the owner or charterer shall be an association or corporation, every executive officer and every resident general agent of such association or corporation for the time being actually charged with the control and management of the operation, equipment, or navigation of such vessel, who shall knowingly and willfully cause or allow or permit such vessel to sail from any port of the United States without being equipped as hereinbefore provided, and without obtaining the certificate hereinbefore provided, shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and may, in addition thereto, be imprisoned not exceeding 10 years, in the discretion of the court.

"Any person who knowingly or willfully manufactures or sells, or offers for sale, or has in his possession with intent to sell, life preservers containing metal or other nonbuoyant material for the purpose of increasing the weight thereof, or more metal or other such material than is reasonably necessary for the construction thereof, or who shall so manufacture, sell, offer for sale, or possess with intent to sell, any other material commonly used for the preservation of life or the prevention of fire on board vessels subject to the provisions of this title, which articles shall be so defective as to be inefficient to accomplish the purposes for which they are respectively intended and designed, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $2,000 and may, in addition thereto, in the discretion of the court, be imprisoned not exceeding five years."

SEC. 3. That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to require apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean steamers," approved June 24, 1910, be amended so that it will read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That from and after July 1, 1912, it shall be unlawful for any steamer of the United States or of any foreign country navigating the ocean or the Great Lakes and carrying 50 or more persons, including passengers or crew or both, to leave or attempt to leave any port of the United States unless such steamer shall be equipped with an efficient apparatus for radio communication, in good working order, capable of transmitting and receiving messages over a distance of at least 100 miles, day or night, under all conditions of atmospheric disturbance when it is safe for the operator to work the set. An auxiliary power supply, independent of the vessel's main electric power plant, must be provided which will enable the sending set for at least four hours to send messages over a distance of at least 100 miles, day or night, under all atmospheric conditions safe for an operator to work.

"The radio equipment must be in charge of two or more persons skilled in the use of such apparatus, one or the other of whom shall be on duty at all times while the vessel is being navigated. Such equipment, operators, the regulation of their watches, and the transmission and receipt of messages, except as may be regulated by law or international agreement, shall be under the control of the master, in the case of a vessel of the United States; and every willful failure on the part of the master to enforce at sea the provisions of this paragraph as to equipment, operators, and watches shall subject him to a penalty of $100.

"That the provisions of this section shall not apply to steamers plying only between ports less than 200 miles apart."

SEC. 4. That this act, so far as it relates to the Great Lakes, shall take effect on and after April 1, 1913, and so far as it relates to ocean-going cargo steamers shall take effect on and after July 1, 1913.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to make a statement. There are a number of us who, notwithstanding that this is a very important bill and one that ought to be considered at some length, will raise no objection to its consideration provided an amendment I desire to offer is acceptable to the committee. I have submitted this amendment to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], who is chairman of the committee, and he agrees with me that it ought to be adopted. I will read the amendment for the information of the House, and I wish to add that so far as I am concerned, if it can be understood that it will not be opposed, but will be accepted by the committee when the time comes to offer it, I shall not oppose consideration of the bill. Otherwise I shall feel obliged to do so.

I propose to amend section 2, on page 3, in line 18, by inserting after the word "ocean" the words:

Except such as are exclusively engaged in fishing, which steamers shall only be equipped with such boats as in the opinion of the Board of Supervising Inspectors are adequate to the safety of every member of the crew licensed to be carried on such fishing steamers.

The section as drawn would require that all fishing steamers on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts should be equipped with life boats, although they are not licensed to carry passengers, and, as a matter of fact, do not carry passengers. There are a great many important fishing industries located along both these coasts that own steamers engaged exclusively in the fishing business.

These steamers carry on the average, I think, from 25 to 30 men in their crews. Each one is equipped with large seine boats, built after the style of whaling boats, which are regarded by the sailors who use them as being stronger and safer than so-called lifeboats. If they were required to carry lifeboats they would have no place to put them unless they discarded the seine boats, and then, of course, they would have to go out of the fishing business. No one of the steamers carries less than two boats, and these boats are capable usually of carrying as many as 50 or 60 men. I know that some of them are capable of carrying 60 persons, and I think they are all about the same size and capacity, so that one of them is capable of carrying double the total number of the crew of the steamer. If the steamers were required to carry lifeboats, no sailor would ever in case of disaster enter one of them, for he would prefer the boat which he has been accustomed to all of his life.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would these boats not be construed to be lifeboats within the meaning of this act?

Mr. JONES. I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not?

Mr. JONES. I have not examined the law which this bill amends, but I think the lifeboats are required to be constructed in a certain way—with water-tight compartments, for instance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. I think the term "lifeboat" is a generic term, used to designate boats carried on vessels to be used in case of emergency.

Mr. JONES. These are not carried, I would say, primarily for the purpose of saving life, but for the purpose of laying out seines.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And are of the type of lifeboat?

Mr. JONES. They are so constructed that they are, in fact, excellent lifeboats, but I do not think of the type prescribed by the regulations for what are known in the law as lifeboats.

Mr. MANN. Would not this bill also require, if they were lifeboats, that the vessels should carry suitable boat-disengaging apparatus, so that these boats could be launched while the vessel was under full speed?

Mr. JONES. I think that is true.

Mr. MANN. That is impossible on a fishing boat.

Mr. JONES. Yes. And yet, of course, these steamers have apparatus by which their boats are lowered, because in the fishing season they are constantly lowered. The seines are laid out by the boats and not by the steamers. As soon as the lookout on the steamer reports the presence of a large school of fish, the boats are lowered into the water and they carry the seines around the fish. These seines are called purse nets, because they are constructed after the fashion of the old silk purse.

I am somewhat familiar with this subject, because the menhaden fishing industry is a very large and important one, and there are a great many fishing steamers owned in the district which I have the honor to represent. In one little town in my district there are perhaps as many as 20 or 30 of them owned.

Another objection to requiring fishing steamers to have lifeboats, although that which I have given is an insuperable objection, is that there is at this time such a demand for lifeboats that it would be impossible to procure them for several months to come. The fishing season would be over before they could possibly be procured, which would result in immense loss to the owners of the steamers and throw thousands of sailors and other employees out of work.

Mr. Speaker, therefore, with the understanding that the committee will accept my amendment when the time comes to offer it, I shall make no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I still reserve the right to object.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, the gentleman from Massachusetts, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to ask a question or two about this bill, but I think it is too important a measure to pass by unanimous consent. There are a good many things in it that probably ought to be amended and certainly ought to receive special consideration, therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object. I think he is aware that the calendar is in such a condition that it is hardly possible for us to get this measure up on a call of committees on Calendar Wednesday, and if there are any amendments suggested that meet the approval of the House I certainly will not oppose them, and as this is a matter of large public importance, one that demands consideration, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object. If he has any amendments to suggest, I am sure the House will take time to consider them, and if they meet the approval of the House they will be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Of course this conversation is taking place by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Well, I reserved the right to object. It is now after 3 o'clock and the House has been in session on the Unanimous Consent Calendar for four hours and the Unanimous Consent Calendar has not been half completed. If this bill were taken up for consideration, it will occupy the balance of this afternoon and for some time probably besides that, and it seems to me that is hardly fair to the other gentlemen who have bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I do not have any, but the gentleman has some other bills on the calendar, one of which I believe duplicates a part of this.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; it is not on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. I think this bill requires some things which the Government of the United States has no right to require and requires some of doubtful propriety, although I would have no objection whatever for the consideration of the bill if time would permit. Therefore I feel constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS RUSSELL FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER, MILLARD, KY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23461) authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Russell Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Millard, Ky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Russell Fork of the Big Sandy River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Millard, in the county of Pike, in the State of Kentucky, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the bill H. R. 24025 is stricken from the calendar.

BRIDGE AT OR NEAR COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21290) to amend an act to authorize a bridge at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa, approved February 1, 1908, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to authorize the Central Railroad & Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa, approved February 1, 1908, and amended February 27, 1909, and June 25, 1910, is hereby amended so as to give to the Central Bridge Co., of Council Bluffs, Iowa, all the authority and rights granted under said act, if the actual construction of the bridge authorized by said act is commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from California desire to ask something on this bill?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I would like to have an explanation from the gentleman in charge of it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would be pleased to give an explanation.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, in order that gentlemen may fully understand the nature of this bill and the reasons for introducing it I will have to make a brief statement concerning it. Council Bluffs, as gentlemen of the House are doubtless aware, has seven great trunk lines centering into it, largely engaged in transcontinental traffic. Five of those lines use this bridge exclusively, one uses it to a large extent, and one other of those lines, the Illinois Central, uses another bridge a considerable distance north of the city, which is not available for general purposes.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit me to suggest to him, I think two or three gentlemen are laying for me now to ask me why you have not built this bridge sooner and why you have had to ask for a renewal of the grant three or four times, and while the gentleman is on the floor I hope he will furnish me the information, or to the House, before they ask me to explain to them why it is you have had to come back three of four times for a renewal of the grant.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was just coming to the matter to which the gentleman alludes. The construction of a bridge there is a very important matter, and likewise it is a very expensive matter. It costs in the neighborhood of a million and a half dollars to build a bridge there, as I understand, and it is not easy to raise the money. This company has heretofore been given leave to construct this bridge, but was unable to raise the funds within the time fixed. It is a great undertaking to provide the necessary funds, and the reason for its necessity is that this bridge, which now extends to Council Bluffs and which is used by these trunk lines for all this enormous traffic which passes over it, is wholly insufficient for that purpose. Transcontinental traffic is often delayed as much as two hours—even mail trains and passenger trains—and sometimes longer on account of the congestion of traffic over this bridge. On account of the transcontinental traffic, either mail, passenger, or freight, we ought to be willing to give an opportunity to some one to construct another bridge, as the Union Pacific Railroad so far does not seem willing to give the additional facilities which are necessary to accommodate this traffic. The large amount of money that is to be raised and the fact that this local company seems to be the one that is undertaking, and the only one that is willing to undertake it, has made considerable difficulty in raising the necessary funds. About the time they got their arrangements made and completed the time expired, and——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. I see this act was authorized back on February 1, 1908. Has there been any effort made to build the bridge or any work done up to the present time?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There has been no work done or this act would not be necessary.

Mr. RAKER. Well, they might have started work and not completed it within the time of the act.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true, but there has been no work done except the work of endeavoring to finance it.

This proposition is not quite as alluring an opportunity to finance as we might wish, owing to the fact that the traffic over the bridge might be largely under the control of the Union Pacific Railway Co. Nevertheless, the urgent necessity for the bridge exists, not only for this railway traffic, but also as a means of communication between the cities. And it is the urgent desire of the cities of Omaha and Council Bluffs that this bridge be constructed, and that further opportunity should be given to this company to enable them to proceed with the construction.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman would consent, undoubtedly, to add at the end of this act, on line 3, page 2, the following amendment, to be known as section 2:

The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That was in the original act, which was amended.

Mr. RAKER. We want it in this act, too.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very well.

Mr. RAKER. You would consent to that, would you?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will consent to that.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is in the old act?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This is a new one now.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope, on account of the urgent need for this bridge, the gentleman will not insist on an objection. The company believes that it now has the arrangements made to obtain the necessary funds to construct the bridge.

Mr. ADAMSON. There seems to be no other reservation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer an amendment as to the right to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has already asked that that be added, and I consented to it. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] propose his amendment?

Mr. RAKER. We have not got the right yet to proceed.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have no objection to adding another section to the effect "that the right to alter, amend, or repeal is expressly reserved."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

Add a new section at the end of line 3, page 2, to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS RUSSELL FORK, MARROWBONE, KY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23460) authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Russell Fork of the Big Sandy River at Marrowbone, Ky.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Russell Fork of the Big Sandy River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Marrowbone, in the county of Pike, in the State of Kentucky, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16820) to revive the right of action under the captured and abandoned property acts, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right of action is hereby vested in the legal representatives of the original owner, if deceased, in the courts of the United States under the provisions of the captured and abandoned property acts, and the said acts be, and the same are hereby, revived for two years after the passage of this act, including all cases of seizure under said acts or under color thereof, without regard to the limitation in said acts: Provided, however, That when any of such claims have been filed with the Secretary of the Treasury or in the Court of Claims, or with Congress, or any committee thereof, and proof taken in relation thereto, the testimony so taken, whether upon the part of the United States or the claimant, when the witnesses are dead or can not be found, may be read in evidence as if taken regularly in the case.

SEC. 2. That the benefits of the foregoing section be, and the same are hereby, extended to those claimants whose claims have been adversely determined by said court upon the ground of disloyalty, and to all suits which have been instituted in said court for the proceeds of property under the provisions of said act of March 12, 1863, and the acts amendatory thereof, which have been heretofore dismissed by the Court of Claims for the want of jurisdiction thereof or other cause; and all suits for the proceeds of such property which have been so rejected or dismissed by said court for want of jurisdiction or other cause shall, on motion of the claimants or their heirs or legal representatives, be reinstated on the docket of the Court of Claims and proceeded with according to law under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That all judgments rendered under said act shall be paid to the original owner or to his legal representatives by the Secretary of the Treasury as soon as may be after the same is rendered, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. All petitions filed under this act and by authority thereof shall be verified by the petitioner, and he shall make oath therein that nothing has been received for or on account of the said claim, or any part thereof, from the United States; and all of said petitions shall be heard, tried, and disposed of by said court within two years after the passage of this act; and all judgments rendered under said act, and any and all payments thereon, shall be free from claims of assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency of the original owner of said claim.

SEC. 4. That any and all departments of the Government shall furnish to the claimant or the counsel for the United States, in any and all claims filed in said court by virtue of this act, copies duly certified, under seal of the department, of any and all papers or documents in the custody of the department in respect to said claims which contain evidence in support or defense thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in just what respect does this differ from the so-called Bartlett amendment, which was inserted in the judiciary act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Bartlett amendment provided for the revival of the right of action in all cases wherein the property was taken after June 1, 1865. And this revives the right of action in those cases where the property was taken before June 1, 1865. It is reported unanimously by the War Claims Committee.

Mr. MANN. And removes the ground of defense of disloyalty?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. As the chairman of the committee suggested to me, that defense never existed as to captured and abandoned property.

Mr. MANN. The bill expressly provides:

That the benefits of the foregoing section be, and the same are hereby, extended to those claimants whose claims have been adversely determined by said court upon the ground of disloyalty.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman will permit me, the decision of the court holding the question of disloyalty did not apply was subject to a great many definitions as to the charge of disloyalty.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Under the decisions of the court I do not think it would be necessary to prove loyalty in these cases. Reference to the decisions is made in the report of the committee, which reads as follows:

By the act of March 12, 1863, known as the captured and abandoned property act, and acts amendatory thereof, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to appoint special agents to collect captured and abandoned property in the States then in insurrection, the proceeds thereof to be paid into the Treasury of the United States. The act provided that the property to be collected under it "shall not include any kind or description which has been used, or which has been intended to be used, for waging or carrying on war against the United States, such as arms, ordnance, ships, steamboats, or other water craft, and the furniture, forage, military supplies, or munitions of war."

Nine districts were established, and an agent appointed for each. A large amount of property in the States in insurrection was seized and the proceeds, amounting to over $30,000,000, reported to the Secretary of the Treasury. The money was treated as a trust fund under the control of the Secretary. Under joint resolution approved March 30, 1868, it was provided that all moneys derived from the sale of captured and abandoned property "which have not already been actually covered into the Treasury shall immediately be paid into the Treasury of the United States." The balance covered into the Treasury under this resolution was $20,971,790.96.

The third section of the act of March 12, 1863, provided as follows:

"Any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims; and on proof to the satisfaction of said court of his ownership of said property, of his right to the proceeds thereof, and that he has never given any aid or comfort to the present rebellion, to receive the residue of such proceeds, after the deduction of any purchase money which may have been paid, together with the expense of transportation and sale of such property, and any other lawful expenses attending the disposition thereof." (12 Stat. L., 820.)

Under this provision a considerable number of claims were preferred to the Court of Claims and judgments recovered.

The following is believed to be a substantially correct statement of the payments that have been made from the amount covered into the Treasury under the said resolution of March 30, 1868:

On judgments under act of Mar. 12, 1863	$9,852,956.95
On judgments against Treasury agents	65,276.79
Disbursed for expenses under joint resolution of Mar. 30, 1868	242,140.34
Paid on special acts of relief	451,125.38
Paid by Secretary of Treasury under act of May 18, 1872	195,896.21
On judgment Court of Claims, Duffy, Report C. C., 24275	15,270.00
Under private act, 25 Stat., p. 1310	32,669.20
Under private act to Briggs, paid Mar. 20, 1894	88,104.21
Total	10,943,439.08

Deducting the above amount from the amount covered into the Treasury under the resolution of March 30, 1868, it will be seen that the sum now in the Treasury, and undisposed of, is $10,028,351.88.

The sole purpose of this bill is to extend the limitation upon the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims for a period of two years to entertain suits to recover the proceeds of the property of claimants where it can be established that such proceeds were actually covered into the Treasury of the United States under the act of March 12, 1863, and the acts amendatory thereof, and at the same time to safeguard every right and proper interest of the Government. This money does not belong to the Government. Proper legislation should be enacted with a view to distributing same to its owners.

Many questions arose under the act of March 12, 1863, such as, "What constituted proof of loyalty?" "When was the rebellion suppressed?" and "When did the two years expire within which suit could be commenced?" All of which were vigorously contested, and in which the court ruled strictly and rigidly against the claimants, rendering appeals to the Supreme Court necessary, and by which the owners of the property were delayed or deterred from preferring their claims under the act.

In December, 1869, the Supreme Court of the United States decided, in Anderson v. The United States (9 Wall., 56), that the rebellion was suppressed on the 20th of August, 1866, the date of President Johnson's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, with restoration of civil and political rights, and the limitation of the right to commence suit took effect or expired on the 20th of August, 1868. And it thus appears that the period in which the claimants could bring suits to recover the net proceeds of their property had expired more than one year prior to the decision fixing the date of the close of the war was announced and when it was too late for the claimants to derive any benefit from the decision.

It was not until 1871 that the Supreme Court gave full consideration to this act of March 12, 1863. In December of that year, in the case of Klein v. The United States (13 Wall., 128), the court decided—

(1) That it was not the intention of Congress by the enactment of that statute that the title to property seized under it should be divested from the loyal owners.

(2) That the proceeds of the property should go into the Treasury without change of ownership.

(3) That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal.

(4) That it was for the Government itself to determine whether those proceeds should be restored to the owner or not.

(5) That the President's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, with restoration of rights of property, and particularly that of July 4, 1868, was a decision on the part of the Government which decided affirmatively the right of the owners of such property to the proceeds thereof in the Treasury, and the restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned.

(6) And that "the Government constituted itself the trustee for those who by that act were declared entitled to the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, and for those whom it should thereafter recognize as entitled."

And in its opinion the court uses this language:

"That it was not the intention of Congress that the title to these proceeds should be divested absolutely out of the original owners of the property seems clear upon a comparison of different parts of the act.

"We have already seen that those articles which became by the simple fact of capture the property of the captor, as ordnance, munitions of war, and the like, or in which third parties acquired rights which might be made absolute by decree, as ships and other vessels captured as prize, were expressly excepted from the operation of the act, and it is reasonable to infer that it was the purpose of Congress that the proceeds of the property for which the special provision of the act was made should go into the Treasury without change of ownership. Certainly such was the intention in respect to the property of loyal men. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal appears probable from the circumstances that no provision is anywhere made for confiscation of it, while there is no trace in the statute book of intention to divest ownership of private property not excepted from the effect of this act otherwise than by proceedings for confiscation.

"It is thus seen that, except as to property used in actual hostilities, as mentioned in the first section of the act of March 12, 1863, no titles were divested in the insurgent States unless in pursuance of a judgment rendered after due legal proceedings. The Government recognized to the fullest extent the humane maxims of the modern law of nations, which exempt private property of noncombatant enemies from capture as booty of war. Even the law of confiscation was sparingly applied. The cases were few indeed in which the property of any not engaged in actual hostilities was subjected to seizure and sale.

"We conclude, therefore, that the title to the proceeds of the property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment, with the exceptions already noticed, was in no case divested from the original owner. It was for the Government itself to determine whether these proceeds should be restored to the owner or not. The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decided that question affirmatively as to all persons who availed themselves of the proffered pardon. * * *

"The restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned on application within two years from the close of the war. It was, in fact, promised for an equivalent. 'Pardon and restoration of political rights' were 'in return' for the oath and its fulfillment."

And then the court adds this strong language:

"To refuse it would be a breach of faith not less cruel and astounding than to abandon the freed people whom the Executive had promised to maintain in their freedom."

And in the prior case of the United States v. Padelford (9 Wall., 531) the court held that under the proclamation of pardon issued by President Lincoln, dated December 8, 1863, and the act of March 12, 1863, the Government is a trustee, holding the proceeds of the petitioner's property for his benefit, and having been fully reimbursed for all expenses incurred in that character loses nothing by the judgment which simply awards to the petitioner what is his own.

This decision in the Klein case settled the important questions in relation to the owners of captured and abandoned property and their rights under the act of March 12, 1863, and subsequent statutes relating to that subject, and it left nothing for Congress to do but provide a tribunal to which claimants might resort to establish their absolute right, in the language of the Supreme Court, to their share of the fund derived from the sale of such property.

In June, 1873, the case of Haycraft v. The United States was commenced in the Court of Claims to recover the net proceeds of certain property of the claimant. The suit was brought more than two years after the suppression of the rebellion, upon the theory that, as the Government held those proceeds in trust, as decided in the Klein case, it was liable outside of the act of March 12, 1863, upon an implied promise to pay to the claimant his portion of the fund; but the Court of Claims decided that the provision in that act limiting the right of the claimant to two years in which to prefer his claim was a limitation upon its jurisdiction, and thereupon it dismissed the petition. In January, 1875, this decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court, which held that the question was one of jurisdiction and not of limitation, and that, Congress having legislated upon the subject, the Court of Claims did not possess jurisdiction to entertain suits of this character under an implied contract to refund to claimants the net proceeds of their property in the Treasury. (Haycraft v. The United States, 22 Wall., 81.)

While the Haycraft case was pending in the Court of Claims, and before its decision by the Supreme Court, a large number of suits were commenced in the former court upon the theory on which the Haycraft case was based, viz, that the Government was liable to the claimants for the net proceeds of their property, under an implied contract, and these cases were all continued upon the dockets of the court till the decision of the Supreme Court, to which we have referred, when they were all dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Here, then, was the difficulty which existed—parties having rights which they were unable to enforce, for the reason that there was no tribunal to which to resort for their enforcement. It requires no argument to prove that a right may exist where there is no remedy for its enforcement, and this was, and is to-day, the precise predicament of all persons claiming an interest in the captured and abandoned property fund. While the power of the Court of Claims in the premises had ceased to exist, the rights of the claimants had survived, and neither the court nor the claimants, in order to enable each to act, required anything more than this: The one the privilege to sue and the other the right to entertain and determine such suits.

To remedy the wrong which existed in this respect, and in order to make effective the decisions of the Supreme Court to which reference has been made, Congress enacted section 1059 of the Revised Statutes, giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction of four classes of claims. The fourth clause of said section reads as follows:

"Fourth. Of all claims for the proceeds of captured or abandoned property, as provided by the act of March 12, 1863, chapter 120, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States,' or by the act of July 2, 1864, chapter 225, being an act in addition thereto: Provided, That the remedy given in cases of seizure under the said acts, by preferring claim in the Court of Claims, shall be exclusive, precluding the owner of any property taken by agents of the Treasury Department as abandoned or captured property, in virtue or under color of said acts, from suit at common law, or any other mode of redress whatever, before any court other than the Court of Claims."

And Congress provided for the payment of any judgment the court might render in favor of claimants under said fourth clause by section 3689 of the Revised Statutes, which, under the head of "Permanent annual appropriations," among other things, provides as follows:

"For the return of proceeds from the sale of captured and abandoned property in insurrectionary districts to the owners thereof, who may, to the satisfaction of the Court of Claims, prove their right to and ownership of said property."

These provisions of the Revised Statutes construed together provided a complete and adequate remedy for the claimants under the act of March 12, 1863, and subsequent statutes relating to the subject. The statutes declare this was the law on the 1st of December, 1873, though they were not approved by the President till June 22, 1874, and were not published till in 1875. These provisions of the statutes were in force, though not published, when the Haycraft case, above cited, was decided by the Supreme Court, and it can hardly be doubted that the decision in that case would have been different if the court had been aware of the existence of the two clauses in sections 1059 and 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

To every unprejudiced mind the language of the fourth clause of section 1059 is clear and unambiguous, and requires no construction to arrive at the intention of the National Legislature. It could have had but one object, and that was to confer upon the Court of Claims a jurisdiction which had once existed and which Congress well knew had expired by limitation. While the provision confers no new rights upon those claiming the fund derived from the sale of their property, but, on the contrary, restricts those rights by making the jurisdiction exclusive, it provides a tribunal before which they can go to enforce existing rights, and that tribunal one specially provided for adjudicating claims against the Government. Acting upon the assumption that the Government can not be sued without its consent, the legal effect of the clause is to give that consent, with the proviso that the claimants shall be confined in the prosecution of their claims to the provisions of the acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864—that is to say, that they should only recover the net proceeds of the sale of their property after deducting all costs and charges. And this conclusion is strengthened when section 3689 is construed in connection with section 1059.

The act of March 12, 1863, provided for the payment of all judgments rendered under its provisions, and if by the fourth clause of section 1059 it was only intended to continue the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims as to suits then pending before it, then no additional legislation was necessary to provide for the payment of any judgments rendered by the court in favor of the claimants. Besides, the limitation of two years in the act of March 12, 1863, operated upon the claimants rather than upon the court. It gave them the two years in which to prefer their claims to the proceeds of their property, and the act nowhere provided that the jurisdiction of the court should terminate in two years, whether the cases then pending were disposed of or not. But when Congress came to confer a new jurisdiction upon the court, without limitation as to time in which suits might be commenced, in order to make the remedy effective it was necessary to make provision for the payment of any judgments obtained by the claimants, and this Congress did by the enactment of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

The Court of Claims, however, adhering to its habit of ruling rigidly against claimants in that court, took a different view of sections 1059 and 3689, and in the case of Mary A. Wade, administratrix, and B. M. Martel, syndic, held that Congress did not intend by the above sections to repeal the two years' limitations in the act of March 12, 1863, and that these sections would not admit of such a construction, thus placing Congress in the ridiculous attitude of conferring jurisdiction upon the court and in the same clause limiting that jurisdiction to a period of time which had expired five years previously. This decision is based upon the ground "that the object of the revision of the statutes was not to change existing law, but to revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate all statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, which shall be in force at the time the commissioners should make the final report of their doings," and that the commissioners, "instead of reenacting the full language, for conciseness and condensation merely referred to the act and provided that the court should have jurisdiction of all claims for the proceeds of captured or abandoned property, as provided in the act of March 12, 1863."

Without stopping to criticize further this decision of the Court of Claims, it is sufficient to say that it completely nullifies the fourth clause of section 1059 of the Revised Statutes and defeats the will of the lawmaking power as expressed by that provision of the law. So long as that decision stands, even were there no other obstacles in the way, no suits can be maintained in the Court of Claims for the recovery of any portion of the captured and abandoned property fund, and the doors of that court, as well as all other legal tribunals, are closed against the claimants.

This is the condition and state of the law bearing upon this subject at this time as construed and defined by the courts, and it seems apparent that if this captured and abandoned property fund is ever to be distributed to its owners some additional legislation is necessary to that end. If the title of the owners of the property seized and sold under the captured and abandoned property acts has never been divested, if the Government holds the net proceeds of the property thus sold without any legal title thereto and as trustee for the owners, and if the President's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, including restoration to civil and political right, was a decision on the part of the Government which decided affirmatively the right of all owners of the property to the proceeds thereof in the Treasury, as the highest judicial tribunal of the Nation has decided, then in equity and good conscience it ought not to retain the money, and the honor and dignity of the Nation demand that some provision should be made by which the claimants of the fund may be enabled to enforce their rights thereto. For more than 30 years the Government has had the use of this money.

For more than 40 years the claimants have been appealing to Congress for relief, and if Congress in the discharge of more pressing duties has neglected this appeal, or if the remedy it provided has proved inefficacious, the stronger the reason for some action in this direction at the present time. The claimants are fast passing away, leaving as an inheritance to their children the prospect of litigation with their Government; and the witnesses upon whom the claimants must depend to establish their rights are being scattered and lost sight of, and to delay further is simply to rob and deprive these parties of their rights, some of whom are widows and orphans, while others are colored, or men of small means.

That Congress has from time to time felt the necessity for making some provision for the disposition of this fund is evident from the fact that at nearly every session special acts have been enacted for the benefit of claimants of this fund, thus doing justice to some at the expense of others; and it seems to your committee that common justice demands that a general law should be enacted by which all claimants to the fund may be relegated to some tribunal where they can establish their rights according to legal methods and each receive that portion of the fund to which he shows himself entitled.

Time and again favorable reports have been made by one House or the other upon bills having in view the same purpose as the bill now under consideration. In the Fifty-second Congress, first session, the Judiciary Committee of this House made such report on H. R. 455 (Rept. No. 1377).

In the Fifty-third Congress, second session, the Judiciary Committee upon a number of bills of like character adopted a report of the same committee made in the preceding Congress.

The same in the Fifty-fourth Congress, second session (H. Rept. No. 2568, from the Committee on War Claims, on H. R. 7618).

The same in the Fifty-fifth Congress, third session (S. Rept. No. 1634).

The same in the Fifty-seventh Congress, first session (S. Rept. No. 1292).

The same in the Fifty-eighth Congress, second session (S. Rept. No. 1861).

The same in the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session (S. Rept. No. 3290).

The same in the Fifty-ninth Congress, second session (H. Rept. No. 7540, from the Committee on War Claims, on H. R. 25400).

Your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when the House agreed to the Bartlett amendment a year or two ago, and in conference it went into the law, every claim agent and claim attorney in this town became as active as an ant in a squirming hive. They commenced to discover these claims. They have been working very hard ever since that time to get under all the claims that were allowed. This bill would take $10,000,000 out of the Treasury, which would not go to anybody that it really belonged to, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8738) to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. CURTIS, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. PAYNTER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed Mr. BURNHAM, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. BANKHEAD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PUBLIC BUILDING, HURON, S. DAK.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 6009) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak., be, and the same is hereby, increased $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to finish the walls of said building with the stone specified in the existing contract.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] why is the limit of cost recommended to be increased in this bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] to answer that question.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the plans and specifications for this Government building called for the construction of a building of what is known as New Bedford stone, and when the bids were in the lowest bid came within $6,000, or about that, of constructing the building of that material. The Treasury Department then modified the plans so as to have the stone used on three sides and brick upon the fourth side, but reserved the right to substitute the stone called for in the contract.

This building is in the center of the town of Huron, a very sightly place, and if constructed without this increase of appropriation it would have to be constructed one side of brick and the other three sides of stone. The foundations are now in. It is an emergency item and is to be provided for at this session in order to preserve the symmetry of the building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the limit of cost?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In the neighborhood of $70,000 or $75,000. I can not state it exactly offhand. It is in the home town of one of the Senators from our State, and I am not as familiar with the facts as I would be if it were otherwise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why should this building be of Bedford stone?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is a good article of construction. The building should be uniform in architecture, otherwise it would be entirely out of symmetry. The department has recommended that the building be constructed as originally designed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is one of a great many instances that have been called to my attention in this Congress in which the following situation develops: The Congress authorizes a public building and fixes the limit of cost; the building is designed and the specifications are prepared, and then it is said that the building can not be built within the limit of cost fixed by Congress. Either the building is so designed that it can not possibly be constructed within the limit of cost fixed by Congress or the materials selected are of such a character that they can not be obtained within the limit of cost.

The city of Boston is now asking an increase of $300,000 in an appropriation——

Mr. MADDEN. It frequently happens in the construction of a building that you can not get plans and specifications made that will come exactly within the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. An increase of $300,000 is asked in a building that should have cost $1,500,000. After some investigation it appears, in my opinion, that the increase is necessary, because the architect proceeded upon the theory that the original appropriation asked for, $1,800,000, should have been put into the building, although he was informed that the amount of money available would be $1,500,000.

In the city of New York there is another building now under construction where bids were invited, and none of the bids were within the amount that the department asserted could be apportioned for the building. Alternates were then substituted, and the result was that the contract was finally awarded to one of the bidders who was not originally the low bidder. I suggested to the Secretary of the Treasury that he should either reject all the bids and invite new bids or else he should refer the matter to Congress before the contract was made; or if he made a contract for the building with the alternates substituted, it would be built in that way and no other. Within two or three days after the contract was made a representative of the architects visited me for the purpose of enlisting my aid in obtaining an appropriation of $300,000 additional, to put back the items eliminated and to restore the situation to what it had been before the alternates were substituted.

I do not know how many other such instances there are, but it seems that the business of the Government in constructing these public buildings is so conducted that it is impossible to get the law obeyed and buildings constructed within the limit fixed by Congress. I have come to the conclusion that, so far as I am concerned, I shall not consent to increasing the cost of any public building in any instance except in cases where, after the building has been authorized, there arises such a change of conditions in the community as to necessitate increased accommodations over those contemplated when the authorization was originally made. Somebody should be responsible; somebody should be held responsible for these conditions.

If the gentleman from Illinois were to employ an architect to design a building and that architect came and recommended that he make a contract to erect a building, three sides of one character of construction or material and the other side of a different character of material, with a reservation in the contract that the owner might, if he desired, substitute on the fourth side the material that was to go on the other three sides, there would be a change of architects. If the gentleman from Illinois would do otherwise under such conditions, I would be glad to hear him tell of it. It is absolutely indefensible that our public-building business should be conducted in such a manner as makes it ridiculous at times.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not a fact, if this building is to be constructed in a public square, and three sides are to be built of stone and one side to be built of brick, that the effect would be incongruous?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is ridiculous. If the specifications require a particular stone for construction and the bids are in excess of the limit fixed by Congress, some other material should be substituted.

Mr. MADDEN. Bedford stone is the cheapest stone in the United States, the most easily secured, the most easily cut, the most desirable in every way, and the best stone that can be used, aside from granite, for the construction of a building. It is almost as cheap as brick and very much more ornate and more lasting, and I do not think the gentleman from New York ought to stand here for a mere paltry sum of $6,000 to destroy the beauty of a building of stone in the middle of a public square in the great city of Huron, S. Dak.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unless we can have public buildings so designed and constructed that they can come within 10 per cent of the authorization before they are constructed, I am afraid I shall have to object.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that he has feathers enough in his hat this time by not having a public building bill, so that he can let a few little trifling matters of chicken feed go through? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The trouble about it, Mr. Speaker, is that there are a number of gentlemen who are in almost the same position. A whole procession of Members of the House can be found nearly every day between the floor of the House and the Committee on Appropriations asking for just such legislation as here proposed. We ought to have some knowledge of the number of cases that are to be attended to at this session of Congress, and how much such work will cost. My attention was called to a public building the other day, erected in a western State, occupied only three weeks, costing $50,000, that was falling down. A request was made for an appropriation of $20,000 or $30,000 to put foundations under it to keep the building from collapsing. There are two or three cases before the committee where public buildings have been erected with entrances so far from the grade of the street that unless something is done to provide money to construct steps from the street to the building nobody will ever be able to get into them unless they are expert climbers. No business establishment of the Government should be constructed in this manner. I desire to fix the responsibility for such conditions. The situation is absolutely indefensible, and for the present I shall be constrained to object to this bill.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman what is the size of this town?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Between 7,000 and 8,000 inhabitants now.

Mr. LLOYD. In 1910?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In 1910.

Mr. LLOYD. What are the receipts of the Government?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. About $30,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And $75,000 is insufficient to give them the facilities in proportion to the public business!

Mr. AUSTIN. This bill is to give them a fourth side of stone instead of brick.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the town is sufficiently small to enable all of them to approach the building from the three other sides. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, as acting chairman of the committee, I desire to make a brief statement. I think the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been very careful.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not criticizing the committee, but the situation.

Mr. BURNETT. I understand; but I want to state the situation. The committee has been very careful and conscientious in reporting anything that was not an emergency case. In this case the foundations of the building are almost completed and the entire superstructure we expect to be inclosed the present summer and fall. If it is continued in its present form, it will have three sides of the building of stone and the fourth side of brick, which will be an unsightly building. All sides of the building are almost equally exposed. If it had been in a condition where work could have been continued without injuring the work already done, I believe the committee would not have made the report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the report says that the foundations are not completed.

Mr. BURNETT. But they are nearly completed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have not started to erect the superstructure. If anything was to be done, the thing to do was to file such modification in the specifications as would require the use of a uniform material.

Mr. BURNETT. I understand the contract has been let and the contract could not be abandoned; the contractors would have to go on with the work. If they did not build it of stone, they would have to go with stone on three sides and the fourth side of brick. As I say, this was an emergency case.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think the gentleman from New York should realize that every case should be considered on its own merits. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are very conservative and do not report anything unless it is an emergency matter. Here is a case where the foundation is practically completed, as the architect of the Treasury has reported within a week. They have reached a place where they must know whether to complete it in stone or the fourth side in brick. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that in this case the citizens of Huron, in order to have a better building for the Government, in which to house the departments of the Government, have donated in the neighborhood of $15,000 without any cost to the Government whatever.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDWARDS. Did I understand the gentleman from New York to make an objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Cox of Ohio). The Chair was under the impression that the gentleman from New York reserved his objection.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think under conditions of this kind, where the department has a general land office for the Government, a post office, a permanent signal office, that this is an emergency case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that the recommendation has been made from time to time to abolish that general land office at South Dakota, and my recollection is that when we passed the legislative bill no provision was made for it, so that the necessity for accommodation of that kind no longer exists. I can not understand the theory upon which any official of the Government should make such a contract with this reservation in it to substitute stone on the fourth side at some other time, the intention being to build up a situation where Congress might be coerced by such persuasive arguments as have been advanced increasing the limit of cost. I shall have to object for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

UNITED STATES IMMIGRATION STATION.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20501) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site, and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange; or to sell the present site, the money procured from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site, and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange; or to sell the present site, the money from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof, the total cost of such new site so acquired not to exceed the sum of $35,000.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman what site has been selected now for the immigration station?

Mr. TOWNER. The site already selected, under a misapprehension—or rather a mistake made in the language of the act passed—was really selected for a detention station. The object of the bill was for the purpose of selecting and purchasing an immigration station. The present detention station is about eight blocks from the river front; and, of course, an immigration station ought to be placed on the river front.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that the last appropriation was made for an immigration station?

Mr. TOWNER. No; not under the act.

Mr. SABATH. What was the amount in the last bill?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not remember the amount, but it was less than this.

Mr. BURNETT. The language of the act was for an immigration station, and it was construed by the department to mean a detention station.

Mr. SABATH. I so understood, and everyone else did, that the appropriation was for an immigration station.

Mr. BURNETT. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars was appropriated, and a lot was selected some six squares away from the water's edge, where the boats land.

Mr. SABATH. Who selected that site at that time?

Mr. BURNETT. I think it was selected by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and perhaps in connection with him some employee of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. As I recollect, $14,000 was expended for that site. A number of the members of the committee, I think, perhaps, six, visited Baltimore, and we found that the site was six or seven squares away from the water's edge.

Mr. SABATH. The members of what committee?

Mr. BURNETT. Of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, from which the bill was reported.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to interrupt here to ask a question of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. SABATH. Certainly.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the acting chairman of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee how it happens that these special bills from the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee are coming in on this calendar when it has been established by a majority of the committee that we would not at this session have a public buildings bill at all?

Mr. BURNETT. I will answer that.

Mr. EDWARDS. It would seem to me that to permit bills of this character to go through will have the effect, at least, of placing in an embarrassing position a great many Representatives on the floor of the House, who will be deprived of securing any building bill.

Mr. BURNETT. I will say to the gentleman that no one is placed in any embarrassment greater than the members of the committee, because we knew if we established precedents that were not really emergency, we would be swamped with applications of the kind. Hence the committee has steered clear of cases that are not emergency cases. In this case there is no appropriation from the Treasury Department. It is simply an exchange of one site for another, and in case they do not get an even exchange, then the amount in excess is to be taken out of the original appropriation and applied to the purchase of the site.

Mr. EDWARDS. I take it, then, that the gentleman's committee considered the bill just objected to on the calendar and the one under consideration at present as emergency cases?

Mr. BURNETT. That is it exactly; and this one, we think, is peculiarly so, because of the fact that the accommodations at Baltimore are congested and are in a very bad condition. As all gentlemen know, I have been in favor to a very great extent of restricting immigration, but I have always been in favor of giving decent accommodations to the people brought here. The accommodations at that detention station are vile. They have a detention station there that is congested, and this site was purchased, as the department seemed to think, for a new detention station. The department selected it in an insanitary section of the city, up there where there are a number of industrial plants, where the slime and other effluvia are very bad. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], who introduced this bill, is unfortunately away on account of the illness and perhaps the death of his brother in St. Louis. For that reason I am especially asking the careful consideration of the House.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I do not find any fault with the gentleman for introducing the bill. What I desire to know is, who is responsible for originally selecting this poor site and paying for it this large sum of money, when they should have known it could not be used for that purpose?

Mr. BURNETT. I think the criticism of the gentleman is just.

Mr. SABATH. This is not the first time that this has occurred. The same thing occurred in Philadelphia, where they were obliged to change the site two or three times before they finally selected the proper site.

Mr. BURNETT. I think the selection of this site, even for a detention station, was inexcusable. That is the way the department excuses itself—that they understood it was not for a general immigration station, but was merely a detention station.

Mr. SABATH. So the gentleman agrees with me that they are not competent in selecting the proper sites for a public building.

Mr. BURNETT. I think they manifested bad judgment in selecting this.

Mr. SABATH. And some change ought to be had in the department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are about 30,000 immigrants coming to Baltimore every year.

Mr. BURNETT. I think so, on an average.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before this station was authorized the practice had been for the immigrants to leave the steamer and board the train right at the steamer?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. The trains run right in there on a siding; but even that is congested.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Was not the original purpose of the appropriation to provide a place where those immigrants who were not passed could be detained pending whatever further investigation and examination were necessary?

Mr. BURNETT. That was the construction of the department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not that the fact? I remember the legislation and I remember the discussion.

Mr. BURNETT. The legislation, as I remember, on the bill, was providing for an immigration station. I think I have it before me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Leading up to the authorization, was it not a fact that provision was desired for those immigrants who were not passed, and had to be detained some place? The shed that was there at the terminal was not deemed proper or adequate, and it was not desired to keep them on board the steamers.

Mr. BURNETT. That is true; but the station where they board the train does not belong to the Government. It belongs to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad or one of the railroads, and they disembark and go at once into that and up into the train. Off some distance from there, 2 blocks from there, is this detention station that is totally inadequate, even for a detention station, and even putting it on that ground I think the site selected is totally inadequate. The intimation was made to us down there that perhaps ground would be donated; if not, it could be bought without any great cost very near the water's edge.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not be donated. I know enough about this station to know it must be bought, if it be acquired at all.

Mr. BURNETT. As far as the members of the committee who visited the place are concerned, they felt there were some grounds near Fort McHenry that above all others would be the most valuable for that purpose, already belonging to the Government, if objection was not made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What has been done in this case? Has anything been done other than to purchase the site?

Mr. BURNETT. Nothing but the purchase of the site in this case. This bill is not to add any other appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me ask the gentleman one other question, as he is the chairman of the Committee on Immigration. If this change be made, will it be necessary to enlarge the scope of the general station so as to require much greater facilities than were contemplated at the time the original scheme was adopted?

Mr. BURNETT. Well, I myself have expressed the opinion there ought to be a much better station there. If the gentleman will visit those rooms there and see how congested those people are, he will be impressed with the idea they do need a larger station than they have there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think perhaps some station may be necessary, but I believe, in view of the number of immigrants who come to Baltimore and the manner in which they are handled, all that is necessary is some place where those who are not passed may be detained. If it is proposed, instead of following the practice now followed, to first put them in the station and then examine them there and then release them as they may pass, it will take over a million dollars to provide the facilities required.

Mr. BURNETT. Oh, not for the station there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For a station accommodating 30,000 immigrants a year?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not think the station at Philadelphia has ever cost half of that. I will ask the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has not yet, but they have not got what has already been authorized completed, and although the acquisition of a station at Philadelphia was authorized they went to New Jersey and located at Gloucester and paid——

Mr. BURNETT. I think the contract has been let under the authorization at Philadelphia, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman permit?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I believe the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] has the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, so long as the Philadelphia station has been brought into this discussion, I think it is only fair to say that up to the present time the Philadelphia station has not cost a million dollars, but only the $250,000 which was appropriated, and, by the way, $100,000 of that went for good old Democratic buildings and ground purchased at Gloucester. The $150,000 above the cost of site has been applied to the construction of a pier and buildings, and when, through the grace of the Committee on Appropriations, of which the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is chairman, we shall receive $105,000 more, we will be able to finish up the work and provide a station at that point that has long been needed for the credit of the Immigration Service and the protection of the unfortunates who come from abroad.

Mr. MADDEN. I desire to say, in regard to the immigrant station at Chicago, we can not get any expression from any committee of the House on the subject at all.

Mr. SABATH. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that both of these gentlemen who are chairmen of these two committees have promised me that they will aid——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman include me? I made no promise.

Mr. MADDEN. I am opening up a nest of information, and I have been trying to get information for a long time. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says he has no jurisdiction; the chairman of the other committee says he has no jurisdiction, and the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. SABATH] says he does not know which committee has jurisdiction over it, and so we do not know where to go to get information that will lead us to the proper committee and a successful conclusion. It has been said that the Government has not the money——

Mr. SABATH. The Republicans have expended all in the last session; that is the trouble.

Mr. MADDEN. The Democrats have been talking economy and spending more money than the Republicans ever dreamed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect that this so-called Chicago immigration station was to be discussed here. The fact is, however, that the administration is Republican. The only activity and the only information conveyed to the Congress about the necessity for an immigration station at Chicago is that which has originated from the Chicago Club and the two gentlemen from Illinois who have spoken here to-day. While the head of the department has written them letters, no estimate has ever been submitted to the Congress, and no official communication of any kind has been submitted to the Congress. If there be any criticism for the failure of the legislative body to act, it falls upon those charged with the responsibility of informing the House of the necessities of the public service, and they are Republican officials.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask a question about the bill now before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. MANN. I was not able to hear a while ago the private conversation that was being carried on over on the right of the Speaker, and perhaps what I am inquiring about may have already been discussed in that private conversation. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what this present site cost?

Mr. BURNETT. My recollection is $14,000.

Mr. MANN. What committee reported the authorization?

Mr. BURNETT. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman quite sure about that?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; $130,000 is my recollection that was reported.

Mr. MANN. I was under the impression the Committee on Immigration authorized these stations.

Mr. BURNETT. No; the Committee on Immigration has not for a number of years reported any of these authorizations.

Mr. MANN. At that time your committee reported $14,000 authorization for this station?

Mr. BURNETT. No; $130,000 for the station, and $14,000 of that $130,000 was for the purchase of a site.

Mr. MANN. Who selected this site?

Mr. BURNETT. Well, that is a matter of outside information.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter of information that somebody knows, and I want to know.

Mr. BURNETT. I will state to the gentleman what my information is with regard to it. An agent of the Treasury Department and of the Department of Commerce and Labor both went over to look it over and make a selection. Now, Mr. Taylor, Supervising Architect, told me that he was there, and members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds went recently to look over it, and Mr. Taylor was with us; and my recollection is he stated at the time there was only one other site there and that it was clear out of reason.

Mr. MANN. Now, as a matter of fact, the Supervising Architect is not the man to determine where the site shall be for the Department of Commerce and Labor, for this station is under the control of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and they have to select it. Now, the gentleman proposes, without any report from the Department of Commerce and Labor, to dispose of the site which the Department of Commerce and Labor has selected for $14,000, and purchase a site that will cost $49,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to say in answer to the statement that some one representing the Department of Commerce and Labor—representing the Immigration Bureau—was present when the first site was selected. Then, when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recently visited Baltimore and looked over the proposition of selling or disposing of the site purchased a couple of years ago, the representative of the Department of Commerce and Labor—the head of the Immigration Bureau of the Department—and Col. Taylor, Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, accompanied the members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and personal inspections were made of the present site and of the proposed new site. And the representatives of both of those departments agreed to the unanimous opinion of the members of the committee who visited Baltimore that the present site ought to be disposed of and a new site purchased; so that, in fact, whether it is in the report presented with the bill or not, the representatives of the Treasury Department and the Department of Commerce and Labor were present and agreed that a change ought to be made.

Mr. SABATH. They agreed that the present site is not the proper site?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is located too near a number of fertilizing plants in Baltimore, which makes it highly undesirable for a detention and hospital station.

Mr. SABATH. So the ones who originally selected the site did not use good judgment?

Mr. AUSTIN. They made a mistake, in my judgment.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me when a site is selected by the Department of Commerce and Labor it is not quite a profitable thing to dispose of that site by a site that will cost many times as much solely on the report of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BURNETT. I will say it was by both departments. If the gentleman will read the report——

Mr. MANN. I have read the report, and there is nothing in it about the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BURNETT. The Department of Commerce and Labor did not desire to take charge of it, and recommended that the Secretary of the Treasury do so, and the bill was amended in that way.

Mr. MANN. I am not talking about that part of it. Why did the gentleman not refer the bill to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for a report upon a matter which they have to do with instead of referring it to the Secretary of the Treasury, who merely holds the nominal title to the property after acquired?

Mr. BURNETT. We did so.

Mr. MANN. Where is the report?

Mr. BURNETT. The Department of Commerce and Labor desires that they take charge of the matter. The bill was originally referred to the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with the site question. Until the gentleman can produce a report from the Department of Commerce and Labor I shall object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not this answer the gentleman fully? This is in the report:

> The committee amended the bill on the recommendation of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site.

Mr. MANN. That is merely changing the authority of ownership from the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor to the Treasury Department, because the title to this property comes through the Treasury Department. That is a formal amendment. That has nothing to do with the merits of the case.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But this says the Secretary of Commerce and Labor was consulted and approved of it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. O'Keefe, who was of the Department of Commerce and Labor, was detailed to appear before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and give his views as to the disposition of the present site; and he was there to confer with the committee as to change of site.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt at all of that. I think we ought to have a written report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNER rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois reserve his objection still further?

Mr. TOWNER. He reserves the right to object until I can make a statement. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] is not present. This is his bill, and therefore I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will reserve his objection and that the bill may be passed without prejudice at this time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can put it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar again.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] object?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I think I have the report from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, if the gentleman will reserve his objection.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman can put the bill on the calendar again.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22083) relating to inherited estates in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed. It was introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], and he is at home ill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS WHO ENLISTED OR SERVED UNDER ASSUMED NAMES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13566) for the relief of soldiers and sailors who enlisted or served under assumed names, while minors or otherwise, in the Army or Navy of the United States during any war with any foreign nation or people.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to issue certificates of discharge or orders of acceptance of resignation, upon application and proof of identity, in the true name of such persons as enlisted or served under assumed names, while minors or otherwise, in the Army or Navy during any war between the United States and any other nation or people and were honorably discharged therefrom. Applications for said certificates of discharge or amended orders of resignation may be made by or on behalf of persons entitled to them, but no such certificate or order shall be issued where a name was assumed to cover a crime or to avoid its consequence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman who has charge of this bill——

The SPEAKER. Who has charge of the bill?

Mr. SABATH. If I am not mistaken, that is the present law.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. The present law covers the Civil War, but does not cover the Spanish War.

Mr. SABATH. Well, I passed a bill in the Sixty-first Congress that covers the Spanish War people.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken in reference to what he has passed, although I will not say that. The Mexican War veterans are not covered by it, and I think the Spanish War veterans are not covered by the existing law. I know they are not covered by the Revised Statutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is correct that his bill covered the Spanish War veterans. This bill goes further and covers the honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and of the Mexican War, and the gentleman's bill covered the Spanish War.

Mr. MANN. It illustrates the desirability of referring bills of this kind to a department. Perhaps if this bill had been referred to the department for a report, they would have given us information on the subject.

Mr. SABATH. I have no objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INTAKE TOWER, MISSISSIPPI RIVER, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22999) providing for the construction and maintenance by the city of St. Louis, Mo., of an intake tower in the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of St. Louis, a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, is hereby authorized to construct, own, maintain, and operate an intake tower and water conduit therefor within the channel of the Mississippi River at said city of St. Louis, and near the northern limits thereof, to be used in connection with the waterworks of said city: Provided, That the location and plans of said intake tower and conduit shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the navigation of the said river shall be in no way obstructed thereby.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

On page 2 add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] whether this would involve in any way the relations, friendly or otherwise, between Chicago and St. Louis concerning the Chicago Drainage Canal?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's question I will say that the tomahawk has been buried between Chicago and St. Louis. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Down the creek from Chicago?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to say, in explanation of the bill, that in accordance with the statement made by the water commissioner of St. Louis, Mr. E. E. Wall, the city needs an additional supply of water.

Mr. SABATH. What? Is the gentleman serious? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. With Anheuser-Busch in full operation? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The two gentlemen from Chicago may have no taste for it; but we need it not only for household purposes, but also for drinking purposes. The water commissioner says that—

For about 18 years the city of St. Louis has been dependent upon a single intake and tunnel for its entire water supply. At any time during these years or, in the future, unless other provisions are made, any accident interfering with the passage of water through this tunnel would have meant a disastrous water famine for the city of St. Louis. Serious troubles have been experienced almost every winter since it was built, and on one or two occasions the city's supply was in danger. This was especially true in January last, when the combined circumstances of extreme cold weather, and exceedingly large quantity of floating ice, and the low stage of the river actually prevented the waterworks from getting from the Mississippi River one-half the necessary water for its use during a period of nine days. Had there not been at the beginning of this period in storage some 400,000,000 gallons of water the city would have suffered severely.

I believe it is unnecessary, Mr. Speaker, to read the whole letter. This explanation ought to be sufficient to entitle us to the consideration at the hands of Congress which we ask.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the explanation made by the gentleman, I will say that, while it is down the creek from Chicago to St. Louis, it is on the other side of the river, and this and other circumstances have enabled the gentleman to satisfy the committee that they will never call upon the Government to incur the expense of purifying the water before they take it in.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH, OSLO, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23634) to authorize the village of Oslo, in the county of Marshall, in the State of Minnesota, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the council of the village of Oslo, in the county of Marshall, in the State of Minnesota, and their assigns be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River of the North, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the village of Oslo, in section 36, township 155 north, of range 51 west, fifth principal meridian, in the county of Marshall, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

VALIDITY OF CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21826) validating certain homestead entries.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all pending homestead entries made prior to September 1, 1911, under the provisions of the act of February 19, 1909, by persons who, before making such entries, had acquired title to less than 160 acres of land under the homestead laws, be, and the same are hereby, validated: Provided, That said entries are in other respects in conformity with the homestead laws.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That all pending homestead entries made in good faith prior to September 1, 1911, under the provisions of the enlarged homestead laws, by persons who, before making such enlarged homestead entry, had acquired title to a technical quarter section of land under the homestead law, and therefore were not qualified to make an enlarged homestead entry, be, and the same are hereby, validated, if in all other respects regular, in all cases where the original homestead entry was for less than 160 acres of land."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman why this bill was not referred to the department for a report on it?

Mr. PRAY. Well, there is a long letter printed and before the House, I will say to the gentleman, which is, in effect, a comprehensive report from the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. MANN. Not about this bill——

Mr. PRAY (continuing). And which fully explains the entire situation; and this bill is drawn in conformity with that report. The bill I introduced and the Secretary's report were carefully considered together by the Public Lands Committee, and the committee amendment, in my judgment, makes the bill conform absolutely to the Secretary's report.

Mr. MANN. Well, there is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the gentleman, giving the situation, but giving no reason whatever for the passage of this bill and not expressing any opinion on the merits of the proposition at all, there being no bill then introduced.

Now, does not the gentleman think that we are entitled, on a matter of this sort, that proposes to overrule a decision of the department, to have an expression of opinion from the department on the subject?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PRAY. I will say to the gentleman that the Secretary in his report states very clearly his reasons for favoring this legislation, and a comparison of the bill and report will show that his recommendations have been followed to the letter, and furthermore that the enactment of this legislation will not overrule the decision of the department. If the gentleman from Illinois will give me an opportunity to make a further explanation——

Mr. MANN. I thoroughly understand the situation.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman from Illinois has read the last paragraph of the letter of the Secretary he will see that he suggests just this kind of legislation.

Mr. MANN. I have read the whole report carefully. I wonder if the gentleman has.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me that that is very clearly an approval of what the committee proposed to do.

Mr. PRAY. What feature of it does the gentleman from Illinois care to know about? The letter of the Secretary was before the Public Lands Committee.

Mr. MANN. Before the bill was introduced.

Mr. PRAY. The bill was introduced following the report, and the committee offered an amendment which was adopted, and the bill was thereupon made to conform to the suggestions of the Secretary as disclosed in his report. It would appear to me that there can be no doubt about the facts. The bill and report are before the House and, I believe, in exact accord. It does not overturn the decision of the department in the Storaasli case. It simply validates the entries made before the Storaasli decision was rendered, which entries, previous to this decision, had been allowed and held valid by the department.

Mr. MANN. We will not dispute as to the meaning of the language. The gentleman says that it does not overturn the decision of the department. I had said that it did. I do not care whether it did or not. The department decided that these people could not get an enlarged homestead, and the bill gives it to them. I should say that that was turning the decision upside down.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will remember, the department said they could do this and these filings were made under regulations of the department and were accepted subsequently under the rulings of the Land Office. The Secretary's office had not passed on the matter, but the Land Office accepted the filings.

The Secretary's office later decided, very properly, that the filings were not properly accepted, but if so, as he says in the letter, in view of the fact that the filings were made with the knowledge of the Land Office, and accepted by the Land Office, they would approve legislation which cured these cases, and that is what this legislation is. It is to cure the cases where the entrymen fell into error by reason of the department or the Land Office ruling in that manner.

Mr. MANN. Let me see whether I understand the situation. Here is a man who had taken up a homestead of 159 acres. The law provided that if he had not taken up a homestead he could take an additional amount of 160 acres. Thereupon they said that because he was short 1 acre he could take 160 acres more. Is not that correct?

Mr. MONDELL. No; not exactly. The words of the law provide that any person who is a qualified entryman under the homestead laws of the United States may enter under the provisions of this act. A man is a fully qualified entryman unless he has exhausted his rights under the homestead law. This man who took three 40-acre tracts is a qualified entryman and therefore he may take an enlarged homestead. What the Land Office held was that if a man had taken four 40-acre tracts——

Mr. MANN. If he was short an acre.

Mr. MONDELL. If he lacked an acre he was still a qualified entryman.

Mr. MANN. That is what I said; I did not take so many words to do it in, but I said the same thing.

Mr. MONDELL. That was held, and they said that this thing might be done.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and now I propose, if you want to pass a bill by unanimous consent, that you shall have the written opinion on the bill from the department itself on the subject.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will read the last paragraph of this letter——

Mr. MANN. I have read it.

Mr. MONDELL. It suggests that this very thing can be done.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman can obtain the opinion of the department without any trouble.

Mr. PRAY. I certainly can and could have done so before if I had thought that there would be the slightest objection to the bill or that it would be necessary to have two reports from the Secretary covering the same subject matter.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has heard me say forty times on the floor that bills of this kind would not pass by unanimous consent unless they had been referred to the department for a report.

Mr. PRAY. There were a number of entrymen under the act of February, 1909, who had taken title to homesteads of less than 160 acres under former entries, and the department accepted these filings and held that they were valid. The settlers occupied and improved their homesteads and supposed that they were within their rights, because the department had said so. A year or two afterwards the Secretary handed down the decision in the Storaasli case, which held the second entries for cancellation. We have here a report of the Secretary clearly expressing his approval of such a bill as is now pending. Anybody who will take the time to read this report will be convinced that the homesteaders ought not to be deprived of their property because of an erroneous ruling. The last decision is, of course, the correct one; but these people entered these lands and have complied with the law, and should be protected.

Mr. MANN. When you get down to bedrock, the gentleman knows perfectly well that these men were intending to take advantage of the Government under what they thought was a technical construction giving them the right to take 159 acres of land and then an enlarged homestead of 160 acres beside. They took advantage of the technical construction of the act to get an additional 160 acres, knowing that they were not morally entitled to it, although they thought they had a legal title to it. Now, then, they claim that they are morally entitled to it. Before that can be done the department must give its opinion upon it.

Mr. PRAY. The department has already expressed an opinion on the subject and has furnished a complete statement of the case from beginning to end. Otherwise I would not have placed the bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Here is a favorable report from the department and also a favorable report from the committee.

Mr. MANN. I have read what the department has said, and it is like expressing an opinion of court before the case comes before the court. I prefer to have the opinion of the court when the case is before it and it has the responsibility of deciding it. I do not take much stock in department letters written to a Member of Congress about something which the Member of Congress is interested in.

Mr. MONDELL. If this letter of the Secretary is not an approval of this bill, I do not know what kind of an approval the department could give.

Mr. MANN. It may be a declaration that they will approve the bill, but it is not an approval of this bill, because this bill was not introduced until after the letter was written. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

CONDEMNED BRONZE OR BRASS CANNON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24458) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to certain cities and towns condemned bronze or brass cannon with their carriages and outfit of cannon balls, etc.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24458) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver to certain cities and towns condemned bronze or brass cannon, with their carriages and outfit of cannon balls, etc.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the city of Dolton, in the State of Illinois, for the use of the George W. Spencer Post, No. 489, Grand Army of the Republic, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls, to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To Appleton City, in the State of Missouri, for the use of the Appleton City Academy, one condemned fieldpiece or cannon, with a suitable outfit of cannon balls, same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the town of Elizabeth, W. Va., for the use of the Grand Army post at that place, two condemned bronze or brass fieldpieces, with their carriages, same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Lebanon, Tenn., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with their carriages, same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Pittston, Pa., for the use of the State armory, two condemned mortars or cannon, with a suitable outfit of cannon balls, same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the town of Sheridan, Wyo., for use at John Schuler Post, No. 67, Grand Army of the Republic, two condemned 12-pound bronze cannon, now at the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Orange, State of New Jersey, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with their carriages, for use on the lawn of the Orange city common, in said city, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Gallatin, State of Missouri, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls, the same to be mounted and used in the courthouse square in the said city, and to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the State of New York, the condemned brass fieldpieces and one brass howitzer captured from Gen. Burgoyne at the Battle of Saratoga, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Madison, S. Dak., two condemned bronze or brass cannon, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Marianna, Ark., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the town of Covington, Va., two cannon or fieldpieces, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Kingwood, W. Va., two condemned bronze or brass cannon, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To Forest City, State of Missouri, one small condemned bronze cannon, with its carriage and six cannon balls, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Holton, Kans., one condemned cannon, with its carriage and cannon balls, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Olney, Ill., two condemned bronze cannon, mounted on carriages, for use at Eli Bowyer Post, No. 92, Grand Army of the Republic, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Louisburg, Kans., an obsolete piece of ordnance, together with its carriage or mounting, and six cannon balls, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Beaver Dam, Wis., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Hanover, Pa., two condemned 12-pound bronze cannon for use at Major Jenkins Post, No. 99, Grand Army of the Republic, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the town of Wise, Va., two condemned cannon, with a suitable outfit of cannon balls, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

To the city of Danville, Pa., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece for use at Goodwich Post, No. 22, Grand Army of the Republic, the same to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States through the delivery of any of the foregoing condemned military equipment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia a question. As I understand the law now, the Secretary of War is authorized to give away the old iron cannons?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. And was authorized to sell brass cannon.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is right.

Mr. SHERLEY. And he has actually put a price on the cannon which represents simply the value of the metal in the cannon.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is right.

Mr. SHERLEY. These obsolete pieces are now being used by the Ordnance Department, are melted up and the brass used in recasting, and I would like to know why we should embark upon this proposal to give away all of the ordnance that is not standard and up to date?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. This is not a bill making a gift at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is exactly what it is.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. We had before the committee the very proposition to which the gentleman refers, because of the statute to which he refers.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is an absolute gift, so far as the practical effect is concerned. Of course the bill provides that they shall be subject to the order of the department, but the sending out of a piece of cannon which is of value simply for the brass that is in it, although saying it is not giving it away because the Secretary of War can send for it at some subsequent time is just as much a gift as if it were given in fee.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. It might have that effect in fact, but it would not in law.

Mr. SHERLEY. We are dealing with the fact and not simply with technical law.

There is one paragraph in the bill which seems to me to be justifiable, and that is that providing that the condemned brass fieldpieces and one brass howitzer, captured from Gen. Burgoyne at the Battle of Saratoga, shall be given to the State of New York. Those are historic fieldpieces, and it is highly proper that they should be given away; but I do not think it is proper, where there is no sentiment respecting a piece, that the Government should give that much property of the United States away. The result will be, if you are going to give these cannon to these various cities, that you can not in justice deny the claim of any other locality or community in the land, and Congress will be overwhelmed with proposals to have given to different localities ordnance that is not standard. When you get rid of all the very old pieces, then you will give away those not quite so old. Unless the gentleman is willing to strike out all of the bill except that paragraph relating to the particular historic pieces captured from Gen. Burgoyne, I shall feel constrained to object.

Mr. MANN. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. SHERLEY. My suggestion is that those pieces that are historic, which were captured from Gen. Burgoyne, should very properly be given to this particular State; but I do not think that the rest of the bill has sufficient merit to pass it by unanimous consent.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is a separate bill for that purpose upon the calendar.

Mr. MANN. But these are cases where Grand Army posts have a burial ground in a cemetery, and it is quite out of the question, I think, for them to raise even $150 with which to purchase one of these cannon.

Mr. SHERLEY. That might be; and it might be very desirable to give to the Grand Army posts as such—and I am not prepared to say that I would object at all to the giving to the Grand Army posts as such—for such use, obsolete cannon, but I shall feel constrained to object to an omnibus bill of this character. Each gentleman who has had an application from his home district has very properly put in an individual bill, and then the Committee on Military Affairs has thrown them all in hodgepodge and brought out this bill, distributing all the ordnance that is obsolete, and that does not necessarily mean very old cannon. It means a gun that is not standard. I know from a talk with the Chief of Ordnance that he at present uses these guns by recasting them, and that they have a distinct value.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but will they not have a more distinct value in the way of patriotism if placed in some of the cemeteries at the time of memorial and other exercises? The cost is not very much to the Government.

Mr. SHERLEY. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, if that were the proposition before the House, but it is not the proposition. The proposition is not to give them to Grand Army posts nor for the erection of these cannon at certain cemeteries. The proposition is to give practically to every organization and municipality that has made the request.

Mr. MANN. I think these, as a rule, go to cemeteries.

Mr. SHERLEY. Let us read the bill a little and see whether they do or not.

Mr. MANN. Whether it is named in the bill or not, I think that is the case.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes; nearly all of these are for Grand Army posts, and the committee gave them to the towns because there would then be some authority to take care of them.

Mr. MANN. And some authority to call upon if the department wanted them back.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes. That satisfied the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], who will explain that matter.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the House that my objection was to the terms of the gift as proposed, and I suggested that if they were given they should not be given to individuals nor to private corporations, but to public or municipal corporations.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. That is right. Here is one of them given to a certain town for the benefit of the Grand Army post that will come within the exception just as well as these given to the State of New York.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but the very fact that that is expressed would indicate, according to all the laws of construction, that in those cases where it does not say it is for the benefit of a post it was not intended they should be for the benefit of posts.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Well, I do not say that is true in every case, but in every one I remember that is true.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, on the face of the bill there is nothing to indicate that except in a very few cases——

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. But in those few cases——

Mr. SHERLEY (continuing). There does not seem to have been any recommendation made by the War Department on the matter. The report does not show that the bill ever was submitted to the War Department. Can the gentleman state what ordnance there is?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PATTEN] made this report and left here this afternoon. He asked me to take charge of this matter. These bills were referred to the War Department. I understand that only such of the separate bills as the War Department approved were put in this omnibus bill. Now, it seems to me, if the gentleman wants to sustain himself in his objection that he would suggest an amendment making it apply to such cases where it is not specified on its face it is for Grand Army posts——

Mr. SHERLEY. I am perfectly willing to permit an amendment that will eliminate everything except that.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. And let the bill go before the House for consideration. I would not want to agree to the amendments, because, in my case, the only one I have, in there it is so specified, and I would hate to stand here representing the committee and ask something for myself that I can not give to everybody else.

Mr. PALMER. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask him this question: If the House considers the bill by unanimous consent, would the gentleman have any objection to an amendment which would extend the list of Grand Army posts which would receive the benefits of the act? I have a request from a Grand Army post in my district which is doubtless as much entitled to a pair of these bronze cannon as any Grand Army post mentioned in the bill. Would there be any objection on the part of the gentleman to permitting such an amendment?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I have no objection, but as another member of the committee, and one of the post prominent members, has that objection, he will no doubt oppose it.

Mr. PALMER. Why is the gentleman proposing to discriminate between Grand Army posts?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. It is not myself. This has been done by the committee. I assure the gentleman that if his bill came before the committee I would vote for it.

Mr. PALMER. I can show the gentleman that my case is equally deserving as any of the cases mentioned in the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. As I stated awhile ago, it puts me in a very peculiar situation here, because my own bill meets the approval of gentlemen who have raised objection.

Mr. PALMER. It seems to me if we are going to pass a bill like this, you ought to include in it all the Grand Army posts which desire to have these bronze cannon shipped to them, and where a Member on the floor makes the statement that a Grand Army post desires a pair of these bronze cannon he ought to receive the same consideration as if he appeared before the committee. We are all exactly in the same situation. If the gentleman will assure me there will be no opposition to an amendment, I will not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I can assure the gentleman there will be.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from West Virginia a question. I have two Grand Army posts in my district which made the same request, and if this bill is not open to amendment I am sure I will object.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I assure the gentleman it is not going to be open to amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield? I want to say to the gentleman I have a post in my district, at Redding, Cal., that has for one of its members Gen. Chipman, who is now judge of the court of appeals, and he is the only man who ever represented the District of Columbia in this House. He represented the Government back in 1865 and 1866, and that post desires one of these cannon or two of these cannon.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, in order to make this matter perfectly clear, I want to say I am not willing, with the limited information we have on hand as to the supply of obsolete ordnance, to open this measure to amendment, and I shall interpose all possible objection to its being so opened.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Do I understand the gentleman to object?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I shall object to any amendment to it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

INCREASE OF TERRITORY BY CONQUEST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was H. J. Res. 100, authorizing the President to instruct representatives of United States to next International Peace Conference to express desire of United States that nations shall not attempt to increase their territory by conquest, and to endeavor to secure a declaration to that effect from the conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to instruct the representatives of the United States in the next International Peace Conference to express to the conference the desire of the United States that the nations represented in the conference shall not attempt to increase their territory by conquest, and to endeavor to secure a declaration to that effect from the conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask what power this confers upon the President which he does not now possess?

Mr. McCALL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can enlighten the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman can not enlighten me upon it there is nothing further to be said.

Mr. McCALL. I do not know that I could, because the gentleman may not be capable of being enlightened. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. By the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCALL. It would amount to an expression of opinion on the part of Congress. We desire the President to do these things, but can not instruct him, because the President is a coordinate branch of the Government. This is simply a respectful way of expressing our opinion, which would undoubtedly be recognized by the President as effective. I do not think it is a nebulous resolution at all. It has in view the accomplishment of a very definite purpose, and that is to submit to the next peace conference a proposition that the nations in their treaties recognize the territorial boundaries of each other just as the nations of Europe have recognized the boundaries of Switzerland, which has preserved the integrity of that Republic for nearly a century. It is what we have done in effect in the case of China, which, under the leadership of the United States, taken by Mr. Hay, in which he was supported by Germany, we agreed that China should not be subject to partition, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. When does the next Hague conference meet?

Mr. McCALL. I understand in 1915.

Mr. MANN. That is some time from now. The gentleman introduced his resolution on May 16 of last year, and after considering it for one year less one day the Committee on Foreign Affairs struck out all after the resolving clause and inserted a new resolution.

Mr. McCALL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. As this is a very important matter, and the conference does not meet for three years, I think it would be well to let it go over and see whether we might not wish to suggest some changes from what the Committee on Foreign Affairs did.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman permit me, before he objects, just to say a word?

Mr. MANN. I withhold the objection.

Mr. McCALL. The Interparliamentary Union, of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is one of the leading spirits, has this matter under consideration and meets next fall.

Mr. MANN. It does not meet this year?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It does.

Mr. MANN. I thought it was postponed.

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

Mr. McCALL. I see that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] also desires information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he would consent to an amendment, inserting on line 12, page 2, after the word "conquest":

Nor to encourage rebellion or secession of citizens or subjects, or subordinate political jurisdictions.

I ask if it would not be probable, in view of what was done by this Government only a few years ago in connection with a neighboring friendly power to the south, that some such instruction by the representatives of the United States might not be instrumental in referring to The Hague Tribunal the controversy now existing between Colombia and the United States.

Mr. MANN. Is that a part of a scheme to collect the twenty million or thirty million dollars? I did not suppose they had my friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] on their staff.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not partial to paying very large sums of money for any purpose, but in view of the outrageous and indefensible action of the United States toward the helpless Republic of Colombia, which expected protection from the United States——

Mr. MANN. And was trying to hold us up.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). I am inclined to believe that, instead of being a party to the destruction of that Government in the stealing of its territory, we ought to make proper reparation; and it is indefensible to say that because the Congress of Colombia did not act readily and quickly in response to the desires of the Chief Executive of the United States that it was either trying to hold up the United States or was not exercising the rights its people should exercise in the determination of what it should do.

Mr. McCALL. In reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], I would say I regret that he has seen fit to remind us of our shame. I would go further. I believe that we should pay Colombia for the territory of which we despoiled her. But it does not follow from that that we are to keep ourselves at all in the position of going on and robbing other weak powers. That is no argument at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would it not be a good thing to put a declaration in the preamble of treaties, as well as this declaration that is suggested here, that afterwards we would keep faith?

Mr. McCALL. I do not think the gentleman's point is a good one against the passage of this resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not urging it against the passage of this resolution. I say we ought to consider the propriety and advisability——

Mr. MANN. Both gentlemen are trying to get the Colombia claim allowed, and I am against it. A rottener claim never "came over the pike."

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is a reactionary.

Mr. McCALL. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will report an appropriation to pay Colombia for preventing her from maintaining her title to territory which we had guaranteed to her, I should certainly vote in favor of the appropriation. It is one of the most dishonorable transactions in the history of this country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do say that for Colombia to be permitted to go into The Hague tribunal in reference to its claims against the United States is proper. And I would be prepared to act——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. McCALL. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I hope very much that this resolution will be permitted to pass. I am much interested in it. It is a principle for which, in a feeble way, when occasion offered, I have contended for some years. In 1910 I had the honor of proposing before the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, a great association comprising all the business organizations west of the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean in the United States, a resolution embodying precisely this principle. Although that organization on that occasion was devoted to the specific purpose of considering purely American projects, it recommended that the President of the United States and the Secretary of State be requested to negotiate with all American Governments for a treaty embodying that principle. It passed unanimously. I then threw it into the shape of a House resolution, and it has been reported to this House twice from the Committee on Foreign Affairs with a recommendation that it do pass. No harm can come from it that I can see, but much good may come.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think it will be a reflection upon the action of the Senate?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am restrained by the proprieties from expressing my opinion on that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Inasmuch as the Senate refused to take up the peace treaties, will this be a reflection upon that august body? It may be that they will lay it to a certain individual.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not that lese majeste?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, are the gentlemen prepared to decide whether they will be able to give directions to the next President or not?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts seems to have the floor.

Mr. McCALL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to say in reference to this resolution that it has been carefully considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is here with a unanimous recommendation. That same committee is considering the Panama-Colombia difficulty, and whether it will report at this session or not I do not know, but it certainly has devoted a good deal of time to an investigation of the affair.

Surely the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will not expect the American delegates to stand before The Hague conference and slap their own faces; but that is exactly what they would do if they were to admit at that conference that the separation of Panama from Colombia or the declaration of its independence involved a steal on the part of the United States. It has absolutely nothing to do with this question.

If the House will bear with me just for a moment more, I want to say that the plan proposed in the pending resolution is originally an American proposition. It is now so considered all over the world. In 1908 the American delegation to the Interparliamentary Conference held at Berlin proposed the plan in these words: That the nations should mutually agree to recognize their national independence first, their territorial integrity secondly, and their sovereignty in domestic affairs thirdly. The resolution when it was offered by us met with considerable opposition from certain countries, namely, such as were not quite satisfied with the present territorial status quo. France, for one, because she is still not entirely reconciled to the loss of Alsace-Lorraine. Denmark was another country that objected.

But our argument, Mr. Speaker, was that if there are some nations who object to an agreement of this kind, they should not retard all the other nations, if those others were willing to enter into a peace agreement of that nature. And upon this showing, Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary council, in October last, at Paris, unanimously passed this resolution. It will be proposed to the Interparliamentary Union at Geneva, Switzerland, this fall, and undoubtedly it will receive the sanction of that great body, which is now composed of over 3,000 lawmakers of the world.

Now, this binds us to absolutely nothing. It leaves it to the discretion of the President as to whether he wants to give such instructions or not. It merely authorizes him to give such instructions, although it is true, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests, that he has that authority now. But it is a declaration of policy on the part of the people of this country as against the policy of conquest, which has been the cause of nearly all the wars that have been waged in the last hundred years. And I think this Nation should be found in the forefront, in fact, taking the lead in declaring by its chosen representatives in favor of so pronounced a step toward more permanent peace.

Since it was proposed in Berlin it has been called by leading newspapers of our country the most practical proposition toward a condition of permanent international peace, and I regard it so. If we could have arbitration treaties by which we could agree on the plan proposed in the resolution, I think permanent peace would be almost assured to the world. I hope this resolution will pass. [Applause.] And just another word. Arbitration is a splendid plan as a substitute for war, and there is probably no one within the sound of my voice who does not believe in it. But it is to be resorted to only in case of trouble; that is, when dissension and disagreement already exist. Our first aim should be, therefore, to avoid trouble altogether and to remove causes of friction wherever we find them. And this is the purpose of the pending resolution. If the great powers of the world, who will again meet in conference at The Hague in 1915, could be induced, through the influence of the American delegation, backed as they would be by Congress and the enlightened sentiment of America and the civilized world, to adopt our plan the possible causes of war would be minimized to such an extent as to make gradual disarmament a very practical question, and the relief of the people from intolerable burdens an irresistible demand. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, like my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] and my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL], I am a man of peace, but I doubt whether peace will ever be accomplished in this way.

I am watching like a cat watches a rat the claim of the Republic of Colombia against the United States. I believe that the action which this Government took in recognizing the new Republic of Panama was justified by every consideration which could be brought to bear. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am not willing at this time to lend any countenance in any way whatever to any claim that the Republic of Colombia, which was trying to hold up this country and trying to destroy the French Panama Canal Co., has any right before us, and I object. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

LOAN OF FIELDPIECES CAPTURED FROM GEN. BURGOYNE AT SARATOGA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21218) to loan to the State of New York the brass fieldpieces and one brass howitzer captured by Gen. Burgoyne at the Battle of Saratoga.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be hereby authorized to loan to the State of New York the brass fieldpieces and one brass howitzer captured by Gen. Burgoyne at the Battle of Saratoga, for the purpose of mounting them on the battle field of Saratoga as suitable trophies of the battle.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend, page 1, line 5, by striking out, after the word "captured," the word "by" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "from."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, that should be "captured from Gen. Burgoyne," not "captured by" in the title.

The SPEAKER. That can be amended after the bill is passed.

The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to loan to the State of New York the brass fieldpieces and one brass howitzer captured from Gen. Burgoyne at the Battle of Saratoga."

GEORGE WASHINGTON MEMORIAL BUILDING.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5494) to provide a site for the erection of a building to be known as the George Washington Memorial Building, to serve as the gathering place and headquarters of patriotic, scientific, medical, and other organizations interested in promoting the welfare of the American people.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas George Washington, on July 9, 1799, said: "It has been my ardent wish to see a plan devised on a liberal scale which would spread systematic ideas through all parts of this rising Empire," and it was Washington's wish to materially assist in the development of his beloved country through the promotion of science, literature, and art, and with the firm conviction that "knowledge is the surest basis of public happiness"; and

Whereas the changing conditions that time has brought require new methods of accomplishing the results desired by Washington and now a necessity of the American people; and

Whereas at the present time there is not any suitable building in the city of Washington where large conventions or in which large public functions can be held, or where the permanent headquarters and records of national organizations can be administered; and

Whereas a building should be provided in which there shall be a large auditorium, halls of different sizes where all societies pertaining to the growth of our best interests can meet, and such as it is deemed desirable may have permanent headquarters; and

Whereas the George Washington Memorial Association is now engaged in obtaining funds for the erection and endowment of a building suitable for the purposes above set forth, to be known as the George Washington Memorial Building: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That a building is hereby authorized to be erected in the District of Columbia, to be known as the George Washington Memorial Building.

SEC. 2. That the control and administration of said building, when erected, shall be in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

SEC. 3. That the George Washington Memorial Association is authorized to erect said building in accordance with plans to be prepared under the supervision of the Commission of Fine Arts, said building to be fireproof, faced wth granite, and to cost not less than $2,000,000; it shall have an auditorium that will seat not less than 6,000 people, and such other smaller halls, reception rooms, office rooms, etc., as may be deemed necessary to carry out the purposes for which the building is erected. And the said George Washington Memorial Association shall in addition provide a permanent endowment fund of not less than $500,000, to be administered by the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, the income from which shall, as far as necessary, be used for the maintenance of the said building.

SEC. 4. That in order to carry into effect this act permission is granted the George Washington Memorial Association to erect said building in the north end of the reservation known as Armory Square, bounded by Sixth and Seventh Streets west and B Street north and B street south. The south front of said building is to be on a line with the south front of the new National Museum Building, in the north end of the Smithsonian Park; and the said land is hereby set apart for that purpose.

SEC. 5. That said building may, among other purposes, be used for inaugural receptions and special public meetings authorized by Congress.

SEC. 6. That Congress may alter, amend, add to, or repeal any of the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDWICK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the value of this lot that it is proposed to give away?

The SPEAKER. Who is in charge of this bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GUDGER], who I notice is absent.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from North Carolina I do not care to take charge of the bill, because I am free to say that I do not give it my enthusiastic support. I suggest that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. What was the gentleman's inquiry?

Mr. HARDWICK. I wanted to know the value of the property that was to be given away.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to make some other inquiry of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Why?

The SPEAKER. Because the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GUDGER], who was in charge of the bill, is absent.

Mr. MANN. Well, there is no trouble about it, if the gentleman is absent. It can come up again.

Mr. COOPER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if the lot spoken of in this bill is the old Pennsylvania Railroad station lot.

Mr. BURNETT. I think so. I was not present at the time of the hearing and am not very familiar with it.

Mr. MANN. It is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When was it named Armory Square?

Mr. MANN. This is in front of Armory Square; this is not Armory Square. This is to put a building in what is called the Mall, this way from the National Museum, on the same front, to take up a lot of space that is now used as a park. It is where the Pennsylvania Railroad station used to be, between Sixth and Seventh Streets. There is no guaranty in it that they will commence to build, and the Government of the United States will have to finish the building or leave it unfinished.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a guaranty that they will not begin construction until $1,000,000 is subscribed, and that there will be a $2,000,000 building.

Mr. MANN. There is no guaranty that there will be 10 cents raised.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No beginning is to be made until they have a million dollars.

Mr. AUSTIN. Five hundred thousand dollars of the erection fund is already subscribed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is on paper.

Mr. MANN. Not a cent paid in.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is an amendment which they agreed to before the committee that no work should be commenced until a million dollars was subscribed and paid into the treasury.

Mr. MANN. Who determines that?

Mr. AUSTIN. The Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. MANN. They have nothing to do with the erection of the building.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then what is the gentleman's question—who determines what?

Mr. MANN. When a million dollars is paid into the treasury?

Mr. AUSTIN. That can be easily ascertained. The amendment provides that the actual construction of the building shall not be undertaken until $1,000,000 shall have been subscribed and paid into the treasury of the George Washington Association.

Mr. MANN. But who determines when it is done?

Mr. AUSTIN. A certificate of the treasurer stating that the money had been received, or a certificate from the bank in which the guaranty fund will be placed is sufficient to prove good faith and that the money is actually on hand.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Does it provide for a $2,000,000 building?

Mr. AUSTIN. It provides for a $2,000,000 public building, the title of which is to be in the regents of the Smithsonian Institution, with an endowment fund of half a million dollars to take care of the current expenses. There never was such a generous proposition submitted to this House, and there is no reason why it should not receive favorable consideration.

Mr. GARRETT. Where is the other million to come from? This provides that a million dollars must be raised, and it provides for a $2,000,000 building.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me say that the president is Mrs. Henry F. Dimock, of New York, sister of the late Secretary Whitney, of the Cleveland Administration. The vice presidents of the association are Mrs. Daniel Manning, Mrs. Henry R. Mallory, Miss Bessie J. Kibbey, Mrs. Charles J. Bell, and Mrs. Frederick McGuire, and the secretaries are Mrs. Nelson H. Henry and Miss Florence Guernsey. Mrs. Frank Northrop is treasurer, and among the advisory board are Senator Elihu Root; Dr. S. Weir Mitchell; Dr. William Welch; Gen. Horace Porter; Dr. Edwin Alderman, of the University of Virginia; Dr. Ira Remsen, of Johns Hopkins; Dr. Henry Fairfield Osborn; Dr. John A. Wyeth; and Dr. Thomas Nelson Page.

Mrs. Dimock has, as stated, already secured gilt-edge subscriptions to the extent of $500,000 and, if we will encourage her by donating this site, will secure the balance and, in my opinion, put this meritorious proposition through. She is a talented, public-spirited, and patriotic woman, and Congress should cooperate with her by the passage of this bill, which has already passed the Senate.

Mr. GARRETT. I recognize the distinguished personnel of this organization and the excellent personnel of the organization. I do not make any question whatever about that. The question which I ask is, How is it contemplated that the second million dollars shall be raised? It is provided that there must be a million dollars before construction work begins. The bill does not provide that the title shall not pass, does it?

Mr. RAKER. The title never passes.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it expected that the Government will ever be called upon to appropriate for this building?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not a dollar.

Mr. GARRETT. What assurance has the gentleman from Tennessee for stating that?

Mr. AUSTIN. The assurance of the officers of this association who evidence their good faith by raising a million dollars before construction begins.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. Would it not be appropriate here to amend this bill by providing that the construction shall not begin until $2,000,000 is provided for, and then provide for some officer by name to determine that fact? Then you will have the thing entirely arranged. Have a provision that until the certificate of this officer is first obtained that the $2,000,000 is subscribed and paid in they shall not start to turn a sod of ground. If that provision is put in, I think no better thing could be done than to permit such a building on that corner, costing $2,000,000, for the purposes named.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection to the bill being properly amended so as to meet any just or reasonable criticism.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Union Calendar, No. 218 (S. 109), an act to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk read, "Union Calendar 218." I hold in my hand Union Calendar 219, and I would like to know if this is the bill which is under consideration.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is Senate bill 109.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is a typographical error.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object, so it will not be necessary to read the bill any further.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are several errors of that kind, typographical and otherwise, upon the calendar, and I hope that the clerk who has charge of that will correct them, so that the numbers of the calendar will be correct according to the numbers on the bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] objects.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to state that this is a bill of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE]. It is in accordance with a bill that has already passed, opening most of this reservation for settlement. This is only a balance that should be opened, and the bill has passed the Senate unanimously and has been reported unanimously from the committee. I know of no reason why the bill should not become a law. I hope that the gentleman from Illinois will not object. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is at present in a sanitarium in Indiana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Texas wants to pass this bill over for the present on account of the sickness of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have no objection to that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would rather do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to pass this bill without prejudice on account of the sickness of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is going to object to the bill for the present we can not prevent it, but I was desirous very much, on account of the absence of my colleague, at his request, to dispose of this bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to passing the bill without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, PLYMOUTH, MASS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6472) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell certain land to the First Baptist Church of Plymouth, Mass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant, relinquish, and convey, by quitclaim deed, for and in consideration of $100 cash, to the First Baptist Church of Plymouth, Mass., that portion of the Burn's lot included in the Federal building site in said city, to the south of the continuation of the southerly boundary line of the next adjacent property conveyed to the United States by said First Baptist Church, and to deposit the proceeds of such sale in the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REDWOOD PARK, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 19476) granting certain lands to the State of California to form a part of Redwood Park in said State.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to transfer by patent all of the vacant lands owned by the United States in townships 8 and 9 south, ranges 3 and 4 west, Mount Diablo meridian, in the State of California, to the said State of California, on condition that the said lands be added to and form a part of the Redwood Park now owned and maintained by said State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill covers certain lands in townships 8 and 9 south, ranges 3 and 4 west, and it is to donate them to the State of California. That seems to be a proper thing to do. I notice that the department says that the lands in township 8 are a considerable distance from the reservation and probably would be of no

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that. The total amount in township 9. Would not the gentleman from California be willing to eliminate that?

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that. The lands in township 9 are a considerable distance from the present boundaries of the park, and I see no objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "State" add the following:

"Provided, That this act shall not interfere with valid existing rights initiated by settlement on any of said lands under the public-land laws prior to February 10, 1902, and maintained in accordance with the law under which initiated up to the date of the passage of this act, if proper application to enter said lands be made within 90 days from date of approval hereof: Provided further, That whenever these lands cease to be used as a public park by the said State of California the same shall again revert to the United States."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior recommended this amendment as to the reserving of valid existing rights up to a certain date, and the committee felt that they should put on this amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior and the amendment suggested by me as one of the members of the subcommittee appointed to consider this bill, and the subcommittee recommended this subsequent amendment, namely:

Provided further, That whenever these lands cease to be used as a public park by the said State of California the same shall again revert to the United States.

We felt that when the State ceased using it for a public park, and a public park only, then the land should return to the United States as Government land. That, therefore, protects the Government. The committee felt that the bill in that condition ought to pass.

Mr. CANNON. How much is this—how many sections?

Mr. RAKER. Only about 800 acres——

Mr. MANN. Thirty-nine hundred and eighty-five; the gentleman is only off a little over 3,000 acres.

Mr. RAKER. I mean about 4,000. The California Redwood Park, now owned by the State of California, and the land covered by this bill amounts to 3,985.25 acres. The report of the Secretary of the Interior upon this bill was made to the Committee on the Public Lands, and is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 21, 1912.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I am in receipt of your request for a report on H. R. 19476, granting certain lands to the State of California.

This bill is identical with S. 5361, upon which this department, on March 6, 1912, reported as follows to the Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate:

This bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the State of California for all vacant lands owned by the United States in Tps. 8 and 9 S., Rs. 3 and 4 W., Mount Diablo meridian, in California, on condition that said lands be added to and form a part of the California Redwood Park, now owned and maintained by said State.

The Redwood Park, consisting of lands acquired by the State of California through purchase, lies in secs. 29, 32, and 33, T. 8 S., R. 3 W., secs. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, T. 9 S., R. 3 W., and sec. 1, T. 9 S., R. 4 W., Mount Diablo meridian, and contains about 4,000 acres.

The townships named in the bill were surveyed and plats duly filed about 40 years ago, and the lands were subject to entry until February 10, 1902, when this department withdrew them from settlement and entry pending their proposed donation to the State for park purposes. In T. 9 S., R. 4 W., are 3,025.23 acres still unappropriated; in T. 8 S., R. 3 W., however, there is only one 40-acre tract remaining vacant; in T. 8 S., R. 4 W., there are 480 acres, and in T. 9 S., R. 3 W., there are 440 acres.

The unappropriated tracts in T. 8 S., Rs. 3 and 4 W. (namely, NW. ¼ NW. ¼ sec. 23, of the first-named township, and NE. ¼ SW. ¼ sec. 9, N. ½ NW. ¼ sec. 10, NE. ¼ NW. ¼ sec. 13, NE. ¼ and N. ½ S. ½ sec. 21, of the last-named township) are so widely scattered and at so great a distance from the park that it is not thought that they would be of use in connection therewith. However, this department does not desire to interpose any objection to the pending bill, and recommends its enactment into law.

It would appear that some provision should be made for the protection of the right of persons who may have made settlement upon portions of the land prior to the withdrawal of February 10, 1902, and whose period for making entry had not then expired. It is suggested, therefore, that the bill be amended by adding the following proviso:

"Provided, That this act shall not interfere with valid existing rights initiated by settlement on any of said lands under the public-land laws prior to February 10, 1902, and maintained in accordance with the law under which initiated up to the date of the passage of this act, if proper application to enter said lands be made within 90 days from date of approval hereof."

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

I trust there will be no objection to the consideration of this bill. The entire State is interested in it. It will always be preserved as and for a public park for the use of all the people of the United States, improved and beautified by the citizens of California at the State's expense, and if at any time in the future it should not be so used it then reverts to the United States and becomes a part of the public domain, to be disposed of as the wisdom of Congress shall approve. The more "beauty spots" we preserve the better it is for our people. We want more playgrounds, and this will be one of them. Let us do all we can to conserve these natural parks, and when we find a State willing to assist we should encourage its laudable efforts.

Mr. HAYES. If township 8 is stricken out, there are only about 3,400 acres.

Mr. MANN. There are 3,985 acres.

Mr. RAKER. I did not get through with the matter. The gentleman is right as to the amount provided in the bill as it stands.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, or suggest that the gentleman from California ask unanimous consent, to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, it being on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, in line 5, at the end of the line, the words "eight and."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "eight and" at the end of the line.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the word "California" be inserted between the word "the" and the word "Redwood," line 9, page 1.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, insert the word "California" between the word "the" and the word "Redwood."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting certain lands to the State of California to form a part of California Redwood Park in said State."

On motion of Mr. HAYES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMERICAN TRADE AND FOREIGN SHIPPING MONOPOLIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23470) to protect American trade and American shipping from foreign monopolies.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23470) to protect American trade and American shipping from foreign monopolies.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever in a proceeding brought under the provisions of the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," it shall be adjudged that the owners, managers, or operators of any vessel or vessels, whether of the United States or of any foreign country, are engaged in a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or are monopolizing or attempting to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce, in violation of such act, the court may, by its judgment or decree, prohibit all vessels employed pursuant to such contract, combination, or conspiracy, or in such monopolization or attempt to monopolize, from entering at or clearing from any port of the United States; whereupon it shall be unlawful for such vessel or vessels to so enter or clear until the court shall find that such contract, combination, or conspiracy has been canceled, terminated, or dissolved, or such monopolization or attempt to monopolize ended.

SEC. 2. That a penalty of $25,000 shall be imposed upon any vessel which shall enter or clear from any port of the United States in violation of the provisions of a judgment or decree rendered as provided in section 1 of this act, for each and every such entry or clearance, which penalty or penalties may be recovered by proceedings in admiralty in the district court of the United States for the district in which said vessel may be, and which court may direct the sale of said vessel for the purpose of realizing the amount of said penalty or penalties and cost.

SEC. 3. That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to cancel any contract for carrying the ocean mails pursuant to the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," on satisfactory evidence to him that any vessel performing such a service under such contract is, at the time of performing such service, owned, operated, or controlled by any person or persons who, in any proceeding, civil or criminal, instituted by the Government of the United States, have been adjudged by a court of the United States to have violated the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and that said vessel performing such a service under such contract at the time of performing such service is being used to carry out the purposes and objects adjudged unlawful in such proceeding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I desire to inquire of the gentleman what is the purport of this bill and whom it is desired to reach? I notice that the bill reads, "To protect American trade and American shipping from foreign monoplies." Is it the intention of this bill to protect American trade from foreign monopolies or also from our own shipping monopolies?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will say to the gentleman, both. I was going to ask unanimous consent, if the bill should pass, to strike out the word "foreign." That remained in the bill after the bill was changed.

Mr. SABATH. Now, this appears to be a very important measure, and as I have noticed the gentleman states that he and the committee have overlooked the amending of the bill as it should be amended, and believing that perhaps there may be several other provisions in the bill that ought to be amended, I believe the gentleman, in addition to what I have stated, should explain to the House what he aims at or what the bill really means.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will be very glad to explain the bill to the gentlemen. This bill, I may say for the benefit of the House, was drawn by the Attorney General in the present form in which we now have it. The failure to strike out the word "foreign" was an omission when the bill was changed. Now what this bill means is simply this, that if any combination, either foreign or domestic in shipping, is convicted of a violation of the Sherman antitrust law, then in the decree there may be entered up a provision preventing any ship used for the purpose from entering or clearing from any American port, and the purpose of the bill is to perfect the remedy. Under the law as it exists to-day you can enter such a decree, but only against the persons owning the ship. Now I think it would be a very great advantage to enter that decree against the ship itself, and every member of our committee agrees to this. The bill is unanimously reported, and the chairman, Judge ALEXANDER, and Mr. HARDY, of Texas, and myself, saw the Attorney General and conferred with him in regard to the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose the conditions described by the gentleman were to exist and one of those vessels bound for some port in some country other than the United States was compelled to put into a port of the United States in distress. The penalty would run against that vessel.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Not unless suit had been brought against the vessel and it had been adjudged to be in violation of the law, and if under those circumstances it come into our port, having violated our law, why should the vessel be permitted to clear until it has paid its fine?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think this bill goes further than that. These vessels might have departed to some other port. If such a vessel enters or clears an American port after the decree and is subject to a decree, it might be compelled to enter a port of the United States because of distress at sea. Now, the question to my mind is, would it not be a gross injustice to penalize a vessel under such conditions.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not think that any such occasion would arise; but if it did, I would see no objection to it. After they had been adjudged guilty of violating our laws, if they came in our port under any circumstances, why should they not be punished?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There has been some question recently about our ability to reach foreign vessels concerning which there may be a controversy, such, for instance, as would arise from the sinking of the Titanic. There is not any doubt about our ability to reach such vessels if the companies controlling them should own real estate at any of the ports of the United States, is there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would say, according to the decision of the district court in New York recently, there is no question about our being able to reach any of these vessels that come to our ports.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We certainly can if they own property in the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is a decision of the court in New York in any event.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If this bill passes it means no more nor less than this, that if it is determined by an action in court and by the judgment of a court that a foreign vessel or a company owning a foreign vessel is engaged in such a combination as is herein set forth it is subject to the penalties herein imposed, and not otherwise.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It adds an additional remedy, as I have attempted to explain. Under the law as it exists now, in the opinion of the Attorney General, there could be a decree preventing the clearing or entering the vessel against the owner of the vessel, but if this is passed they can enter the decree against the vessel itself, and the Attorney General thinks that would be of great advantage.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It contemplates the abrogation of contracts by the Postmaster General for carrying the mails. That, of course, is a very important amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That can not be done until they have been adjudged to have violated the laws.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then such a contract could not be abrogated until it was determined by a court proceeding that there was such a combination as is offensive to this law.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is correct. And I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there are three suits of that character now pending—two against foreign shipping and one against domestic shipping—running from Puget Sound to Alaska, and it would have application to all of these suits.

Mr. HARDY. I would suggest to the gentleman that the title of the bill ought to be changed so as to get it right.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I was going to ask unanimous consent to amend the title after the bill passed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask in regard to the language of the third section. You undertake there to authorize the cancellation of any contract entered into by the Post Office Department relative to the carrying of the mails; but it does not seem clear to me that you limit the cancellation of the contract with those ships that are used in pursuance to an agreement that is conrary to the law prohibiting a monopoly. I have tried to follow it so as to get a perfect understanding in regard to it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It was given a great deal of consideration.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be; but either one of two things must happen. We must either abrogate our functions and accept the gentleman's statement, or the Attorney General's statement, or somebody else's statement, or we must undertake to understand the bill.

Mr. MANN. The language provides that vessels owned by any person or corporation that has been adjudged guilty of violation——

Mr. SHERLEY. That is just it. I am not prepared to say you ought to carry the punishment that way. A man may be the owner of a ship, using it in an entirely separate business, and he may be adjudged in violation of the antitrust law in some other business.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, the bill also provides, in addition to that, that the vessel must be used for the purpose of carrying out the objects and purposes of the law.

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not say that in section 3, and I want to find out——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will find that in line 9, where it says:

> And that said vessels performing such a service under such contract at the time of performing such service is being used to carry out the purposes and objects adjudged unlawful in such proceedings.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is right. I found the word "contract" related to a Government contract and not an unlawful contract, and did not notice the concluding lines.

Mr. MANN. Which was very natural.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As I said to the gentleman, we did put in a great deal of time to perfect the language of this bill. It may not be right, and we would like to invite criticism of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The trouble is that it is impossible, at 20 minutes to 6 o'clock, with a handful of people here, really to consider a question of this kind. What the gentleman is asking is that we take it on faith.

Mr. MANN. The bill is well drawn. It is very carefully drawn. There is no question about that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will wait until the gentleman from Colorado has finished.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I wanted to suggest and inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] why we did not have a certificate of good character upon this bill from the Attorney General in the form of a written opinion indorsing it, so that it would be in the record here and would be a legal document that we can read and digest a little.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is right—that it ought to be there.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. In a matter of this importance I think the Attorney General, whether he wrote the bill or not, ought to go on record as fathering it, giving some reason why this should be enacted here.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is endeavoring to be sarcastic at my expense.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon; I am not.

Mr. MANN. There is a great deal of difference between a bill involving local legislation and a bill about some land somewhere.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have no doubt this has received more consideration than a local bill.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt it has.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will say that the Attorney General wrote the report and was present at the meeting of our committee in person.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is there a published hearing on this bill?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; I think so.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There were hearings had before the committee, but they are not printed. This presents a question of law, and——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Very often the hearings are printed on an important bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I mean in this case. The bill as originally introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] provided that any foreign vessel entering an American port—a vessel that might be in one of these combinations in violation of the Sherman antitrust act—should be subject to the penalties provided in this bill. It did not meet the approval of the committee. We referred the bill to the Department of Justice, suggesting that it should apply to domestic as well as foreign combinations. A communication was received by the committee from the Department of Justice, suggesting a substitute bill for the original bill introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]. That bill did not meet the views of the committee, and by request the Attorney General appeared before the committee, and the provisions of the bill were thoroughly discussed and certain amendments were suggested. The Attorney General then took the bill back to the Department of Justice and gave it thorough consideration and returned the bill to the committee substantially in the present form, and it was reintroduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Now, if there is anything in the bill that gentlemen do not understand, the gentleman from Washington and I and other members of the committee present will undertake to explain it. However, I may say it was designed to meet this situation: Under the Sherman antitrust law the court may in a decree declare a combination to be unlawful. The committee thought that it should be put beyond question that the court in the decree might not only declare the combination to be unlawful, but might specifically declare that the ships used as instruments to violate the law might be prohibited from entering or departing from an American port so long as that combination existed, and if they should attempt to enter or depart during that time they should be subjected to the penalty provided in the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In a moment. Now, the question came up: How could the law be administered? Simply in this way: If a foreign ship that was declared by the court in the decree to be in an unlawful combination should enter or undertake to depart from an American port, or if a company owning such a ship wanted that ship to enter or depart from an American port, the burden would be upon it to show that it was no longer in that combination. The burden would not be imposed on the Government to show that the ship or the company owning it was in that combination—a burden which you will readily understand would be an onerous one on the Government—but would rest with the owner of the vessel.

Now, it has been said that if we undertake to enforce such a penalty in view of the fact that 90 per cent of our foreign trade is carried in foreign ships, we may stop them from departing from American ports and we will not have the means of carrying our foreign commerce. The answer is that these ships are dependent for their profits on our commerce and it is up to us whether or not, in view of that situation, we will let them continue to violate the law and trample it under foot or face that contingency. In my view, rather than be shut out of this remunerative trade, rather than have their ships rot at the docks or seek other less profitable trade, they will obey the law. The purpose of this bill is to strengthen the Sherman anti-trust law.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I am not criticizing the purpose of the bill so much as I am a bill of this importance, involving grave legal questions, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky, rushing it through under unanimous consent, without any opinion of the Attorney General to go in the RECORD, to be referred to hereafter.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I feel authorized to say that this bill has the approval of the Attorney General.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not doubt the gentleman's word at all, but it ought to be on record so that the Congress of the United States would know what that opinion is and have a chance to refer to it hereafter. I have observed that bills that have not involved one-millionth part as much as this bill have been called up and somebody bobbed up and insisted that there should be a departmental report on it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Whether there was considered the proposition on how far we had the right to determine that a contract of foreign owners of a foreign ship, legal in their country, should be made illegal by our laws, so as to permit us to prohibit the use of our ports to such ship. We have various treaty engagements with most of the maritime nations of the world, guaranteeing equality of treatment of their vessels and our own, and without having any opinion, I want to know if that phase of this matter was considered.

We have handicapped shipping, both American and foreign, in as many ways as possible, and frequently have done it without knowing that we were doing it. If we could repeal most of the maritime laws, which are archaic—a hundred years old—we would get a merchant marine that the gentleman from Washington talks about so much and which he desires to create at the expense of the Public Treasury. What I am concerned about is whether all the angles of this important bill have been considered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is evident there is no quorum present, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 21, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of State submitting estimate of appropriation to be included in the sundry civil appropriation bill to pay expenses of delegates of the United States to the International Conference on Maritime Law, to meet at Brussels in 1912 (H. PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the Socialistische Liedertafel of New York, remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called literacy test amendment to the immigration law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the adoption of the immigration bill as passed by the Senate, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of the B. Glowacki Loan and Building Association, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation levying a special excise tax on building and loan associations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Johnsonville, Ill., remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of the Clinton County Medical Society, the Schuyler County Medical Society, the Clionion Society, of Pontiac, and of sundry citizens of Griggsville, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Trade Union League of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the safety of passengers on ocean-going vessels, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of members of the Woman's Club of Concord, N. H., praying for the ratification of the proposed treaties of arbitration between the United States, Great Britain, and France, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the acquisition of the Washington Gas Light Co. and its properties by the United States Government, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DILLINGHAM presented memorials of sundry citizens of St. Albans, Montpelier, Brattleboro, and St. Johnsbury, all in the State of Vermont, remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HEYBURN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Preston, Idaho, remonstrating against the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I present a resolution adopted by the International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, indorsing the workmen's compensation, the restriction of immigration, and the anti-injunction bills. I ask that the resolution lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted May 17, 1912, at Harrisburg, Pa., by Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, over 800 delegates being present. Adoption of resolution followed many days' discussion of Senate workmen's compensation bill, which has passed Senate; Dillingham immigration bill (S. 3175), which has passed Senate; and anti-injunction bill, which has passed House.

Whereas as there are now pending in Congress the following bills in the interest of labor, the passage of which our joint national legislative representative is expected to and is aiding in securing: The anti-injunction bill, in which every member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is surely interested, which has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate; an immigration restriction bill, favored by the various labor and civic organizations throughout the country and which surely ought to be by this convention, that has passed the Senate and is now pending in the House; and the workmen's compensation bill, that has passed the Senate and is now pending in the House; and

Whereas there has appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD statements made by a member of this order, from which we quote the following paragraph:

"Believing that the individual members should get behind those officers (grand officers) and give them their undivided support and loyalty and show our friends in the Senate, viz, Senator REED, Senator ASHURST, Senator JEFF DAVIS, Senator OVERMAN, and a few others whom he terms the force opposing them, that we are behind them. In other words, that we are a lot of cattle following the Judases to the slaughtering pens. He says, 'What would you think of a local chairman who was adjusting a grievance for his division, and a member should give the facts and try to influence others against that chairman?' I ask him, 'What would you think of a chairman who was working in with the railway company to reduce your wages from 300 to 800 per cent?' That is what Wills and his grand officers are doing, working hand in hand with the railway companies to reduce your compensation from 300 to 800 per cent. He says, 'It looks to me to be on the same principle as that of a soldier shooting an officer in the back who was bravely leading them in a charge or attack upon the enemy.' What brave general does he mean? Those of the militia or those of the Regulars that led their soldiers against the union miners of Colorado, the striking railway men in 1904, or those brave generals that led their soldiers against the women and children in Lawrence, Mass., this last year? Does he style Wills and the other grand executives with those brave generals? If he does, I do not question him;" and

Whereas such matter as quoted, left unchallenged, interferes with our prestige as an organization and with our national legislative representative in the work to which he has been assigned: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention unqualifiedly indorse the action of our joint national legislative representative, Brother H. E. Wills, in his efforts to secure the enactment of the anti-injunction bill, the restriction of immigration bill, and the workmen's compensation bill.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the passage of the so-called 8-hour bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by members of the Owen Roe Club, of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the appointment of a commission and against the proposed appropriation of $7,500,000 for the purpose of celebrating the 100 years of peace with England, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the New York County Lawyers' Association, of New York, praying that an appropriation be made for the purchase of a new site for the erection of a Federal building in New York City, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented a memorial of Utah Lodge, No. 139, Independent Order B'rith Sholom, of Salt Lake City, Utah, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Salt Lake County Medical Society, of Utah, praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RAYNER. I present a memorial remonstrating against the passage of the Owen medical bill. The memorial is signed by a number of citizens of Maryland. I ask that it lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, together with the signatures thereto.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, together with the signatures, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, do earnestly ask Congress not to pass Senate bill No. 1, known as the Owen bill, or any similar medical legislation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CUMMINS. On behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 778) thereon. It is the resolution relative to the presidential term.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. CRAWFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 10th instant proposing to increase the salary of the messenger to the Committee on Claims from $900 per annum to $1,440 per annum intended to be proposed to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), reported it without amendment, submitted a report (No. 779) thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 6565) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Nogales, in the State of Arizona, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 780) thereon.

Mr. THORNTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4584) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 781) thereon.

Mr. BRISTOW, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 5170) to reimburse Charles C. Crowell for two months' extra pay in lieu of traveling expenses, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 782) thereon.

PRACTICE OF OSTEOPATHY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill (H. R. 19236) to regulate the practice of osteopathy in the District of Columbia, now on the calendar, was reported under circumstances that require its recommittal. I had promised certain physicians that they should have a hearing on the subject, which I had forgotten at the time. I therefore move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

THE LAND OFFICE (S. DOC. NO. 692).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a copy of an address by Hon. Fred Dennett, Commissioner of the General Land Office, delivered in Washington, D. C., May 7, 1912, on the occasion of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of that office, the subject being "The problems of the Land Office that have been the problems of the Nation." I ask that the address be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

INDIAN LANDS IN OKLAHOMA (S. DOC. NO. 690).

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States relative to the allotment of and taxes on certain Indian lands in Oklahoma, also relating to the conveyances and the cancellation of the conveyances, deeds, and mortgages thereon, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

YELLOWSTONE RIVER BRIDGE, MONTANA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6161) to authorize the Great Northern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Yellowstone River, in the county of Dawson, State of Montana, which was, on page 1, line 7, after "River," to strike out all down to and including the word "meridian," in line 11, and to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, to be selected by the said company and approved by the Secretary of War, either in Mackenzie County, N. Dak., or Dawson County, Mont."

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 13566. An act for the relief of soldiers and sailors who enlisted or served under assumed names, while minors or otherwise, in the Army or Navy of the United States during any war with any foreign nation or people; and

H. R. 23461. An act authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Russell Fork of Big Sandy River, at or near Millard, Ky.; and

H. R. 23634. An act to authorize the village of Oslo, in the county of Marshall, in the State of Minnesota, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 9061.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] gave notice of an intent to address the Senate at this time.

Mr. BORAH. I had not noticed it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LEA. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Curtis	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Dillingham	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Bourne	du Pont	Nixon	Smoot
Bradley	Fall	O'Gorman	Stone
Brandegee	Fletcher	Oliver	Sutherland
Bristow	Foster	Overman	Swanson
Bryan	Gallinger	Page	Thornton
Burnham	Gronna	Penrose	Tillman
Catron	Heyburn	Perkins	Townsend
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Rayner	Warren
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Richardson	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Root	Works
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Sanders
Crawford	Lea	Shively
Cullom	Lodge	Simmons

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Chamber on important business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

PHASES IN POLITICAL SITUATION.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, any man having even a meager knowledge of ancient lore will recall the story of Damon and Pythias and the story of David and Jonathan. Each of these stories were stories of beautiful friendship wherein the love of men for each other has had few parallels in the annals of mankind. The unselfish affection that Damon and Pythias had for each other and that David and Jonathan had for each other has in each case been made the subject of song and story, and their adventures and sacrifices in the cause of friendship are among the most beautiful and elevating of human traditions. It is not now my purpose, however, to speak at length of these illustrious characters or to dwell upon the lofty examples they set before mankind except by way of contrast. A few years ago the American people and the civilized world were given to understand that here in our dear country we had a reproduction of these glorious traditions of the far distant past. We were led to believe that the combined and consolidated spirits of Damon and Jonathan, one of these lovely twain, had come out of their haven of rest and taken refuge in the corpus of Theodore Roosevelt, and that the combined spirits of David and Pythias had in like manner come to rest on the ample bosom of William Howard Taft as the Abraham of his day. Thus in happy conjunction both of these old stories of ancient lore and love were reproduced here in this new world of ours for the edification and uplifting of the human race. But things have happened since, and are happening now, to demonstrate in a way the fickleness of human affairs and the difference between men of ancient and modern times. For years the susceptible and too gullible American people were felicitous in the thought that these two supposedly great Americans were indissolubly united in patriotic devotion to the public welfare—

> Two souls with but a single thought,
> Two hearts that beat as one.

And so it continued until the slimy, poisonous serpent of ambition crawled across the path they were walking and divided them. This serpent was the same old serpent who invaded the Garden of Eden. He comes into the world off and on, and too often in diverse forms and with many varieties of temptation. In this instance he appeared as the vaulting angel of ambition, pointing each of these mighty men and erstwhile devoted friends to the dazzling bauble of temporal power. Both had tasted the bittersweet of power and liked it overmuch. Both were tempted and both fell. Each craved too much the limelight and the luscious plum of place and power. As a result both threw sweet friendship to the winds and poised their spears for a mortal combat for the thing—this thing of power—each most desired. For years they had walked arm in arm along flowering paths and under blue skies bending low. Then came this satanic angel of ambition waving his hands, and, presto! change! a dark cloud spread over the sky. Instead of peace we have had war—war with knives and knives to the hilt. As a consequence of this ferocious contest the country and the world has been treated to a series of spectacular vaudeville stunts in politics without a parallel in our history and which I devoutly hope will not be again repeated. This titanic struggle has been waged between the most eminent leaders of one of our great political parties—the Republican Party—which for the most part has, unfortunately and under many beguiling but false pretenses, controlled the destinies of the Nation for more than a generation. It has been waged between candidates for the nomination of this party to the great office of President. One of these candidates is now President of the United States and another has been President. And besides these two there is still another conspicuous Republican leader, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, now a Senator in Congress, who seeks this exalted station. This struggle has been and is being waged with a maddening ferocity between these exceptionally distinguished men and their closest and most trusted allies and confidential advisers.

Mr. President, passing over the personal and party aspects of this miserable squabble, is it not truly a sad spectacle we are witnessing? These world-famed party leaders have been for months circling the country, running from ocean to ocean, appealing to their party friends, State by State, for support of their respective candidacies; and in transitu day after day, many times repeated, abusing each other like pickpockets in language akin to the vernacular of a fish market or even something worse. The world outside looks on aghast, and the press and the reading public of Europe and all the enlightened nations everywhere criticize, cartoon, laugh, and taunt. If, indeed, the sainted dead are permitted to look down and view the transitory scenes of this world in which they were once mighty actors, what think you Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and other great Presidents of the past would think of the things their astonished eyes might behold? Can you imagine George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, or Abraham Lincoln gadding about the country running a campaign for the Presidency of the United States as a candidate for constable might run his campaign in one of the red-light districts of a great city? We have heard many harsh and sometimes thoughtless and unjust things said about the Senate and about the House of Representatives. But may not Senators and Representatives now well ask their censorious constituencies to look upon the scenes being daily portrayed in the course of this curious personal and party conflict, conscious always that the world is also looking on, and when they can almost hear the gibes and jeers that come from every land, and say for which department of the Government they most feel the hot red blush of shame on the cheek.

Mr. President, I have thought it might be well to put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the benefit of some future historian who might desire to write about this remarkable period in our history some of the polite exchanges of compliments between the great leaders of the Republican Party who are seeking the doubtful honor of a nomination by that party to the Presidency. I have thought also this might in some way both adorn a tale and point a moral. I wish to put some things of future historical importance in easy and convenient form. My purpose is to preserve important data for the historian of the future, and I hope no man will accuse me of any ulterior or partisan purpose. It is difficult to determine what to select, where to begin, or where to end, for the field is so wide and full of interest.

Perhaps I had as well begin in this way: The President and his immediate friends have declared that former President Roosevelt in his present contest is backed by a syndicate of multimillionaire trust magnates, with George W. Perkins at the head, and that this syndicate seeks corruptly to control the Republican Party through the use of money. This is charged by a Republican President, seeking reelection to his great office, against a former Republican President, who is his chief rival for their party nomination.

Then comes Senator ROBERT MARION LA FOLLETTE, butting in, and contributes his testimony upon this particular count in the indictment which the President prefers against his predecessor. I read the following clipped from the Washington Star of May 18 and which was repeated in other publications:

In his opening speech, delivered at Bowling Green, about 20 miles out of Toledo, Senator LA FOLLETTE challenged Col. Roosevelt to make public forthwith a complete list of those who had contributed to his campaign and the amounts they had contributed. The challenge came coupled with the assertion that three men closely identified with Wall Street—

Mark you, I am reading now what a Republican Senator, himself a candidate for the Presidency, said about one of his rivals—namely, George W. Perkins and Judge E. H. Gary, of the United States Steel Corporation, and Dan R. Hanna, son of the late Senator Hanna, had furnished a campaign fund of $1,000,000, which was being freely spent for the purpose of getting delegates for Col. Roosevelt.

"I am prepared—

He said—

"to furnish at any time a complete list of donors to my campaign fund, with the amount contributed by each. I think Col. Roosevelt, who is soliciting votes in the Ohio primaries, should be equally frank with the people."

Think of that. A million dollars furnished by a syndicate of multimillionaire trust magnates to promote the candidacy of this self-appointed champion of the people; a million dollars scattered broadcast to control State primaries and conventions to elect delegates to a national convention; a million dollars to buy a nomination. That is what is meant, if anything is meant, by this charge that Taft and LA FOLLETTE make against Roosevelt. I ask my Republican friends over there if any of them impeach these witnesses? Do they call them in question? If you can not believe these men, then who among the whole Republican tribe, outside of this Chamber, can be credited?

Roosevelt admits on the stump that these trust magnates named by LA FOLLETTE are supporting him and contributing to his campaign. He does not say how much they have given. Taft says they have contributed an "enormous sum," and LA FOLLETTE says they have contributed a million dollars. Roosevelt admits that they have supplied him with the sinews of war, but to what extent he does not say. To this specific count in the indictment, naming the amount of the contributions, he pleads by remaining silent. Remember there is an old saying that silence is in substance a confession.

George W. Perkins organized the Harvester Trust. President Taft charges that Mr. Roosevelt when President suppressed the activities of the Department of Justice, when that department was moving to indict and prosecute the Harvester Trust and its chief officials, and he said this in a way that could only mean that Mr. Roosevelt was influenced in his course by improper considerations.

Mr. President, I have here a statement recently issued from the White House by Mr. Hilles, the President's private secretary, with respect to this Harvester Trust prosecution. This statement is really a historical fulmination, and I wish to read it into the RECORD that it may be preserved for future use. It is as follows:

The story of how President Roosevelt suppressed the case against the Harvester Trust for purely partisan purposes is told in a statement made public last night by Charles D. Hilles, Secretary to President Taft.

Mr. Hilles included in his statement one made by United States Attorney Townsend, who conducted an inquiry into the affairs of the Harvester Trust under direction of Charles J. Bonaparte, Mr. Roosevelt's Attorney General. Mr. Townsend recommended that proceedings be instituted against the Harvester Trust, but his recommendation was ignored.

The Hilles statement demonstrates that at one stage of the negotiations in connection with the Harvester Trust Attorney General Bonaparte showed disgust over the evident determination of President Roosevelt to temporize with George W. Perkins and his associates. The Hilles statement, which is a highly interesting historical document, is as follows:

Secretary to the President Hilles gave out the following statement at the White House last night:

"I have come to Washington to get United States Attorney Townsend's statement in reference to the Harvester Trust. It shows conclusively that President Roosevelt compelled his Attorney General to discontinue the harvester prosecution in the fall of 1907, 18 months prior to the colonel's retirement from office. It was reported to me that much interest in the incident has been awakened in Ohio, not alone on the part of those who object to oppression by a monopolistic corporation, but particularly on the part of those who were shocked at the suppression of the facts and the effort to shift the responsibility when the facts were brought to light.

"President Roosevelt's term expired two years after the matter had been placed in the hands of the prosecuting officer as the result of an investigation. It is quite apparent from the record that civil and criminal proceedings were about to begin; that about a year and a half before President Roosevelt went out of office George W. Perkins took a hand in matters, and that in a remarkably short time thereafter the whole matter was suppressed, stifled, strangled, or put through some other process which, by whatever name you call it, I have no doubt was quite satisfactory to the Harvester Trust. If anybody was responsible for it besides President Roosevelt and officials acting directly under his instructions it does not appear from the record.

"Mr. Townsend began his inquiry in the spring of 1906, and on February 21, 1907, Mr. Bonaparte transmitted Townsend's report to United States District Attorney Sims at Chicago, instructing him to take up the matter with a view to the institution of criminal prosecution against the individuals and corporations implicated, Mr. Townsend having recommended prosecution.

"Sims wrote that if the report 'proves to be correct, it is my judgment that civil proceedings can be successfully maintained against the Harvester Trust,' and that probably evidence could be secured to convict the corporation and possibly a number of the individuals concerned.

"There was delay, of which Senator Hansbrough complained to President Roosevelt, and Mr. Bonaparte wrote to the Senator that the case would receive immediate attention. An effort was made on the one hand to proceed with the prosecution; on the other hand, to secure delay through a protracted investigation by the Bureau of Corporations. In his written statement Townsend says that in the spring of 1908 he was abruptly ordered to the Pacific coast to begin another investigation and was, therefore, compelled to drop the Harvester matter. He says:

"'Attorney General Bonaparte told me the reason why I had not been authorized to institute the Harvester Trust suits. Shortly after I left Washington, in the spring of 1907, the Harvester Trust people in some way learned of my report and asked permission of Attorney General Bonaparte to file a written statement by way of defense. Mr. Bonaparte considered this statement (of the Harvester Trust) not only insufficient by way of defense but as a direct admission of all the essential facts, showing a violation of the antitrust laws.

CALLED ON ROOSEVELT.

"'Shortly afterwards Mr. Perkins (the organizer of the Harvester Trust) called upon Mr. Bonaparte, in company with Herbert Knox Smith and, I think, Cyrus H. McCormick—

Cyrus H. McCormick is the executive head of the Harvester Trust—

"They requested Mr. Bonaparte to accompany them on a visit to President Roosevelt for the purpose of persuading the President to refrain from prosecuting the Harvester Trust. Mr. Bonaparte refused to do so, upon the ground that the written statement filed by the Harvester Trust was in effect a confession of a violation of the law, and therefore he (Mr. Bonaparte) would not stultify himself by temporizing with the subject in any manner. Thereafter Mr. Perkins and Mr. Smith—and I think Mr. McCormick—went out and interviewed President Roosevelt and succeeded in persuading him not to prosecute the Harvester Trust, and shortly thereafter President Roosevelt instructed Attorney General Bonaparte not to take action.

"The suppressed papers show also that George W. Perkins was referred to as the representative of the 'far-reaching Morgan interests,' and that Mr. Perkins said to Commissioner Smith that if the Harvester Trust was to be attacked, then the Morgan interests were 'going to fight,' whereupon Mr. Smith wrote to President Roosevelt that 'it is a very practical question whether it is well to throw away now the great influence of the so-called Morgan interests.' President Roosevelt had sent the report to the Attorney General with these directions, 'Please do not file the suit till I hear from you.'

"Col. Roosevelt met the damaging disclosure by saying that Mr. Taft, as a member of his Cabinet, advised the action that subsequently was taken. He even alleged that if his memory served him, Mr. Taft made the motion in Cabinet meeting which resulted in substituting an investigation for a prosecution.

RECORDS BROUGHT IN.

"The records of the War Department were then introduced by President Taft to show that in the fall of 1907, during the full period of the correspondence, he was absent from the country in the Philippines and elsewhere. Col. Roosevelt then shifted his ground and said that President Taft approved the suppression of the suit after his return in January, 1908.

"This last charge is disproved by the record, which shows that on November 7, 1907—Mr. Taft was out of the country from early in September until December, 1907—Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations, telephoned Mr. Perkins, 'at the President's order,' that the President took the view that the bureau's investigation should come before the suit. Why, then, would the matter be brought before the Cabinet for serious discussion in January, 1908?

"If it was brought before the Cabinet in January, then Mr. Perkins had a 'scoop' of 60 days on the President's confidential advisers. It is significant, too, that the order directed Commissioner Smith to communicate with Mr. Perkins, of J. P. Morgan & Co., and not with the president or attorney of the Harvester Trust.

Mr. President, what do these accusations amount to?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. REED. I would not interrupt the Senator, but in connection with just what he is saying I want to call his attention to Senate Document No. 616, which contains the address of Mr. Roosevelt delivered at Boston, Mass., on April 27, 1912, which was printed from a copy furnished by the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON], manager of Mr. Roosevelt, and I direct attention to this language:

A VOICE. How about Perkins?

ROOSEVELT. Perkins? He is for me. You can't—I will tell you. Wait a minute. You can't put a question to me that it will embarrass me to answer for one moment. [Great applause.]

A VOICE. Go to him! Go to him!

ROOSEVELT. Wait a moment. I know that kind well. And you can guarantee that any supporter of mine comes out in the open and supports me. [Applause.] And you can guarantee also that after he has supported me, and I have accepted his support, I won't repudiate him afterwards.

Mr. STONE. Now, Mr. President, I will complete the question I was asking when my colleague interrupted me with his very pertinent contribution to this encyclopedia of current political literature.

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask the junior Senator from Missouri whether Mr. Roosevelt was alluding to Mr. Perkins or to Mr. Harriman.

Mr. REED. In this particular instance he was alluding to Mr. Perkins, although I also think I ought to say in fairness that he seems to have a different theory with reference to standing by Mr. Perkins than he did with reference to standing by Mr. Harriman.

Mr. STONE. I was about to propound this question: What did the President's private secretary mean to convey to the public mind when he gave out these statements? Did he mean to impute to Roosevelt an improper motive in taking the action he did? Every intelligent man can determine that for himself, but I think he can determine it in only one way.

Now, Mr. President, here is what Director MCKINLEY, the manager of the Taft campaign, has to say in a statement issued by him and published on Sunday morning last. He says:

In Massachusetts he (Roosevelt) charged that President Taft had made the motion in Cabinet meeting to suspend the proposed suit against the Harvester Trust. It was definitely established from public and private records that this decision was reached by President Roosevelt himself in the first week of November, 1907, at which time President Taft was, and had been, absent on a trip to Japan and the Philippines almost a full month. When cornered on this proposition Mr. Roosevelt crawled—and said that he had consulted Mr. Taft about it both before and after he had made that trip.

Then he goes on and, in substance, charges Col. Roosevelt with being convicted by the records of an intentional misrepresentation. He "crawled" out, changed his base, and changed the form of his accusation. That comes pretty nearly putting the redoubtable colonel in his own Ananias club. But the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON], manager of Col. Roosevelt's campaign, not to be outdone, comes back with a counter attack, and says:

Nothing more despicable and degrading has ever occurred in the history of American politics than the attempt of Mr. Taft through deliberate—knowing and sustained falsehood to misrepresent the facts regarding the case of the International Harvester Co. and to avoid personal responsibility for nonaction in the courts by the Government against that company. The statement issued at the White House last night is but a piece of the mendacity that has characterized the entire Taft utterance on this subject.

Behold Damon and Pythias at war! It is a spectacle for the gods. I call that hot stuff. I will not attempt to decide as to Taft's cognizance of or his connection with this shameful transaction. These two distinguished party leaders can settle that between themselves. It is not a part of my function to act as arbiter. But this disgraceful quarrel has at least made some facts clear beyond dispute. These facts may be stated as follows:

First. The Harvester Trust was organized in violation of law.

Second. The Department of Justice was taking steps to prosecute the trust when Perkins appeared to protest and to threaten, saying, among other things, that if the administration fought him and the Morgan combination they would fight back. Secretary Hilles calls particular attention to this in the statement I have quoted.

Third. President Roosevelt put a stop to the steps being taken by the Department of Justice to prosecute the trust.

Fourth. Perkins and his combination were shielded by White House interference.

Fifth. Perkins and his crowd are now backing Roosevelt with all their influence and a big part of their cash.

LA FOLLETTE says with a million dollars.

Mr. President, are the American people, indeed, so far lost to national honor, pride, and patriotism as to look with patience, aye, to look without indignation, upon things of this character? Let self-respecting Republicans remember, as I have said, that these are not Democratic accusations, but they are festering secrets that have been laid bare by this frightful quarrel between a Republican President, aroused to uncontrolled resentment, and a Republican ex-President, insane with uncontrolled ambition.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri, even supposing the contention of Mr. DIXON and ex-President Roosevelt was true that President Taft had advised a cessation of the prosecution against the trust, would that make any difference?

Mr. STONE. Not so far as Roosevelt is concerned. It might involve Taft as misstating the fact, for he denies that he was consulted. Roosevelt says he was consulted; Taft says he was not. It is a question of veracity.

Unfortunately, the Harvester Trust case is not the only instance of its kind. I wish to read another extract from the speech delivered a few days ago by Senator LA FOLLETTE at Bowling Green, Ohio. The newspaper report I hold here is as follows:

After making the assertion that the three capitalists had raised this huge campaign fund to aid Col. Roosevelt, Senator LA FOLLETTE denounced the colonel for not enforcing the Sherman antitrust law while in the White House.

Proceeding he said:

"When Roosevelt became President," said the Senator, "he found awaiting action by the Government 149 criminal conspiracies representing corporations having less than $1,000,000,000 capitalization. Before the end of his administration these open violations against the law had increased until they represented corporations having a capitalization of more than $31,000,000,000. As a result, it is almost impossible for any President to crush the criminal trusts now without injury to legitimate business."

The uncomplimentary compliments these Republican candidates are bestowing on each other are numberless as well as without a parallel in political billingsgate. Here is a choice tidbit from Roosevelt's speech at Marion, Ohio. He said:

I notice that yesterday Mr. Taft attacked what I said about the tariff. What I proposed is perfectly feasible. Mr. Taft says he does not understand my proposition. I don't think he is capable of understanding it.

Mr. Taft has forgotten the plain people, who gave him his office and to whom he is responsible. He is well meaning but means well feebly. Under Mr. Taft the tariff has been treated from the standpoint of affording benefit only to the manufacturer.

I think the colonel is entirely correct about that; but the same was true while he was President. Col. Roosevelt continued:

And Mr. Taft has acted against the interests of the farmer and the wage earner. He has acted against the interests of the plain people. Mr. Taft has discovered now that I am dangerous to the people. Mr. Taft never discovered that I was dangerous to the people until I discovered that he was useless to the people.

How different was this May day in Ohio from the sweet Damon and Pythias May day of three and a half years ago! Then everything was lovely and the goose hung high, and the air was full of the music of friendship, confidence, and love. Now a stormy and blighting change has come over the spirit of their dreams.

On the same day that Roosevelt delivered the philippic I have just read, Taft gave forth this tearful jeremiad:

The memory of the names Mr. Roosevelt has called me still lingers in my ears. Since the time he began his personal attacks on me he has used all the epithets he could think of, and all the names in the calendar, such as no President has ever been subjected to by a man who has had two terms in that office.

But his lamentation was followed by wrath. He wiped his tears away and proceeded to blister Roosevelt with epithets. He called him an egotist, honey-fugler (whatever that is), a neurotic, and so on. A neurotic is a lunatic. Oh, it is beautiful!

Then Director MCKINLEY springs again into the arena on Sunday morning with the following:

Mr. Roosevelt is not running as a Republican at all. He is running as Theodore Roosevelt for the office of dictator of the Republic. He is now trying to dictate to the Republican Party what it shall do at Chicago. I hate to spoil Mr. Roosevelt's dream of unlimited power and to curb his consummate gall, but if he expects the Republican Party to nominate him for President, granting for the sake of argument that he had a chance of the nomination, he has picked out the wrong party.

In saying this MCKINLEY but reiterated what his chief, the President, had himself said repeatedly.

Then LA FOLLETTE butts in again with this well-timed compliment. This I clipped from the Washington Times. The report says:

Fully 8,000 persons heard LA FOLLETTE last night when he referred to President Taft as an "amiable, easy-going fat man" and denounced Col. Roosevelt as the violator of an oath of office sworn on "the same Bible Lincoln kissed."

That, too, is pretty hot stuff.

He scored both Taft and Roosevelt for "dragging" the honor of the Presidency into the "mire" of personal villification.

I do not know just what to think of the gentle and amiable example of moderation set by the distinguished Senator.

The President, however, caused no enthusiasm equal to that which the Wisconsin Senator created when he held illegal business combinations responsible for the present national unrest. Roosevelt, he charged, allowed hundreds of such combinations to be formed after he had sworn as President to enforce the Sherman law, which forbade them.

LA FOLLETTE here repeated his charge made in Chicago yesterday that a fund of $1,000,000 had been raised to nominate Roosevelt by George W. Perkins, Judge Gary, Dan R. Hanna, and other trust magnates.

In last Sunday morning's paper I find that President Taft renews his attack on Dan Hanna, one of Roosevelt's chief financial backers, charging him and his great corporation with having been indicted for violating the law against rebates. In Sunday morning's Washington Post the President is quoted as saying in a statement given out at Cincinnati Saturday night:

Mr. Roosevelt says that Dan Hanna's indictment for rebates was for a mere technical violation of the law and involved no moral delinquency. The fact is that the discontinuance of the criminal prosecution of Mr. Hanna personally was part of a settlement in which the companies represented by Mr. Hanna paid $143,000 of fines. This would seem to exceed a mere technical violation of the law.

Mr. Roosevelt has not seen fit to answer the question whether, if he is nominated and elected, he will discontinue the Steel Trust suit and the Harvester Trust, nor has he answered the question whether he will accept a fourth term.

This assault is met by the following message of defiance and warning, sent from Cleveland, near which city Roosevelt rested on the Sabbath. I read from the Washington Post of May 20:

Last night Hanna traveled from Ravenna to be on the stage when Roosevelt spoke. Should the former President be renominated and reelected, it is quite certain that Hanna will be a powerful factor in Ohio politics, and some are bold enough to predict that there may be a second Hanna named as United States Senator when the expected new deal in Republican affairs is made. This, of course, means the retirement of Senator THEODORE BURTON, who is not in the graces of Roosevelt.

Poor BURTON! We will miss him.

Taft further says in his Cincinnati statement given out Sunday morning, May 19, that Roosevelt considers himself the Republican Party, and that a failure of the national convention—to comply with his views and wishes puts those doing so in the attitude of bolters finds no parallel in history save in the famous words of Louis XIV, "The state, I am it."

"It is on a par with his declaration that 'I typify and embody' the progressive sentiment of the age."

But long before that, back in April, Roosevelt had fired a fusillade at Worcester, Mass., in which he accused the President of exposing private, confidential correspondence, and so forth.

Here is what he said:

Mr. Taft, without my permission, has quoted entire letters from me, written in answer to letters of his which were marked "confidential." I shall so far avail myself of his example as to quote four lines of a letter from him to me which was not marked "confidential." It was written shortly after he became President. It runs:

"I can never forget that the power I now exercise was voluntarily transferred from you to me, and that I am under obligation to you to see to it that your judgment in selecting me as your successor and bringing about the succession shall be vindicated, according to the standards which you and I in conversation have always formulated."

It is a bad trait to bite the hand that feeds you.

No other man in this country was as much interested as I was in having Mr. Taft succeed. No other man with my principles and convictions has supported him for so long a time and has so bitterly regretted being unable to support him for a longer time. I eagerly sought every opportunity to stand by him, and long after I felt deep in my heart that he was unfit to lead his people I refused to acknowledge the fact to myself, and struggled to convince myself that he was fit, and clutched at every opportunity to back him up.

Until less than a year ago I kept desperately hoping that either Mr. Taft himself would at least show himself reasonably fit for the task before him, or that if he failed, some one else would arise to whom the people could turn. Reluctantly I made up my mind that Mr. Taft could not do the task, and I became convinced that the people of the great West felt that I would be untrue to them if I refused to act as their standard bearer.

I do not think that Mr. Taft means ill; I think he means well. But he means well feebly, and during his administration he has been under the influence of men who are neither well meaning nor feeble. It is this quality of feebleness in a normally amiable man which preeminently fits such a man for use in high office by powers of evil.

On yesterday, in Ohio, Taft said this of Roosevelt:

Mr. Roosevelt said last Saturday in Cleveland that if he was not nominated he was going to bolt. He says, "I am the Republican Party, and therefore if you get enough votes in the convention to nominate some one else, it makes you the bolters and I remain the Republican Party."

He would then be saying, "I am the Government; I am the people; I am the whole thing." Gentlemen, it is unsafe to give a third term to a man of his unsound constitutional views, his impatience of legal restraint, his exaggerated ego, his desire for power.

There used to be a king in France known as the grand monarch, who said, "The state, I am it; I am the state"; and that is what Theodore Roosevelt is saying about the Republican Party.

Well, as a matter of fact, is not Roosevelt the Republican Party? If not, then what is the Republican Party?

After reading this last Taft pronunciamento the pugnacious Roosevelt comes back with a counter charge, saying that Taft is a feeble brother, incapable of understanding intricate public questions like the tariff, and that Taft did not discover that he, Roosevelt, was dangerous to the people until he, Roosevelt, discovered that he, Taft, was useless to the people. I might add that Roosevelt did not discover that Taft was useless until Taft discovered that Roosevelt was dangerous; and maybe both are right in what they say. Upon that I decline to pass judgment, although I have a well-defined opinion.

Mr. President, I might go on with this and multiply these delightful compliments bestowed by these Republican chieftains on each other almost without limit, but I think the service already rendered is sufficient, and so I will lay aside the remainder of my collections for another day.

Mr. President, if I regarded this unseemly wrangle between these Republican leaders merely from a partisan standpoint, I might exclaim:

Lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

But the shame of it all fills me with disgust and takes from the performance any pleasure I might derive over any possible party advantage because of it. The spectacle of three of the most eminent men in our public life, largely made so by the strange fortunes of politics, engaging in a contest of this character, so far below the standard that ought to distinguish the efforts of men promoting ambitions so high and honorable, brings our Government and people before the world in a way that ought to make every true American ashamed. I am striving to speak with moderation and with the least offense, although my heart swells with indignation that these men should put this unseemly blot on our escutcheon. However, I feel compelled, out of a sense of justice, to say that President Taft was evidently reluctant and slow to enter upon this ruffian fight. Innately Taft is a gentleman and averse to saying or doing anything incompatible with the dignity of his office or the good name of the country which has so highly honored him. I regret that he did not resolutely continue in the course he first thought he should follow, and ignore the exasperating assaults made upon him and his administration; but it seemed as if sensational attacks were making headway against him, and so, rather than hold aloft the standard that should always mark official and national dignity and lose, he unfortunately determined to return blow for blow. Out of all this has come this black chapter in American history.

What the end will be I can not tell. The last word in this tragic chapter will be written at Chicago. I say the last word will be written at Chicago because I can not believe that after this storm of strife and exposure the American electorate will consent to return the Republican Party to power. I paraphrase an old adage with this: "That when Republican politicians fall out the people have a better chance of getting what is due to them."

Of course I know there are thousands of men who for one reason or another will say that they would rather have any kind of Republican than any kind of Democrat for President. It is not difficult to understand that the men who say this have greater love of party than of country, or greater regard for some selfish interest than the national good. I can not believe, however, that the great body of American men and women so distrust one-half at least of the American people—by which I mean the Democratic Party—as to prefer to give to any kind of Republican President the great powers of that great office than to confide those powers to a Democrat professing the doctrines of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson.

Briefly let me contrast the dignified course of Democratic candidates for the presidential nomination with the course of Republican candidates as I have outlined that. Speaker CLARK, Leader UNDERWOOD, Gov. Marshall, Gov. Baldwin, and Gov. Burke have all remained steadfastly at their posts of official duty; and while Gov. Wilson and Gov. Harmon have made numerous speeches in different parts of the country, none of these distinguished Democrats has ever spoken a word in disparagement of his rivals. All of them have assumed a course so in accord with the highest political ethics and propriety that every one of them stands above reproach. Contrasting the records the Republican and Democratic candidates have made in this campaign, what Democrat—aye, what proud American—will not say that the course taken by the Democratic candidates is infinitely on a higher plane and more in accord with what patriotic Americans would desire than the course taken by Republican candidates?

Mr. President, I wish I could ask every American citizen this question: Look upon the picture made by these Republican candidates and then upon the picture made by these Democratic candidates and see which you like the best. Moreover, I would like to ask them in all good conscience to say whether they would rather trust the welfare and good name of the American Republic to a Democrat who has said no word nor committed any act to the Nation's discredit or to a Republican who has brought the American nationality into the shadow of shame.

EIGHT-HOUR LABOR LAW.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 9061) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or for any Territory or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, because certain Senators interested in this legislation are out of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crawford	Kern	Root
Bacon	Cullom	Lea	Sanders
Bailey	Cummins	Lodge	Shively
Borah	Dillingham	McLean	Simmons
Bourne	du Pont	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Fall	Nixon	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smoot
Bryan	Gallinger	Oliver	Stone
Burnham	Gore	Overman	Sutherland
Catron	Guggenheim	Page	Swanson
Chamberlain	Heyburn	Paynter	Townsend
Chilton	Hitchcock	Perkins	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Johnston, Ala.	Reed
Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Richardson

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I asked leave that House bill 9061 be taken up, but since doing so some Senators have suggested that as we have only 20 minutes left of the morning hour in which to proceed to-day, we would not be likely to accomplish anything; so, with the notice that I will call the bill up as soon as the routine morning business is closed to-morrow morning, I will not ask for its consideration at this time. Several Senators think there may be some unobjected bills upon the calendar under Rule VIII which can be disposed of at this time, and that we will make some headway by proceeding with the calendar.

AMERICAN HOSPITAL AT PARIS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital at Paris.

The bill was read, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire with respect to the provision that the property of the corporation shall not be subject to taxation. Of course that applies to taxation in the District here.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is the practice in France? Would it be subject to taxation there?

Mr. GALLINGER. I confess I can not answer the question. I should think not, it being purely a charitable institution. The hospital has already been built by private contributions.

Mr. President, the reasons for the enactment of the bill are stated in a letter from Mr. Henry White, our late ambassador at Paris, and there is likewise a letter from our consul general. Mr. White says:

> And the reason for the great desire of its directors and founders, with which I heartily sympathize, for the incorporation by act of Congress, is that it may be in a position to accept legacies, buy more lands when needed (both of which conditions have actually occurred), and which under French incorporation it could not do.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD in connection with the passage of the bill, and likewise the letter from Ambassador White.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it is so ordered.

The report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 17th instant is as follows:

[S. Rept. 760, to accompany S. 6380.]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The reasons for the proposed incorporation are set forth in the following letter from the consul general of the United States in Paris:

CONSULATE GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Paris, May 4, 1912.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Senate Committee on the District of Columbia,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: As one of the members of the board of governors of the American Hospital in Paris, I have been informed that a bill has been introduced into the Senate, by Senator O'GORMAN, the purpose of which is to secure for the American Hospital of Paris a charter under the laws of the District of Columbia.

I venture to add my earnest request and hope that the charter asked for may be granted. The American Hospital here is one of the most beneficent and necessary institutions in Paris and renders service which can not be estimated in terms of money. It has already saved many precious lives and furnishes a retreat where American citizens taken suddenly ill and being in need of medical or surgical treatment can be cared for under the conditions they are accustomed to enjoy at home.

The charter is necessary in order to enable the hospital to receive legacies by will and in order to give it a better standing in France.

The hospital is sustained, of course, by voluntary contributions, supplemented by the very moderate fees which are collected from patients who are able and willing to pay same. Destitute Americans receive treatment free of charge.

Hoping your committee will consider favorably the proposition which has been laid before it,

I have the honor to be, etc., FRANK H. MASON,
Consul General.

The following letters in regard to the bill have been received from the Secretary of State and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 25, 1912.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the communication of April 20, 1912, from the clerk of your committee, transmitting a bill (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris, and requesting, by your direction, the views of this department touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

In reply I have the honor to state that this department is not informed regarding the proposed hospital and has therefore no comments to make respecting the bill further than to say that a precedent would seem to be found in the act approved March 3, 1905, incorporating the American Academy in Rome, and that the bill would, of course, have no operative effect in France other than the recognition which might be given by France to foreign acts of incorporation, and as to this the department is not advised.

With respect to the legal aspects of the bill, it would seem more appropriate to refer it to the Department of Justice.

I have the honor to be, etc., P. C. KNOX.

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 22, 1912.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to make the following statement with respect to S. 6380, Sixty-second Congress, entitled "A bill to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris," which you referred to them with request for their report touching its merits and the propriety of its passage.

The object of this bill is to maintain a hospital in the city of Paris and to furnish medical and surgical aid and care to the citizens of the United States; and it is authorized to take by purchase, gift, grant, devise, and bequest, and to hold, mortgage, lease, transfer, and convey, for the purposes of said corporation, any real and personal property in the United States of America and in France as may be deemed necessary for the wants or development of the corporation, or any of them.

It seems to be a matter entirely within the Federal jurisdiction and for Congress to say whether such a charter should be granted and whether the right to so acquire an unlimited amount of real and personal property in the United States should be permitted.

The commissioners know of no objection to the bill unless the proposed grant of authority to acquire such property should prove inimical to judicious public policy.

Very respectfully,
BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
By CUNO H. RUDOLPH, President.

The letter of Mr. Henry White is as follows:

1624 CRESCENT PLACE NW.,
Washington, May 29, 1912.

DEAR SENATOR GALLINGER: I am much interested in a bill now, I believe, in the hands of your committee (District of Columbia) for the incorporation by Congress of the American hospital in Paris.

It is an institution which serves a very useful purpose for our many compatriots in that city when they fall ill. It was built by voluntary contributions of Americans and is very well conducted; and the reason for the great desire of its directors and founders, with which I heartily sympathize, for its incorporation by act of Congress is that it may be in a position to accept legacies, buy more land when needed (both of which conditions have actually occurred), and which under French incorporation it could not do.

Possibly all this may have been explained to you before, but I have thought it well, being personally cognizant of the hospital and of its reasons for troubling Congress in the matter, to write you a line. I shall be happy to call upon you and give further explanation if needed.

Yours, very sincerely,
HENRY WHITE.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6203) to establish a fish-cultural station at Monte Ne, in the State of Arkansas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Fisheries with amendments.

Mr. KERN. I did not hear the conclusion of the bill as to the amount of money the State of Arkansas is to contribute.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The same amount as is contributed anywhere else—nothing.

Mr. KERN. I will ask that the Secretary read that part of the bill again.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of a fish-cultural station in accordance with this bill, the State of Arkansas, through appropriate legislative action, shall accord to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by them be considered necessary and proper, any fishery laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That the operations of said hatchery may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor whenever, in his judgment, the laws and regulations affecting the fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of said hatchery.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the phraseology of the bill. It says, "in accordance with this bill." I think it ought to be "in accordance with this act."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think so, too.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, strike out the word "bill," and insert "act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There are certain committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the committee amendments.

The amendments of the Committee on Fisheries were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "at Monte Ne," and in line 9, after the word "equipment," to insert "at some suitable point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor," so as to read:

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Arkansas, and for said purpose the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment at some suitable point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Arkansas."

TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION OF INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 1332) regulating Indian allotments disposed of by will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

LEVEE AND DRAINAGE DISTRICT NO. 25 IN MISSOURI.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21590) to authorize levee and drainage district No. 25, of Dunklin County, Mo., to construct and maintain a levee across a branch or cut-off of St. Francis River and to construct and maintain a levee across the mouth of the Varney River, in the State of Missouri.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DOUGLAS, ARIZ.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask consent to call up the bill (S. 6174) for the erection of a public building at the city of Douglas, State of Arizona.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 2, page 2, to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "thirty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for the erection and completion in the city of Douglas, Ariz., of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office, Federal court, and other Government offices, upon ground already purchased by the Government for such purpose and now owned by the United States, the cost of said building not to exceed the sum of $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 18642.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for a couple of days past I have undertaken to discuss the rates in the proposed metal schedule. But instead of being able to do so, through interruptions, we have discussed everything but the rates under consideration, from the high cost of living to the effect the tariff has upon the price of cotton paid the planter of the South. So I now ask that I be allowed to proceed to discuss the measure which is before the Senate. I wish it distinctly understood, however, that I have not objected to interruptions, but I feel that the Senate desires to secure an early vote on the metal schedule, and I therefore very much prefer to continue without interruption along the line I have mapped out in opposition to the House bill.

Mr. President, the act of August 5, 1909, was based on the best information possible to obtain at that time as to the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad. The success of this revision is fully demonstrated in the continued prosperity of the country. For the first time in its history Congress accomplished a general reduction of tariff duties without destroying a single American industry or lowering the standard of living of any American wage earner.

In preparing the act of 1909 the Ways and Means Committee conducted hearings covering every industry and interest affected by the tariff. That committee was in session almost continuously for eight months, during which time hundreds of witnesses were called before it and every person, whether he was a producer or a consumer, a manufacturer or a wage earner, was afforded an opportunity to appear before the committee and explain fully his views on the tariff. No such an exhaustive inquiry into tariff matters was ever made before by Congress. The printed hearings on the Payne bill fill nearly 9,000 pages. These hearings were available to every Member of Congress in the consideration of that measure. In preparing the tariff bills submitted to the present Congress no hearings, whatever have been held by the proponents of these measures. No opportunity has been given by them to the industries and wage earners of the country to show how they would be affected by the rates which were fixed upon by some individual or group of two or three individuals without any adequate or scientific investigation of the subject.

A Tariff Board was first created by the tariff act of 1909, which provided that the President could employ such persons as may be required to assist him in securing information for carrying out the maximum and minimum provisions of that act and to assist other officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws. The sundry civil appropriation bill, approved March 4, 1911, contained an appropriation of $225,000 to enable the President to secure tariff information as provided for in the act of 1909, and in addition thereto provided that this information should include such investigations of the cost of production of commodities, covering cost of material, fabrication, and every other element of such cost of production, as authorized by the act of 1909. The President was also authorized by this appropriation act to employ such persons as may be required to secure the tariff information desired, and he was given the broad authority to use the appropriation "to enable him to do any and all things in connection therewith authorized by law."

At the time the sundry civil appropriation bill containing this provision was pending, a bill creating a permanent Tariff Board was also before Congress. A Tariff Board bill had passed each House of Congress, and it was confidently believed at that time that such a board would be created. The sundry civil appropriation bill, therefore, included a provision that if a Tariff Board was established by law the appropriation of $225,000 should be available to meet the expense of such board. The appropriation bill also contained the following provision, which became law, and which clearly shows that it was the intention of Congress that a Tariff Board, if created, should gather information for the use of Congress and submit reports to Congress:

The Tariff Board, if established by law, shall make report to each House of the Congress on the wool and woolen schedule not later than the first Monday in December, 1911.

The Tariff Board bill failed of enactment into law owing to a Democratic filibuster in the House during the closing hours of the Sixty-first Congress. As the differences in the Tariff Board bills which had been passed by the Senate and the House were but slight, the President believed it was the desire of Congress that a Tariff Board should be created in accordance with the general provisions of the bill that had failed of becoming a law only through the filibuster of a few Members of the House. The President, therefore, appointed a Tariff Board of five members, appointing two members of such party affiliations as would have fulfilled the statutory requirement had the tariff bill become a law. In compliance with the provisions of the sundry civil act this board submitted a report on the wool and woolen schedule to Congress last December. Therefore, to all intents and purposes, the Government has just such a Tariff Board as would have been established had the Tariff Board bill become a law in the Sixty-first Congress. That bill passed the Senate by a vote of 56 to 23, every Republican Senator except one voting for it, together with four Democratic Senators.

I want to call to your attention the report of the National Tariff Commission Association, which obtained permission from the President to investigate the methods of the Tariff Board. This organization, after a thorough investigation, made the following report, which, I believe, alone justifies Congress in waiting for the Tariff Board to complete its study of tariff subjects before undertaking the revision of any of the present schedules:

Our committee finds that the Tariff Board is composed of able, impartial, and earnest men, who are devoting their energies unreservedly to the work before them; that the staff has been carefully selected for the work in view; is efficiently organized and directed, and includes a number of exceptionally competent, technical experts; that the scale of salaries is reasonable, indeed very moderate, and all of their expenditures are closely scrutinized and equally reasonable; that the work of the board, vast and intricate in detail, is already highly organized, well systematized, running smoothly, and that Congress and the people can now wait the completion of that work with entire confidence that it is progressing as rapidly as consistent with proper thoroughness, and that it will amply justify all of the time and expense which it entails. We believe that the value of the work when completed will be so great and so evident as to leave remaining no doubt as to the expediency of maintaining it as a permanent function of the Government for the benefit of all the people.

American industries and wage earners had been led to believe that there would be no further disturbance of business by tariff legislation until the Tariff Board had completed its investigation of trade conditions at home and abroad. The American people had every reason to feel reassured by the Payne Act that the prosperity of the Nation was safeguarded in the pledge that future tariff legislation would continue to keep open our factories for the employment of American wage earners. But no sooner had the American manufacturer and workman settled back with a sigh of relief over the fact that the revision of 1909 had permitted him to keep his factory and his job, than agitators, importers, as well as newspapers and magazines disappointed in not receiving free print paper, immediately began a wicked crusade against the tariff act, claiming the rates were an increase over the Dingley rates; stopping at nothing and hesitating at no kind of misrepresentation to impress the people of this country with the idea that they were being robbed by the provisions of the act. I deny that the average rates of the act of 1909 are an increase over the Dingley rates. On the contrary, they are a reduction.

Without giving the country a fair chance to test the tariff act of 1909 and readjust itself to the new rates, and without waiting for the Tariff Board to complete the investigation of a single one of the tariff schedules, renewed assaults were made on the protective-tariff system, which has built up the enormous manufacturing industries of the United States and has given the American workingman the highest wage and the best living of any workman in the world. It is proposed to call a halt in the country's progress and return to the stagnation of business that almost ruined the country under the last Democratic tariff. I have carefully studied the amendment to the act offered by the Senator from Iowa and I have failed to find in all the changes proposed by him where the ultimate consumer will be benefited.

Lest the people of the United States have forgotten, I want to read to the Senate a statement showing the condition of the United States at the time the Gorman-Wilson Tariff Act was repealed in 1897 as compared with our wondrous assets of to-day. This statement should convince any fair-minded person that the country has prospered exceedingly well under the Republican tariffs and Republican administrations since the election of President McKinley in 1896, and that every man, woman, and child in the United States has shared in this widespread prosperity:

Progress of the United States since repeal of last Democratic tariff act (Gorman-Wilson) July 24 1897.

Has the American farmer any reason to complain of Republican tariffs under which the value of his farm property and farm products each have increased 100 per cent since the last Democratic tariff?

Have the people of the United States any reason to complain of Republican tariffs under which their deposits in national banks have increased three-fold and their deposits in savings banks have more than doubled since the last Democratic tariff?

Has the American consumer any reason to complain of Republican tariffs under which the imports of merchandise free of duty have doubled since the last Democratic tariff?

Has the American wage earner any reason to complain of Republican tariffs under which exports of his products have more than doubled and his wages have increased more than a billion dollars since the last Democratic tariff?

Do the people of the United States want to return to the days of Democratic tariffs, when the factory windows were boarded up and the bread lines were long and hungry?

That the Democratic Party has in mind the revival of its ancient tariff fallacies, which always have resulted in business depression and idle workmen whenever tried, is certain from the tariff program its leaders have adopted. No sooner had that party gained control of one branch of Congress than it began a series of attacks on the tariff that have caused such fear and trembling among the business interests of the country. I do not want to be an alarmist, but I feel it my duty to warn the people of the United States that the industries and wage earners of this country are now facing one of the greatest crises in their history. It soon must be decided whether the workingmen of the United States are to be reduced to the level of those of Europe and Asia by forcing American manufacturers to compete with the products of foreign labor without an adequate measure of protection for their own employees.

The first tariff bill passed by the Sixty-second Congress was the so-called "farmer's" free list, which was intended to admit free of duty all agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, boots and shoes, fence wire, meats, cereals, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt, cement, and lime. This bill passed the House on May 8, 1911, and the Senate on August 1, 1911. It was well known at that time by the proponents of this bill that the Tariff Board was hard at work gathering information for the assistance of Congress when it should undertake a scientific revision of the schedules affected by the so-called free list. However, the free-list bill was passed by Congress, as were the other tariff measures of last session, without asking or waiting for any report from the Tariff Board or without any available information other than that which Congress had at its command when the tariff was revised in 1909. The President well said in his veto of the free-list bill, "The bill is so carelessly drawn that it would inevitably lead to the greatest uncertainty as to what articles are or are not covered by its various conditions. This would impose a burden on the administrative branch of the Government, create disastrous uncertainty in commercial circles, and lead to a burdensome amount of litigation."

Another Democratic tariff bill which passed last session was that reducing the duties on wool. This bill passed the House on June 9, 1911. It was defeated in the Senate, but after a hasty revamping of its schedules on the floor of the Senate a compromise measure was agreed to on August 15, 1911. Again the President exercised his right of veto, clearly pointing out the lack of adequate information that the proponents of the measure had upon which to base rates affecting the very life of an industry in which more than a million people are engaged and more than a billion dollars of the country's capital is invested. The President very properly suggested that Congress should await a report, which it had asked the Tariff Board to submit at the beginning of this session, before entering upon a revision of the wool schedule.

The third tariff bill of last session was that which purported to revise the duties on cotton. This measure was passed by the House on August 3, 1911, but before it passed the Senate, on August 18, 1911, it was elaborated into the partial revision of not only the cotton schedule but also the chemical and the metal schedules. Upon none of these schedules had any information been submitted to Congress in addition to that which it possessed when the Payne bill was enacted into law. Again the President was compelled to use his veto to protect the industries of the country from log-rolling tariff revision. Engaged in the cotton industry alone are 379,000 wage earners whose annual wages amount to $146,000,000. The capital invested in cotton industries in 1909 amounted to $821,000,000 and the value of cotton products in that year was $629,000,000.

In compliance with the direction of Congress and the promise of the President, the Tariff Board submitted its report on the wool schedule December 20, 1911. This report contains the most valuable information in regard to wool and the manufactures of wool ever presented to Congress, yet it was absolutely ignored by the passage of the wool bill on April 1, 1912, which is identical with the measure adopted by Congress last session when it had no information whatever upon which to base a scientific revision of the wool schedule. The agitation in regard to the wool tariff already has cost the industries covered by Schedule K $150,000,000. Not more than 40 per cent of the woolen cards of the country are running to-day, and now it is proposed to force even this 40 per cent into idleness by ruinous competition with the cheaper labor and cheaper products of foreign countries. Not only has the Democratic Party refused to avail itself of the opportunity to assist in a scientific revision of the wool schedule by making use of the Tariff Board's report, but up to this hour it also has completely ignored the Tariff Board's report on the cotton schedule which was submitted to Congress on March 26, 1912.

Casting aside the Tariff Board's reports on wool and cotton, the Democratic Party rushed pell-mell in the revision of the sugar, chemical, and steel schedules, which the Tariff Board still has under investigation and upon which it has not submitted any reports to Congress as yet. In other words, an attempt is being made at a political revision of the tariff schedules instead of a scientific revision. I do not believe the people of this country want their prosperity treated as a "houn' dawg" and kicked about to further the political interests of any individual or any party. Yet that is the very situation which is now confronting the country.

Solely for campaign purposes it is proposed to place sugar on the free list in the hope that a possible temporary reduction in the price of sugar will gain a victory for the Democratic Party at the coming election. This free-sugar bill can have no other effect than to ultimately transfer the larger part of $54,000,000 of annual revenue from the Public Treasury to the pockets of the Sugar Refining Trust. It will absolutely ruin the beet and cane sugar producers of the United States. I want to call your attention to the fact that the production of beet sugar by the farmers of this country has increased from 84,000,000 pounds in 1897, when the last Democratic tariff was repealed, to more than a billion pounds last year. If the free-sugar bill becomes a law this entire industry will be wiped out. No one will suffer more by it than the American farmer.

The chemical schedule as adopted by the House transfers $42,000,000 worth of raw materials from the free list of the present law to the dutiable list as an additional burden on the American manufacturer. In other words, the chemical industries of the United States will have to pay higher duties on their raw materials, thereby greatly increasing the cost of their finished products, which, in turn, will have to compete with increasing imports of foreign products on which duties have been lowered.

There is a significant item in the chemical bill, as passed by the House, which shows the close alliance between the Democratic Party and the Sugar Refining Trust, whose profits will be increased by nearly $50,000,000 a year by the free-sugar schedule. The item to which I refer is bone black, large quantities of which are used by the Sugar Trust in the refining or declorization of sugar. That is practically the only item in the chemical schedule of interest to the Sugar Refining Trust. Under the Payne Act the Sugar Trust is required to pay a duty of 20 per cent on its importations of bone black, but the chemical schedule as passed by the Democratic House places bone black on the free list, for which the Sugar Trust is undoubtedly very grateful.

The metal bill, which, along with all the other tariff measures passed by the Democratic House, is not based upon any adequate or scientific inquiry into the cost and production at home and abroad. At the outset let me call to your attention the magnitude of the industry which is now placed in jeopardy without an opportunity to have its cost of production investigated and reported upon by a nonpartisan board of tariff experts. This measure is commonly called the iron and steel bill. As a matter of fact it includes not only iron and steel but every metal known to commerce—gold, silver, nickel, copper, lead, bronze, zinc, aluminum, tin, quicksilver, and antimony. Under the schedule of metal and the manufactures of metal are included everything from artificial limbs to areoplanes. According to the census of 1905, 1,171,824 wage-earners were employed in the manufacture of metals affected by this bill. Wages in that year amounted to $652,109,633, and it is conservatively estimated that this amount of wage has increased at least 25 per cent since 1905. The metal industry consisted of 21,650 establishments having a capital of $3,157,388,329, and the products of these establishments were valued at $3,130,253,195 in that year.

I ask permission to have printed as a part of my remarks a table of census statistics of industries affected by Schedule C showing the number of establishments, capital, wage earners and wages, cost of materials used, and value of products, including custom work and repairing, for each of these industries. These statistics are for the year 1905. It is estimated that the amounts given should be increased at least 25 per cent to indicate the magnitude of these industries at the present time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to follows.

Census statistics of manufactures in the United States, grouped in conformity with the schedules of the tariff law of 1897, including articles classified under section 6 and the free list.

Mr. SMOOT. In addition to this immense industry, the metal bill affects 47,000 wage earners employed in the production of iron ore, whose wages amounted to $29,731,000 for the year 1909. Four hundred and eighty-three iron mines in operation that year produced ore valued at $107,000,000. The capital invested in iron mines in the United States amounted to $299,350,000. The metal bill also affects the livelihood of 21,603 lead and zinc miners, whose wages in 1909 amounted to $10,507,931. Nine hundred and seventy-seven lead and zinc mines in operation during 1909 produced ore valued at $29,416,047.

An unwise revision of the metal schedule, however, not only involves the prosperity of the industries directly related to that schedule, but also will be felt by every producer and business interest in the country. The farmer, who has more than doubled his wealth in the last 15 years, will be one of the first to feel the effect of more than a million and a quarter wage earners being reduced approximately to the standard of living that now obtains in Europe. I know the people of this country do not want to return to the days of 1893 to 1897, but just as sure as we undertake a revision of the tariff that is not based upon the principles enumerated in the Republican platform which I have quoted, just so certain are we going to have our streets swarming with idle men with no means of satisfying their hunger, even at the reduced price the American farmer will be compelled to accept for his products.

Bills now pending before the Senate and those passed at the last session of Congress are a confession in themselves that their authors have no adequate information upon which to base a scientific revision of the tariff. Without possessing any further information than they had last session, the proponents of House bill 18642 have increased 43 paragraphs above the rates which they adopted last session as the proper tariff to be placed upon the imports of metals and manufactures of metals. If the rates in the bill now pending before the Senate are right, then the rates in the bill vetoed by the President last session were wrong, and his veto is amply justified by the bill which the House has passed this session. No one will contend that the conditions affecting the production of metals have so changed in the last eight months as to warrant any different tariff rates at this time than were required by the same conditions last August.

If a duty of 9 cents a ton was a fair and honest rate to be placed upon imports of iron ore last August, what justice is there in placing iron ore on the free list at this time?

If a duty of $1.50 a ton was a fair and honest rate to be placed upon imports of pig iron last August, what justice is there in imposing a duty of $1 a ton upon pig iron at this time, as provided for in the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, or $1.27 a ton, as provided for in the House bill?

If a duty of $5 a ton was a fair and honest rate to be placed upon imports of structural iron and steel last August, what justice is there in imposing a duty of only $3 a ton on structural iron and steel at this time?

If a duty of $2.10 a ton was a fair and honest rate to be placed upon railway bars last August, what justice is there in imposing a duty of $2.50 a ton on railway bars at this time?

If a duty of 60 cents a ton was a fair and honest rate to be placed upon imports of scrap iron last August, what justice is there in imposing a duty of 50 cents a ton on scrap iron at this time, as provided for in the Cummins amendment, or $1.04 a ton as provided for in the House bill?

These are only a few instances of the kaleidoscopic changes that have taken place in the proposed revisions of the metal schedule as submitted to the present Congress. Is it any wonder that manufacturers are driven to despair in their vain effort to ascertain what their fate will be from day to day? No industry can continue nor can the people remain prosperous under such conditions. In justice to the country, tariff doctors should at least refrain from prescribing new nostrums until they are able to agree among themselves as to what is the proper remedy to administer patients.

A brief comparison of the free-list bill and the Cummins amendment to the cotton-chemical-metal bill of last session, together with the metal bill and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa this session, will convince anyone that the proponents of these measures are not agreed even among themselves as to what constitutes the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. Until this fact can be ascertained by a thorough and comprehensive investigation of conditions surrounding the production of metals and manufactures of metals, both in the United States and foreign countries, I insist that no general revision of Schedule C should be undertaken by Congress.

It is a fact beyond debate that in the preparation of the Payne bill duties on the metal schedule were reduced more than on any other schedule of that measure. These rates, in numerous instances, were reductions of fully 50 per cent. The duties of all the articles in 40 out of the 69 paragraphs in the Dingley Act were reduced by the Payne Act. The duties upon articles covered by 8 other paragraphs were reduced in part and increased in part, while no changes were made in the rates covered by 18 paragraphs. In only 3 paragraphs were rates increased. This, as everyone knows, constituted a substantial revision downward of the metal schedule.

From the extensive hearings held by the Finance Committee this session of Congress it is very apparent that no further reduction can be made at this time in many of the paragraphs without seriously affecting American industries which employ hundreds of thousands of wage earners. The representatives of 248 different industrial concerns located in 18 States appeared before the Senate committee to protest against the proposed revision. Representatives of organized labor also made vigorous objection to the bill, declaring that it was unfair and unjust to American workmen.

These hearings clearly showed that the metal industry of this country has not yet readjusted itself to the radical reductions that were made by the Payne bill. Manufacturer after manufacturer submitted facts and figures to the committee showing that he is making little or no profit on his products at this time, endeavoring, as he has done, to maintain the standard of American wages in competition with the products of the cheaper labor of Europe. The importations of articles covered by the metal schedule increased 43 per cent for the year 1911 under the Payne bill, as compared with the importations for 1909 under the Dingley Act, the total importation of metals and manufactures of metals in 1911 amounting to $58,756,521.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to interrupt the Senator from Utah if he desires to go forward with the discussion without interruption.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to finish without interruption, and then I will be glad to take up any question with the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, interruptions afterwards are impossible. On the very point the Senator was just discussing there are some very significant facts, and I thought I would bring them to his attention; but I will not interrupt him if he wishes to proceed without interruption.

Mr. SMOOT. The pending bill, according to the estimate of the Ways and Means Committee, will further increase the importations under this schedule fully $25,000,000 a year, while reducing the revenue of the country more than $1,400,000. In other words, foreign laboring men will reap the benefit of $25,000,000 of additional products that would otherwise give employment to American workingmen. It is quite possible that the increased importations under Schedule C may reach $100,000,000 if the proposed revision is adopted. That would close scores of American factories and throw thousands of American workmen out of employment. So the Senate can understand just what that means and the number of men it would throw out of employment.

I have ascertained the number of American workmen receiving employment through the manufacture of 1,000 tons of steel rails, and the approximate number of employees in the direct service of the steel manufacturing companies, including allied departments, such as ore mining, coal and coke producing, and rail and lake transportation of ore only for rails made in the Pittsburgh district. To make 1,000 tons of rails is required 5,200 men employed for one day. So, Mr. President, whenever that 1,000 tons are increased by 10 or any other number you can multiply the number of men as stated by the same figures, and it will show the number of American workmen who would be thrown out of employment and whose employment would be given to laborers in some other country.

In addition to the above there are also workmen employed by interests not allied with steel manufacturers, and they engage in furnishing service and material of some kind to steel companies, used by the latter in connection with the production of steel rails, but there is no means of estimating what number this might be.

What has the country to gain by any such revision? Certainly the American consumer is not going to profit much by lowering the standard of living for the workingmen of this country.

I call your attention to the fact that, while there has been a general advance in prices of 14½ per cent during the last 10 years, the prices of metals and implements have advanced only 3.6 per cent. In the same 10 years, from 1900 to 1910, the prices of farm products have advanced 39.8 per cent; food prices have advanced 19.7 per cent; lumber and building materials, 19.6 per cent; cloth and clothing, 12 per cent; fuel and light, 6.9 per cent; and house-furnishing goods, 5.3 per cent.

While on this subject of prices I want to emphasize the fact that in the same 10-year period the prices of drugs and chemicals have declined 2.9 per cent. The figures I quote here are taken from the Report on Wages and Prices of Commodities presented to the Senate by a select committee which investigated that subject in 1910. (S. Doc. No. 847, 61st Cong.)

The following table from the same report shows the average wholesale prices of metals and implements in March, 1910, as compared with the average prices in March, 1900. This table clearly indicates the downward trend in the prices of these products, the small average increase being due to one or two items that are not materially affected by any of the proposed revisions of the tariff:

[1] No change.

I quote the following from the Report on Wages and Prices (S. Doc. No. 847, 61st Cong.), showing that the tariff has not been responsible for the advance in prices, this conclusion having been reached by the select committee after a thorough and painstaking investigation of the subject:

The tariff seems to have been no material factor in causing the advance in prices during the past decade. The greatest advances have been made in commodities upon which the tariff has little or no effect, and the absolute removal of the tariff on many of these commodities could not have afforded relief at the present time, for the reason that prices of these commodities, with a few exceptions, were as high or higher in other countries than in the United States.

The advance in prices during the past 10 years appears to have no relation to tariff legislation. Beginning with January, 1900, wholesale prices in general declined slightly, and the decline continued through July, 1901. Beginning with August, 1901, prices advanced very slowly through March, 1903, and then remained steady through May, 1905. Beginning with June, 1905, there was a marked increase through October, 1907. Beginning with November, 1907, prices began to decline and the decline continued through August, 1908. Beginning with September, 1908, prices steadily advanced until the highest point during the 10 years was reached in March, 1910.

The advance in 1909 as compared with 1900, by groups of articles, was as follows:

	Per cent.
Products of the forests advanced	40.3
Products of the farm, crude, advanced	36.1
Products of the farm, manufactured, advanced	24.2
Products of mines and wells advanced	13.5
Products of manufactures advanced	5.7
Products of the fisheries advanced	5.1
Imported products declined	1.7

The groups of articles which have shown the greatest advance—the products of the forests and the products of the farm—are those for which there has been practically no change in tariff during the past 10 years. Neither have there been any changes during the past 20 years which could in any way account for the increase in price. The tariff acts of 1894, 1897, and 1909 have made no changes which to any appreciable degree measure the changes in prices which have taken place.

The American workingman will be the first person to suffer from the destruction of the Republican protective-tariff system, which has for many years assured him a higher standard of living than that of any other workingman in the world. This is especially true of every wage earner in the metal industry. From 30 to 90 per cent of the cost of metal products is paid directly to labor. The laborers in this industry would suffer more from a reduction of their wages than the employees in almost any other industry affected by tariff schedules, for they would be forced to the level of practically the lowest wage earners in Europe. I want to say that the men employed in blast furnaces, rail mills, and steel mills are entitled to every dollar they now receive, and I would be glad to see their wages doubled if the industry could afford to pay them such an amount. There is absolutely no disputing the fact that the American workingman now receives the highest wages of any workingman in the world. In the metal industry American workmen receive fully double the wages paid for similar classes of labor in foreign countries.

I submit the following summary of wages paid in the leading branches of the iron and steel industries of the United States as compared with wages paid to the same class of labor in Germany, the German wages being based upon the report of an inquiry by the British Board of Trade into the conditions of the working classes in the principal industrial towns of the German Empire and presented to the British Parliament April 10, 1908:

Authority.—United States Daily Consular and Trade Report of November 14, 1908. Foreign Correspondence Reports and British Report of Strikes and Lockouts of 1891; First Report on Wages and Hours of Labor, 1893, and Report on Changes in Rates of Wages, etc., 1907; Present Pay Roll Rates in Effect Mahoning Valley District (Ohio and Pennsylvania).

There has been considerable misunderstanding as to the wages paid employees of the metal industry, owing to the fact that many of the compilations on this subject have been based upon the minimum wage scale rather than upon the actual wages paid to these employees. In this connection I call the attention of the Senate to the statement of Mr. Charles M. Schwab, of the Bethlehem Steel Co., at the hearings held before the Senate Committee on Finance this session. Mr. Schwab stated that the average earnings of every man and boy employed by the Bethlehem Co. last year amounted to $788.88. This average included the apprentices but excluded all salaries of importance which might bring the average high by reason of large salaries of officers, superintendents, and so forth. The Bethlehem Co. employs between 14,000 and 15,000 workmen. Mr. Schwab declared he did not know of any industry in which the average wages of workmen under conditions of those in the metal industry were as high or as good. Pointing out the unfairness of labor statistics based upon the minimum wage scale, Mr. Schwab stated that 80 per cent of the workmen employed by his company were under the bonus system, which compensated them considerably in excess of the minimum wage allowed employees who did not have the ability to earn a higher wage. Workmen whose minimum wage was 13.5 cents per hour during the month of December actually earned 21.1 cents per hour, according to Mr. Schwab.

Mr. Schwab was fully corroborated in these statements by Mr. John A. Topping, chairman of the board of directors of the Republic Iron & Steel Co., which employes 12,500 workmen. Mr. Topping informed the committee that the rates of wages paid workmen in the iron and steel industry are "not less than double, and in may cases three times, the rates of wages paid in foreign countries with whom we have to compete." Unless adequate protection is established, declared Mr. Topping, a loss in wages of $100,000,000 per annum is a practical certainty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not intend to interrupt the Senator, but only to call his attention to a discrepancy in his statement hanging on the wall there.

Mr. SMOOT. On what?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The statement in the table relating to wages and production in the steel industry.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator is going to discuss that question, I should like to proceed further in the line of what I have been saying, and then I will take it up.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will call attention to the figures.

Mr. SMOOT. I will have to insert the figures. I should like very much to go on and make this statement consecutively, and then I shall be glad to debate the question with Senators.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is on the question of wages, which the Senator is now discussing.

Mr. SMOOT. I will very gladly refer to that as soon as I get through with my remarks.

Mr. Topping produced the last annual report of the Republic Iron & Steel Co., showing that the average earning power of its employees was more than $760 per annum, or approximately $2.40 for each working day. He declared that the average was as high, if not higher, than labor rates of any other important industry of the country. Mr. Topping submitted figures to show that the rate of wages paid in the United States averages from $1.70 for common labor to $10 and $15 for more highly skilled workmen. He asserted that the rate of wages paid in the steel trade to-day averages an advance of approximately 30 per cent during the last decade, and living conditions of to-day are decidedly better than have been ever before known. Mr. Schwab also stated that there had been only one year since 1900 when the wages of workmen in the general steel industry had not advanced.

I regret to say it is true that in some branches of the iron and steel industry workmen have been required to labor 12 hours a day and 7 days a week. This has been largely due to metallurgical conditions, especially in the blast furnaces. I hope that a movement, inaugurated by the American Iron and Steel Institute, to relieve employees from the requirement of working seven days a week will be successful. It is absolutely certain, however, that, if these workmen are to be freed from the inhuman requirement of working seven days a week, no changes should be made in the tariff that will force them to compete with the seven-days-a-week laborer of Europe.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, on the question of wages, as the Senator from Utah is speaking of wages, will he permit me to make a suggestion? I will detain the Senator but a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask whether the difference in wages between our country and Germany is not being fast equalized?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; the difference in wages between this country and Germany in this very industry is as great as it ever was.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have it upon the very best authority—that of the president of the Ingersoll Sargent Rand Drill Co., a company employing 8,000 wage earners, in a letter from him, in which he states that in Germany—and he has just come from there—the average wages of the German worker in the metal industry have increased 20 per cent in 10 years. That is certainly a far larger increase than there has been in the wages of men working in that industry in this country. He asserts, further——

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator makes that statement off hand, without knowing the facts, for the testimony that we had before our committee was that during the last decade the wages have in many branches of the industry increased in this country 30 per cent.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. In 10 years?

Mr. SMOOT. During the last decade.

Mr. BORAH. Within 10 years.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I make this assertion on the authority of William L. Saunders, president of the Ingersoll Sargent Rand Drill Co., a company which has in its employ 8,000 hands.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not care what Mr. Saunders said. Whenever he makes the statement that the wages are equalizing themselves in Germany and in this country——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not say that.

Mr. SMOOT. Or are one-half the wages paid in this country he says something that is not true.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, as I have stated, my proposition is on the basis of Mr. Saunders's assertion that wages have increased 20 per cent in the past 10 years in Germany.

Mr. SMOOT. That is in Germany, and they have increased 30 per cent in the United States.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. You have not any verification that the wages have increased 30 per cent in the metal industry in 10 years.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, I simply say that the man who pays the wage earners and who has to meet the pay rolls says the increase has been that much, and I would just as lief take his word as the word of some one that knows nothing about it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not want you to take mine.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say the Senator's word.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is all right.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not refer to the Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not want to interfere in the matter, but I felt, in justice, those facts ought to be brought out.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Schwab said to the committee that there is no one who would more cheerfully subscribe to the fact that steel manufacturers want very high wages in America than he.

I want high wages for all—said Mr. Schwab.

Only five days a week, if you will, but we must be placed in a position where we can do it. I think it ought to be six days a week for every man; but this is a practical problem that steel men have worked over and pondered over and are experimenting on to-day to see how it can be done.

It is agreed, however, that although laborers in the blast furnaces were required to be on duty 12 hours, generally speaking, not more than 15 per cent of the time was put in in actual labor, as the blast furnace casts its metal only once in every 4 or 5 hours. During the intervening periods these workmen have little or nothing to do.

Mr. Topping told the committee that the 12-hour system was established by the employees themselves and was not an institution of the manufacturers. He recalled having tried to put into effect a three-turn shift in the sheet and tin mills of the Republic Co. some years ago. To quote Mr. Topping:

The unions that were then in control objected to that plan, because it meant the introduction of more apprentices, more new factors in the union, and they perhaps could not control labor as well with that condition if apprenticeship increased as they could with the restricted number that they had under control.

Mr. Topping also said that the men did not work 12 hours continuously, and that they preferred to remain on duty 12 hours rather than actually work a less number of hours, because a reduction in hours would mean a decrease in the rate of pay per day. "We will do well to maintain what we have," said Mr. Topping, "and we can not maintain it, in my opinion, if we have any change in this schedule as proposed by the Underwood bill." He stated that in one of the plants of the Republic Co. there were employed 6,545 men, who largely had the choice of their own hours of work. Of these, 240 work 8 hours, 9 work 9 hours, 2,352 work 10 hours, 465 work 11 hours, and 3,479 work 12 hours. The average increase in wages paid by the Republic Co. since May 1, 1910, amounts to 4.7 per cent.

The following table shows, in the form of percentages, the advance in wages and the changes in hours for the metal industry during the period from 1900 to 1907 as compiled from Bulletin 77, July, 1908, of the United States Bureau of Labor:

[Compiled from Bulletin 77, July, 1908, of the United States Bureau of Labor.]

The advance since the year 1907 has been, in many branches of the industry, about 10 per cent.

Many American manufacturers assert that if they could employ labor as cheaply as foreign manufacturers do they would be able to compete with them in the markets of the world. There was a time, a number of years ago, when American manufacturers had considerable advantage over their foreign competitors in the greater efficiency of American workingmen and the greater ingenuity of American inventors in producing marvelous labor-saving machinery. To-day, however, those foreign countries that are our closest competitors in the world's market have duplicated practically all the modern machinery possessed by American manufacturers and have trained their employees to practically the high standard of efficiency which long distinguished the American workingman. This is especially true in the iron and steel industry.

In this connection I want to quote from the statement of Mr. Schwab to the Senate committee at its recent hearing:

I have upon numberless occasions stated that, with equal conditions, steel could be manufactured as cheaply in the United States as in any country in Europe. This has been construed by many people into a statement upon my part that steel was made as cheaply, or could be made as cheaply, in the United States as in any country in Europe. That I do not believe to be true.

Some years ago, in the development of the steel business, American ingenuity and American methods made it possible for us to produce with some advantage over competitors abroad. However, the practical knowledge and possibilities of manufacture are now reduced to such a minimum that it is possible for people in any country to adopt the methods that prove successful here, or for us to adopt the methods that prove successful elsewhere; and the only real items that enter into competitive manufacture to-day are local conditions with reference to the supply of raw materials and labor. The mechanical appliances and the metallurgical processes throughout the world are about the same to-day; and, as I have before stated, with absolutely equal conditions, as to labor, especially, which constitutes the major part of the cost of making steel, we are prepared to compete with anybody, and shall ask no tariff; but if we are expected, and especially the manufacturers in the East, to maintain the conditions of wages and labor that maintain in the West, or approximately the conditions, where they are protected by long and heavy freight rates, then I want to state before this committee to-day that it is an impossible condition and one that we in the East can not meet.

Subsequently at the same hearing I put this question to Mr. Schwab:

Have you at any time made the statement that steel could be manufactured in this country cheaper than anywhere else?

To this inquiry he replied:

Assuredly not. I can not say that that has not been published, although I have never seen it; and I do say that whenever I have made the statement I have always said, "Under equal conditions; under the same conditions."

Then I asked him:

Which means, if the American workingmen receive the same wages as are received in Europe?

Again Mr. Schwab replied:

Yes. Then we could make it as cheaply as it could be made any place.

The low water rates on freight from foreign countries to American ports place foreign manufacturers on practically the same footing, so far as freight rates are concerned, with nearly all of the metal industries of this country. For instance, it costs the Bethlehem Co. as much to deliver steel into New York Harbor as it costs the foreign manufacturer to put steel from Belgium into New York Harbor. Belgium can put steel into Boston and the New England States at a lower freight rate than can the iron and steel mills of Pennsylvania. With the lower cost of production in Germany, the German manufacturer has a distinct advantage over the American manufacturer within 100 to 200 miles of the eastern coast. Interior points can be reached by the foreign manufacturer at the same rate as most of the American manufacturers have to pay, so that again the lower cost of foreign production would take away the home market from the American manufacturer if he had no protection against the cheaper labor of his foreign rivals.

Already the foreign manufacturers of iron and steel have taken possession of the Pacific coast market under the tariff reductions made by the Payne bill.

The imports of iron and steel at Pacific ports for the year ended June 30, 1911, under the Payne law, increased $1,386,877 over the imports at the same ports for the year ended June 30, 1909, under the Dingley law; an increase of 153 per cent.

Some of these imports came from China, where pig iron can be produced for $7.50 a ton, while the average cost of production in this country is around $14 a ton. Is it possible that the American people want to force our wage earners down to the level of Chinese laborers? In the iron mills of China coolie workmen receive 15 cents a day for 12 hours a day labor. In other words, $5 in American gold will hire 30 men in China for furnace work which requires only unskilled labor. One furnace on the Yangtze River, with a daily capacity of 300 tons of pig iron, is working Chinese labor at $1 a week, making pig iron more cheaply than in any other known mill in the world. To the iron mills of China, as well as those of Europe, the Pacific coast is now almost an exclusive market, and every additional cut in the tariff will extend the American territory from which foreign manufacturers will be able to oust American products by the cheap labor they employ.

Not only are American manufacturers handicapped by the cheaper labor cost of foreign products, but they are also forced to compete with many foreign products the manufacturers of which are aided by export bounties. The German Government, for instance, aids the manufacturers of that country in syndicating for export in order to provide employment for its people. German railroads and steamship lines also assist in dumping the surplus products of their country by lowering the rates of transportation to the United States and other foreign markets. Thus the sale of export goods at a loss is encouraged in order to build up the manufacturing industries of Germany. These losses on exports are largely made up by bounties which are not available to the American manufacturer. It is not fair, therefore, to make the measure of tariff the difference between the selling price abroad of foreign and American made goods. The German manufacturer, for instance, aided as he is by Government bounties and subsidies, can afford to dump his products on the American market at a far less price than he has to charge for these products at home.

The following table gives an example of the difference between the home and export prices charged by German manufacturers for leading articles of iron and steel:

Articles.	Home price.	Export price.	Approximate difference, United States equivalent.
	s. d.	s.
Joists	122 6 to 125	109	$3.84
Blooms	92 6	74	4.44
Billets	100	76	5.76
Steel bars	102 6	78 to 79	5.52

The British consul general at Frankfort, Sir Oppenheimer, in a report has shown the large difference between the export and home consumption prices in Germany and Belgium; rates in favor of export sales on coal of 1 mark 50 pfennigs (0.337 cent); pig iron, 4 marks 86 pfennigs ($1.03); billets and semi-finished steel, 15 marks ($3.57); structural material, 20 marks ($4.76). These differentials increase or decrease as trade conditions suggest. During 1907 the German differential on semi-finished steel showed a difference of approximately $2.40. In the early part of 1908 this differential was increased to $3.50. The question of policy in giving employment to German and Belgium labor rather than profit to the operation of producing iron and steel is a factor of dominant importance, and cost of production is a secondary importance. Under this policy Germany's iron and steel exports have rapidly increased.

The German wire-rod syndicate, as shown by a published report, lost $203,000 on exports in six months, but made nearly $290,000 in profits on domestic trade. The iron and steel industry of Canada is also encouraged by bounties in addition to duties upon imports of pig iron, steel rails, and structural steel.

The following table shows the proportion of bounties paid by the Canadian Government:

Bounties paid by Canadian Government.

	Year.	On proportion made from Canadian ore.	On proportion made from foreign ore.
		Per gross ton.	Per gross ton.
Pig iron	1908	$2.352	$1.232
	1909	1.904	.784
Puddled iron bars from Canadian pig iron	1908	1.848	.....
	1909	1.176	.....
Steel, manufactured in Canada from ingredients of which not less than 50 per cent of the weight thereof consists of pig iron made in Canada	1908	1.848	.....
	1909	1.176	.....
Rolled round wire rods, not over ⅜ inch in diameter, manufactured from steel produced in Canada from ingredients of which not less than 50 per cent of the weight thereof consists of pig iron made in Canada, when sold to wire manufacturers for use or when used in making wire in their own factories in Canada, on such wire rods made after Dec. 31, 1906	.....	.....	6.72

I refer to these foreign bounties to show that any revision of the metal schedule should be undertaken only after a most careful and exhaustive inquiry by a competent board or commission into every phase of the costs of production at home and abroad. It is useless to compare costs and selling prices unless every condition relating to these subjects is clearly understood.

It is likewise absolutely unfair to take American costs of production, eliminating the so-called intercompany profits from these costs, and compare the net result with estimates on foreign costs of production without knowing whether these foreign costs include intercompany profits or not. For instance, certain advocates of tariff reduction are taking the cost of producing steel rails as reported by the Bureau of Corporations, eliminating therefrom the so-called profits on producing the ore, the pig iron, and the billets, and comparing the net result of these profitless operations with the reported cost of foreign products. As a matter of fact there is absolutely no evidence in any hearing or report available to Congress to show that the foreign costs do not include intercompany profits. On the other hand, there is very strong evidence that these foreign costs do include intercompany profits and that therefore any comparison between costs of production at home and abroad from figures now available should be made on that basis.

These profits are based upon business done prior to the passage of the Payne tariff act on August 5, 1909. Iron and steel manufacturers of this country contend that the Payne Act so reduced their business by reason of the increased imports which lowered duties encouraged that now they are doing business with practically no returns on their investments. Mr. Schwab stated that it is necessary for a manufacturing institution to make a profit of from 20 to 25 per cent on its products in order to provide for depreciation in its plant and possible business depressions, when sales have to be made at a loss to protect its property and employees from temporary idleness. On an average, a steel plant must be renewed once in 10 years.

I was much impressed with the statement which Mr. Schwab made to the Senate committee, and which, I believe, expressed his honest and sincere feeling in regard to the matter. I quote this paragraph from Mr. Schwab's testimony as expressing the general opinion of the foremost business men in the country concerning the effect the reduction of the metal tariff at this time, as provided in the House bill, will have upon their business:

> I would like to just interrupt at one point to emphasize, if I may, my feeling upon this point personally, because I am in the unique position of being a very large owner of this property, and directly responsible for and active in its management. My point is this: My interest in the Bethlehem Steel Co. is not essential or necessary to me personally; I have no heirs and I have no children to whom to leave it. My chief desire and chief pleasure in life has been to take this industry and build it into a great and successful thing—a great, successful works. I have not taken a penny out of it. But I do not mind saying, and saying with all the earnestness I know how, that if this bill passes I shall drop it and any further interest in it. It is not possible to make it successful.

There has been much discussion over the fact that American manufacturers, more particularly the big producers, or so-called trusts, sometimes sell their products abroad cheaper than they do at home. This is a practice of every successful commercial nation in the world. As a matter of fact, these sales of surplus products abroad materially aid in reducing the cost of the same articles to the consumer at home. Take the case of a blast furnace; the same number of men are required to run a furnace whether it makes 100 tons of pig iron a day or 500 tons a day. The labor cost, which is the principal item—aside from raw materials—in operating a rail mill, will not be any greater for the production of 2,000 tons than it will for 500 tons a day. Dividing these expenses by the large total output, the cost of the product is materially reduced. The home trade is directly benefited by this reduced cost based on the larger output which foreign trade makes possible. As a matter of fact, the greater bulk of the iron and steel export trade of this country is carried on by the United States Steel Corporation. That corporation, owing to its vast properties, including, as they do, iron mines, coal mines, coke plants, and both rail and water transportation companies, can manufacture at a less cost than the smaller independent companies.

Mr. Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation, admitted to the Ways and Means Committee of the House, when the Payne bill was under consideration, that his corporation could produce steel rails for $2 less per ton than could the independent companies. Its low costs of production are due principally to its ability to operate one mill on a single product and to obtain lower water transportation rates than other manufacturers owing to its large shipments abroad, which constitute 90 per cent of the steel exports of this country. It is manifestly unjust, therefore, to cite the ability of the steel corporation to sell some of its products in foreign competitive fields as proof that the independent American manufacturer is able to meet such foreign competition. It is especially unfair to argue that the increased exports of iron and steel during the past year show that American manufacturers can compete on equal terms with the foreign manufacturers, because, as is well known in the commercial world, prices of iron and steel abroad have been especially high during the past year. This temporary advance in the foreign markets has undoubtedly kept foreign manufacturers from competing as extensively as they would otherwise have done in the American market following the tariff reductions of the Payne bill. There is no doubt in the world that under normal conditions the American manufacturer, compelled, as he is, to pay higher wages than any other manufacturer in the world, can not compete successfully in the foreign field except with his surplus products, for which he must take what he can get.

Undoubtedly the most glaring defect in the Underwood bill is its return to the antiquated ad valorem system of levying tariff duties. Ad valorem duties have been abandoned by nearly every civilized country in the world. Every Secretary of the Treasury from Gallatin to MacVeagh, with the exception of Robert J. Walker, has denounced ad valorem rates. Such rates deceive the public and frequently lead them to believe that material reductions have been made in the tariff, whereas substantial increases have been effected by the substitution of ad valorem for specific duties. Ad valorem tariffs make the rates highest when the people are least able to pay them and make them the lowest when the manufacturer is the least able to withstand foreign competition. As a matter of fact, there is absolutely no justice in such a system of levying tariff duties. Ad valorem rates should be resorted to only in those few exceptions where it is impossible to levy a specific duty.

The greatest frauds on the Treasury are possible on the ad valorem tariffs by dishonest importers resorting to undervaluations. Such duties are most difficult of administration and cause an endless amount of litigation. Even under the present tariff act, with its few ad valorems, there were 3,481 appeals filed against the appraisers' return of foreign market values on imported merchandise in 1910 and 4,506 appeals filed in 1911. It will be extremely difficult to apply ad valorem rates to a number of the articles listed under Schedule C. For instance, by what method will the value of lead ore be ascertained, containing, as it usually does, a number of metals, including zinc, copper, silver, and gold?

The American Chamber of Commerce in Paris has adopted resolutions urging a more general substitution in American tariffs of specific for ad valorem duties, having become convinced by the experience of most European countries that this would result in a more simple and equitable application of duties, as well as in the practical suppression of undervaluation and other evils, and would tend to strengthen the commercial relations of the United States with all foreign countries.

The Tariff Board in its report on the wool schedule also points out the defects of an ad valorem tariff system. Yet the Underwood bill ignores the experience of nearly every tariff expert by adopting the ancient system of basing duties upon the value of imports.

It is a peculiar fact that the United States Steel Corporation, "the Steel Trust," has been accorded special favors in the metal bill, just as the Sugar Refining Trust has been the recipient of Democratic gratuities in the chemical bill. Ferromanganese is a special material in the production of pig iron. Every iron manufacturer has to use this alloy. The steel corporation is the only company that can afford to manufacture ferromanganese, owing to the large quantities used by its blast furnaces. The steel corporation, however, does not sell any of its ferromanganese, and independent iron companies are compelled to import all they use of it. The present law places a duty of $2.50 a ton on ferromanganese, while the Underwood bill fixes an ad valorem duty of 15 per cent upon it, thus increasing the rate that the independent iron makers will have to pay by 250 per cent. These independents can at least be thankful that the President vetoed the metal tariff rates adopted last session, as in that bill it was proposed to increase the duty on ferromanganese 383 per cent. The bill also makes a further discrimination in favor of the steel corporation by admitting free of duty the manganiferous ores from which this corporation makes its own ferromanganese.

There are numerous other inconsistencies in the bill which clearly reveal its crudeness and make manifest the necessity for scientific information before a revision of the metal schedule should be undertaken. I call to your attention some of these inconsistencies.

In this connection I wish to say that the Congressman who reported the bill made a statement on the floor of the House that he knew little or nothing about the business; that he knew nothing about the proper rates to be applied, and yet he was the chief supporter of the bill in the House. I claim scant consideration has been given to a measure involving 25,000 concerns in this country employing nearly a million and a half of workingmen. I now call attention to some of the inconsistencies of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know whether I understood the Senator from Utah. Did I understand him to say that the Member of the House who reported the steel schedule said he knew nothing about it?

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps I had better read what he did say.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Wyoming in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER. I will state whether he said so or not, the text of the bill shows that he evidently did not know anything about it.

Mr. SMOOT. So that there may be no question as to what he said, I will ask to incorporate in my speech exactly the words he used.

Mr. SIMMONS. To whom does the Senator from Utah refer?

Mr. SMOOT. I refer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who was chairman of the subcommittee that considered the bill, and made a speech in the House of Representatives in support of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do you mean Representative PALMER?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that the report of the committee was filed by Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not in the report of the committee. I said that he made the statement upon the floor of the House at the time he reported the bill and was defending it. I want the privilege of putting into my remarks the exact words that Mr. PALMER used on the floor of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. SMOOT. The chairman of the subcommittee which prepared the metal bill in the House, Hon. A. MITCHELL PALMER, now serving his second term in Congress, in his opening remarks defending the measure, made this confession:

> I am not an expert upon the general tariff question, nor have I any other than the ordinary knowledge of that particular phase of the question which is involved in the discussion of the proper rates to be levied upon metals and the manufactures of metals.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, I do not recall the statement the Senator refers to, but I wish to say with reference to Mr. PALMER's speech that I read it all with very great care, and it shows very great knowledge on his part of the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I am willing to take Mr. PALMER's own statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, there has not been a speech made in either House that showed more thorough knowledge of this subject than Mr. PALMER's speech.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to discuss the matter any further. I am willing to take Mr. PALMER's own statement, and that is what I am going to include in my speech.

The following are some of the inconsistencies found in the bill:

> A duty of 15 per cent is placed on hoop and band iron and steel in scrolls or lengths, while the same articles are admitted free of duty when cut into lengths, including cotton ties or a light band. In other words, a manufactured article is admitted free while the raw material is made dutiable.
> Plain structural steel is made dutiable at 15 per cent, yet the same product when fabricated is also to be admitted at 15 per cent, affording no protection whatever to the workman who is employed in the fabrication of these products.
> A plain black sheet is to be admitted at the same rate of duty as that which has been run through a bar or corrugated roll and then painted, no consideration being given to the greater labor cost of the finished product.
> Wires and rods in some forms are protected while the more highly finished product, such as nails and spikes, which are made from rods, are accorded free entry. Bolts with nuts are made dutiable, while the nuts themselves, when entered separately, are free of duty.

I could go along and give a long list of these inconsistencies, but I will not detain the Senate longer.

The bill is a most unfair discrimination in favor of one part of the country against that in another section of the United States. I notice, for instance, that cotton ties, for the baling of the great product of the South, are placed on the free list, while wire used in baling hay, the great product of the North and Middle West, is retained on the dutiable list.

The placing of iron ore on the free list will not, in my opinion, make any appreciable difference in the cost of producing pig iron. Iron-ore deposits in Cuba, the nearest foreign source of supply for the United States, are owned by the steel corporation and perhaps one or two other large American companies, while the independent producers who make more than 50 per cent of the pig iron produced in the United States will have to continue paying royalties or leases on their ore purchases, as they do at present.

Mr. Schwab testified before the Ways and Means Committee that ore cost the pig-iron producer approximately $1 a ton, to which has to be added the cost of mining and transportation to the furnace. This figure is undoubtedly more representative of present-day conditions than the ore costs reported by the Commissioner of Corporations, which are based upon investigations covering the years from 1902 to 1906. Conditions have greatly changed in the 10 years since the beginning of the period covered by the commissioner's report. The leasing or royalty values of iron ore have advanced to a marked degree.

Mr. Schwab's figures on the cost of ore to the pig-iron producer are substantiated by the cost sheets of every other American producer that were submitted to the Senate committee. His valuation of $1 a ton on ore in the ground is also corroborated by a report which Mr. Frank A. Munsey, editor and publisher of the Munsey's Magazine, the Washington Times, and other independent newspapers, printed in Munsey's Magazine for June, 1908. Mr. Munsey, after a most exhaustive inventory of the steel corporation's property at that time, estimated the value of its ore holdings at 60 cents a ton. In commenting on Mr. Schwab's estimate of the value of iron ore, Mr. Munsey said:

> I should think that Mr. Charles M. Schwab is as good an authority as there is in the world on the value of iron ore. He said to me two or three days ago that the ore holdings of the steel corporation were easily worth $1 a ton, and, in fact, might safely and conservatively be regarded as worth still more, for the reason that they can not be duplicated.

The cost of iron ore is highly essential in determining the value of pig iron and other large products of iron and steel. The lower grade of ore now mined has increased this cost considerable, owing to the necessity of using a larger quantity of ore to produce a ton of pig iron, and consequently greater quantities of coke and limestone in the smelting of this lower-grade ore. This condition seems to have been given no consideration in the Bureau of Corporation's report, which is based on the high-grade ore mined at a minimum cost a number of years ago. It now requires about 3 tons of ore to produce a ton of steel rails.

It is beyond dispute that labor costs in this country at least twice as much as in foreign countries. Therefore, with labor constituting one-third the cost of production, a 16½ per cent duty would be necessary to protect the American manufacturer against the actual labor cost in foreign production, if every other item of expense were equal. In other words, an 8 per cent duty would not be half enough to protect American wage earners employed in the steel industry against the products of cheaper European labor.

About the only difference between the Senator from Iowa and myself in the amount that is required by way of duty to protect these items comes in the labor item alone.

Mr. President, I have a table showing the direct labor cost from mines to finished product for pig iron, large steel billets, and bar steel.

The following statement shows the direct labor cost from mines to finished product for pig iron, large steel billets, and bar steel:

DIRECT LABOR COST FROM MINES TO FINISHED PRODUCT.

Pig iron.

Materials used to 1 ton of product.	Total gross ton labor.
Iron ore, 1.97 tons, at $0.75	$1.48
Coal in coke, 1.33 tons, at $0.72	.96
Coke, 1.16 tons, at $0.38 per ton of coal used	.59
Limestone, 0.66 ton, at $0.44	.29
Direct conversion labor	1.06
Add labor on steam and water, electric light, laboratory, switching	.12
Total	4.50

The item of $1.06 is the only one the Senator from Iowa allowed in the conversion cost as labor.

Large steel billets.

Materials used to 1 ton of product.	Total gross ton labor.
Pig iron, 1.23 tons, at $4.50	$5.54
Cupola material used, 53 per cent of 1.10 tons equals 58.3 per cent, at $0.51.	.30
Direct labor	1.38
Add labor on steam and water, electric light, laboratory, switching	.17
Total	7.39

Now, that is the actual labor. That is not an estimate. That is what it costs the Republic Iron & Steel Co. to take their ore from the mines and put it into iron bars; and, I say, even upon that basis, and granting that labor costs in this country twice what it does in foreign countries, it would be impossible to have any such rate as is proposed in the Democratic bill.

Bar steel.

Materials used to 1 ton of product.	Total gross ton labor.
Billets, 1¼ tons, at $7.39	$8.31
Direct labor	4.02
Add labor on steam and water, electric light, laboratory, switching	.17
Total	12.50

(Labor, coal, and coke expressed in net tons but reduced to gross tons.)

NOTE.—Salaries of clerks, managers, and superintendents included, but all labor in transportation, supplies, lubrication, refractories, etc., excluded.

The importance of the labor cost increases to a marked degree in the more finished products, constituting as it does nearly 90 per cent of the cost of all products advanced beyond the billet stage.

ELECTRIC-FURNACE PRODUCTS.

[Paragraph 1.]

The pending House bill includes high-grade electric-furnace products in the paragraph with pig iron, scrap iron, spiegeleisen, and so forth. When the tariff act of 1897 was enacted the only ferro-alloys of any commercial importance were the blast-furnace products, such as ferromanganese, spiegeleisen, and ferrosilicon containing less than 15 per cent silicon. The act of 1897 provided certain specific duties which were not sufficient to afford protection to the then unknown high-grade electric-furnace products. Many of them have been discovered and most of them first commercially made since that time. They have been produced in connection with the development of the electric furnaces. The utilization of these various ferro-alloys in the manufacture of steel has inaugurated a new era in steel manufacture and made possible the economical production of steel of vastly improved quality suitable for all sorts of special purposes. This was recognized in the tariff act of 1909, when the high-grade electric-furnace products were separated from the blast-furnace products. But the pending bill puts them in the same paragraph and at the same duty of 15 per cent ad valorem.

Placing the same rate of duty of 15 per cent on a blast-furnace product as upon the rarer electric-furnace ferro-alloys is absurd. The duties under the existing law on these electric-furnace alloys are equivalent to about 25 per cent ad valorem and are practically on a tariff-revenue basis now, the proof of which is found in the large increase of importations of these products. Lowering the duties to 15 per cent will reduce the revenue and will increase the imports to such an extent as to be disastrous to the industry in this country.

The total tonnage imports of all the electric-furnace ferro-alloys enumerated in paragraph 184 of the existing law for the two fiscal years 1908 and 1909, during which the law rates on these products under the Dingley act was in force, was 20,826.22 tons, and the duty collected was $96,026.44, whereas the tonnage imported for the two fiscal years 1910 and 1911 amounts to 26,241.03 tons, and the duty collected was $410.762. That is to say that in spite of the higher rate of duty the tonnage has increased.

In 1907 the selling price of 50 per cent ferrosilicon was approximately $110 per ton. The manufacture of these products began in this country at that time, and they now sell for $70 per ton. A similar reduction in price is true of other electric-furnace products. A furnace man who gets $960 a year in this country would receive only $370 in Austria for doing exactly the same kind of work, and an ordinary laborer who gets $2 a day here would be paid only 80 cents there. In a year 1 horsepower could produce a ton of ferrosilicon. That horsepower costs at Niagara Falls from $16 to $18, as compared with the cost of $7 and $8. It costs $20 a ton less to produce ferrosilicon in Norway and in Austria than in the United States. There is a capacity in this country now to manufacture the full amount of the requirements of this product. It is an industry which will simply be extinguished should the Underwood bill become a law.

TUNGSTEN, MOLYBDENUM, ETC.

[Paragraph 1.]

The Underwood bill places tungsten, molybdenum, vanadium, and other similar metals and alloys in the same class as ferromanganese and ferrosilicon, making them dutiable at 15 per cent ad valorem. In the case of tungsten, molybdenum, vanadium, and so forth, there ought to be a difference, because of the greater cost of production. These ores are produced in Spain, Portugal, Bohemia, and South America, where miners receive less than $1 a day in wages. In Portugal and Spain, two of the largest producing countries, the wages are from 44 cents to 56 cents a day, and many women are employed, who receive from 18 to 19 cents a day, particularly in Portugal.

These ores in the United States are found in various western and southwestern States, where miners never receive less than $3 a day for eight hours, and many of them are paid $3.50. In Colorado, where considerable tonnage of these ores is now produced, ordinary day laborers are paid $3 per day, and the skilled laborers as high as $5 a day. Practically the entire cost of the ore constitutes labor charges. Through the low cost of production of the foreign ores, the mines of this country have not been developed as they would be if the miners of these products were given sufficient protection. There are between $3,000,000 and $9,000,000 invested in tungsten mines in the United States, and these mines would be able to produce one-fourth of the world's consumption of tungsten ores.

Comparative costs of manufacture of tungsten in Europe and the United States with ore at $6 per unit WO_3 per ton delivered at works and a yield of 100 pounds of tungsten from each 140 pounds WO_3.

[In cents per pound.]

	United States.	Europe.
Cost of ore required to produce 1 pound of metal	42	42
Duty, 10 per cent	4.2	.....
Cost of manufacture as per sworn statement	23.652	.....
Cost of manufacture, Borcher's bid (attached)	.....	13
	74.3	55

From which it will be seen that the cost of manufacture without profit in the United States is 27 per cent higher than the cost plus profits in Europe.

BAR IRON.

[Paragraph 2.]

The bar-iron producers naturally greatly fear the results of any further reduction in the tariff on their product. In the law of 1909 bar iron was reduced from six-tenths to three-tenths cent per pound, and round iron from eight-tenths to six-tenths cent per pound, so that bar iron suffered a reduction of 50 per cent, since which time importations have increased 33 per cent, showing that the present tariff is competitive and not prohibitive as claimed. It is now proposed to make bar iron dutiable at 10 per cent ad valorem. Bar iron is manufactured by a large number of comparatively small independent companies scattered over all the country, representing diversified interests and having no connection with each other. It is produced largely by hand labor, and consequently requires a very much larger proportion of skilled labor than ordinary steel, which makes a much higher cost of production.

The wages paid for American skilled labor are so much in excess of that paid in other countries that to put this industry upon a strictly revenue basis would mean that either the labor cost would have to be materially reduced or the plants would necessarily have to cease to operate. In England the labor of puddling is paid an average of about $2.30 per ton, while this same class of labor is paid at the present time in this country $5.50 per ton, though this is much lower than the ordinary rate, owing to the present depressed condition of the business. Bar iron is manufactured from pig iron and scrap iron, which, in the House bill, are placed at 8 per cent ad valorem, while the finished product is placed at 10 per cent, a difference in rate entirely inadequate to protect labor engaged in the industry.

SHEET STEEL.

[Paragraph 4.]

The sheet-steel industry, with an estimated direct investment of $35,000,000, is threatened by the reduction proposed in the House bill on sheet steel to 15 per cent ad valorem. The plants represented are widely scattered from the Atlantic coast to the Mississippi River, and employ about 27,000 persons, among the best paid of any class of labor in this country. In addition, there are many millions of dollars and thousands of workmen employed in mining ore, coal, limestone, and in manufacturing steel, which is subsequently reworked during various processes and finished in the form of steel sheets.

Sheet steel is of necessity hand made. Its cost is largely made up of wages paid for labor. The cost per gross ton of 24-gauge (which is a representative thickness) amounts to about $39. The selling price for the same material at European seaports is about $37.40 per gross ton. The American prices are relatively as low as ever obtained in this market. Owing to the prosperous condition of business in Europe the prices there are unusually high.

The ocean-carrying rates to Atlantic and Gulf coast points are $2.25 to $2.47 per gross ton, and from Liverpool to Pacific coast points, $6.72 per ton. The House bill, with its duty of 15 per cent, would make the European selling price $45.27 at Atlantic coast points. Based on $39 home cost at Pittsburgh, with freight added, the necessary cost, delivered at Galveston, for instance, would be $53.80 as compared with the European selling price of $45.48. The price at San Francisco would be $58 compared with the European price of $49.73, and the price at Boston would be $43.03 as compared with the European price of $45.35. These figures give the cost price in the United States, while the European figures are the selling prices. The shipments of sheet steel to Atlantic and Gulf coasts and adjacent points for the year of 1911 were estimated at 284,000 gross tons and the shipments to the Pacific coast at 137,000 gross tons. This tonnage for Atlantic coast points would doubtless be increased as much as 25 per cent if points up to 200 miles inland were considered. It is obvious therefore that with this low duty proposed by the House bill the American manufacturers are threatened with a loss of a large part of their steel business.

There is an inconsistency in placing the same duty—15 per cent—on sheet steel, a hand-made article, and on steel beams, channels, angles, and so forth, which are produced mechanically at a very much less labor cost. In recent years great improvements have been made in processes for rolling many of the heavier forms of steel, but with sheet steel little improvement has been made. The 15 per cent rate is altogether insufficient for the heavier forms of steel, and certainly is too low for the sheet steel.

From Maine to Houston, Tex., in 1910 there was a consumption of 114,573 net tons of galvanized sheets, estimated—not including a large production of black sheet steel now classified with heavy plates—meaning an expenditure of $1,287,800 in direct wages to sheet-steel employees. This territory is all accessible to the English manufacturers by a low water transportation rate of 10 cents per hundred pounds. The freight from Pittsburgh to New York is 16 cents per hundred pounds.

Many women and children are employed in the industry in Europe, their families having followed it for generations, and, although their wages are on the average about 50 per cent less than the American wages, still they are better paid there than other forms of labor. The high skill and low wages must be considered when fixing the duty, unless Americans are to be forced out of the industry or compelled to accept the low foreign standard of wages.

TIN PLATE.

[Paragraph 8.]

The tin-plate industry is an instance of the wonderful effect of the protective tariff. This industry was first established in the United States by the McKinley tariff law. At that time all the tin plate used in this country was imported from Wales, exceeding 300,000 tons, or 85 per cent of the entire Welsh production, which in 1890 was 367,000 tons. To-day the United States produces 800,000 tons of tin plate with a value of about $52,000,000, and the cost price is much less now than ever before. All that is the result of the protective tariff, which took effect in 1891. When the United States Steel Corporation was formed it controlled practically all of the tin-plate business, but since that time independent manufacturers have established mills and now produce 40 per cent of the total output.

The House bill reduces the protection to a point that would surely throw 25,000 workmen engaged in the industry out of employment or greatly reduce their earnings. In fact, it was practically conceded by the members of the House committee who drew up this bill that the American producers would lose the market at the seacoast, though they apparently did not realize that that means two-thirds of the market of this country. When tin plate was all imported it was natural that the buyers in this country should locate at the cheapest points, which were at the seaboard, and they are still there. From 90 to 95 per cent of all the tin plate that is manufactured is used for containers and the most of it is used for food containers. Baltimore is the larget consumer of tin plate in the world, because of the oyster and fish industry at that place. The canning industry in Virginia and in Delaware, with their crops of peaches, tomatoes, and vegetables, are of great importance as is the fishing industry along the coast. All these go to make up the great consumption of tin plate.

In speaking on this bill, the chairman of the subcommittee that drafted it, said:

> Under the reduced rates there will be an increase in the imports because the Americans will not be able to meet the competition in certain sections of the country; they will have a market which will be a little more restricted than at present, the foreigner being able to pass the door of entry a little farther than he has been able to do in the past.

That means the American producer will not be able to compete at the seacoast under the proposed duty. The effect of the reduced duty can be seen in the importation of tin plate on the Pacific coast. The duty of 1½ cents per pound of the Dingley law was reduced to 1.2 cents per pound by the act of 1909. The importations on the Pacific coast for the year ending June 30, 1909, were 386,010 pounds. Under the reduced duty, for the year ending June 30, 1911, they were 6,691,616 pounds, or an increase of 18 times. That is an illustration of what the authors of this bill are preparing for American manufacturers on the Atlantic coast.

Since this industry was first established in the United States great improvements have been made in machinery and in other ways, but all of these have been adopted also in Wales. The largest item of expense in the manufacture of tin plate is labor, and the producers say that they have been unable to reduce the cost of labor, although millions of dollars have been spent in the effort. American manufacturers pay $2.44 for the same work for which $1.32 is paid in Wales.

In Wales much of the work is done by women and children. They are not employed in the tin industry in this country. The London Iron and Steel Trade Journal has made the remark that "the greatest obstacle to tin plate making on a large scale in the States is the entire absence of cheap female labor so necessary in the industry and so plentiful in Wales." Fortunately, with a protective tariff, the use of such labor has not been necessary in the United States. In Wales girls are used to carry tinning pots to the assorting room; these pots weigh over 100 pounds, and are carried in some cases 200 feet. A manufacturer who was asked why he did not use a donkey for that work replied, "Why, the donkey would eat more than we pay these girls." That is the kind of labor American workmen are asked to compete with.

In the manufacture of the 800,000 tons of tin plate produced in this country there are required 1,900,000 tons of iron ore, 1,100,000 tons of coke, 535,000 tons of limestone, 1,000,000 tons of pig iron, and 925,000 tons of steel. In addition to that the coal consumption alone is about 3,200,000 tons. In other words, it requires 3,000 coal miners working every day in the year to provide the fuel necessary for the production of that 800,000 tons of tin plate. The question of tariff is wholly one of labor. It is the labor in the coal mines, the ore mines, coking fields, railroads, tin-plate mills, and everywhere else.

Mr. W. U. Follansbee, of Pittsburgh, in testifying before the Senate Finance Committee on behalf of a number of independent tin-plate manufacturers, stated that in 1911 the average wage paid to each of the men in the tin-plate department of the Follansbee mills was $3.25 per day, and their earnings averaged $874 per annum. The total wages annually paid American workmen dependent upon the tin-plate industry, of which 60 per cent is paid direct in making tin plate alone, aggregate $27,750,000. In the last three years the production of tin plate has increased 33⅓ per cent, and at the same time the cost to the consumer has been materially reduced.

From 1872 to 1878 the duty on tin plate was 15 per cent ad valorem, and the average price paid by the American consumer was $7.30 per box of 100 pounds. From 1879 to 1891 the duty was 1 cent per pound, a strictly revenue duty, and the average price was $4.31 per box. Up to that time no tin plates were produced in this country. Under the Dingley law the protective tariff was 1.5 cents per pound. From 1904 to 1908 the American consumer paid on the average of $3.48; from 1909 to 1911, under the existing law, the duty being 1.2 cents per pound, the consumer has paid an average of $3.38, and during that time the price of block tin has averaged 5 cents per pound higher than for the period of 1908. The price of block tin is absolutely controlled by a syndicate of London speculators.

The House report on this bill estimates that the reduced duty on tin plate will produce a revenue of $1,000,000 the first year. That would, at the estimated price, much too high, necessitate the importation of 78,125 tons of tin plate, or the equivalent of 26 American tin-mill units, at 70 men per mill. This would throw 1,820 men out of employment; a direct wage loss of $1,274,000. That is what the Democratic Members of the House and Senate are asking—that a law be passed which, on their own estimate, would throw these men out of employment and cause a loss in direct wages of $1,274,000 to American wage earners. Adding the other wages involved in smelting the iron, reducing pig iron to steel, and other items incident to the production of tin plate, would bring the amount of wages lost to American workingmen up to $2,038,000. But even this loss, based on the House report, is far from the facts.

The tin-plate trade on the Pacific coast amounts to approximately 125,000 tons. The Gulf trade, including Savannah, amounts to 25,000 tons. That would make 150,000 tons, to say nothing of the Atlantic coast trade, or double the quantity necessary to raise the $1,000,000 revenue. This means that 3,640 men, drawing actual wages of $2,548,000 in the tin-plate mills, would be thrown out of employment, exclusive of the men mining coal, making the coke, smelting the pig iron, and converting the steel that goes into the tin plate. Including the coal miners and all concerned it would mean at least $5,000,000 per annum lost to the American wage earners, to say nothing of the wages of those who supply those wage earners with what they consume. Even these figures do not include the consumption of tin plate at Baltimore or other Atlantic points.

The freight rate on 100 pounds of tin plate from Pittsburgh to New York and central northern Atlantic ports is 17 cents, and the freight from the Welsh mills to the same points is 8 cents. The difference in the wages paid in Wales and in the United States in the production of that 100 pounds of tin plate is 45 cents, excluding the capital invested and the average lower cost of the raw material in Wales. The Welsh producer accordingly has an advantage of 79 cents on the 100 pounds at the Atlantic coast points. The proposed 20 per cent ad valorem duty under the House bill on the average price ($2.70) of tin plates at the Welsh mills for 12 years would amount to 54 cents. Taking that duty from the advantage that the foreign producer has would enable him to sell his tin plates in New York at 25 cents a box, or $5 a ton, lower than the American producer.

The following table shows in detail the advantage the Underwood bill gives the foreign manufacturer of tin plate over the American producer per 100 pounds delivered at the United States ports named:

	New York and central and northern Atlantic ports.	New Orleans and other Gulf ports and Savannah.	San Francisco and other Pacific ports.
Freight from American mills, Pittsburgh district	$0.17	$0.34	$0.70
Freight from Welsh mills	.08	.10	.30
	.09	.24	.40
Wages	.45	.45	.45
Capital investment	.10	.10	.10
Raw material, average	.15	.15	.15
	.79	.94	1.10
Underwood proposed 20 per cent ad valorem duty on price at Welsh mills, average for 12 years, 1900 to 1911, inclusive, $2.70 per 100 pounds, equals	.54	.54	.54
Welsh advantage per 100 pounds	.25	.40	.56
Welsh advantage per net ton	5.00	8.00	11.20

At the present time the difference in price of the raw material is comparatively low between Wales and America, because of exceptionally good times and high prices abroad, coincident with low prices in this country. But within the last two years the foreign producer has had an advantage on raw material of $6 per gross ton, and an allowance must be made for the recurrence of that condition. Even if the American mills, by reducing wages and operating without profit, could retain, under the House bill, the New York and central northern Atlantic ports trade, they would unquestionably lose the Gulf and Pacific coast business. This business alone means about 160,000 tons, which furnishes employment to 7,500 men, whose wage loss would amount to $5,000,000.

The American tin-plate manufacturers, in their brief submitted to both the House and the Senate committees, have recommended a reduction of their duty from 1.2 to 1 cent per pound in view of the phenomenal growth of their industry under the protective tariff system. They insist that 1 cent is the least protection they could exist under. This would be a reduction of 55 per cent from the McKinley duty of 2.2 cents per pound, by which the American tin-plate industry was established 20 years ago.

Mr. John Williams, of Pittsburgh, president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel and Tin Workers, and other officers of that organization, appeared before the Senate Committee on Finance to protest against any reduction in the duty on tin plates. Mr. Williams, in his testimony, declared a reduction in duties which would permit the free entry of imported plates would result in the wholesale closing of mills engaged in the manufacture of sheet and tin plates. This condition, he said, was assured from the statements of manufacturers that if the Underwood rates became effective the only way they could operate their plants would be by reducing labor. Mr. Williams pointed out that employees in the American tin-plate industry receive above double the wages paid in the Welsh industry with whom they would have to compete if there is any further reduction in the duty on tin plates.

Mr. Walter Larkin, of Martins Ferry, Ohio, vice president of the Sheet and Tin Plate Division of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, told the committee that the experience of the workingman had been that a reduction in the duty on tin plates always resulted in a reduction of wages to them. He said that in 1895, after the Wilson-Gorman bill passed, the tin-plate workers had to accept reductions from 12½ to 15 per cent in their wages, and that after the tariff had been restored by the Dingley bill wages were increased 8¾ per cent. There was no reduction in wages following the enactment of the Payne bill, as the tariff cut in that measure was recommended by the tin-plate manufacturers themselves, according to Mr. Larkin.

TOOL STEEL.

[Paragraph 9.]

Tool steel, as the name implies, is a high grade of steel used in the manufacture of tools, cutlery, knives, razors, and any instrument requiring an edge or temper. This steel is manufactured either by the crucible or high-speed process, each of which involves a great amount of specially skilled labor. The labor amounts to about 50 or 55 per cent in the tool-steel process itself, and the finished product represents fully 80 per cent of labor. The expense attached to manufacturing tool steel is readily shown in its selling price of from $120 to $2,500 a ton. An example of the amount of work required to produce this class of steel is shown in the steel for blades in safety razors. This steel goes through as many as 20 operations before it leaves the tool-steel plant, and, after that, the manufacturer of the safety razor has to spend a great amount of labor on this steel to finish it in the form of blades ready for use.

Section 9 of the Underwood bill reduces the tariff on this class of steel to 10 per cent ad valorem, which the manufacturers contend amounts to no protection at all. The competition in tool steel comes from England, France, and Germany, where the low wages permit the manufacture of tool steel, with its large labor percentage, at a cost considerably below that for which it can be produced in the United States. Under the present tariff, tool-steel manufacturers are beginning to establish that industry on a substantial footing in this country, the production of crucible steel now running from 75,000 to 100,000 tons a year. Tariff agitation, however, has brought this industry almost to a standstill, and German and English manufacturers are again taking a large share of the American trade.

Mr. Robert E. Jennings, president of the Carpenter Steel Co., of Reading, Pa., informed the committee that his plant was running from only 55 to 60 per cent of the time under present conditions.

Mr. William Metcalf, jr., of the Braeburn Steel Co., declared in most emphatic terms that if the Underwood bill becomes a law he would have to go into court and ask for a receiver for his company, and that he would take that step immediately to protect the creditors and stockholders of his company. Mr. Metcalf told the committee that, by reason of having been protected by a tariff, American manufacturers are now making better steel than the English people and are gradually getting the trade for high-grade steel in this country away from English makers, who have held it without competition for many years. He declared that the only way in which American manufacturers can keep this trade is by retaining the tariff until such a time as they can fully demonstrate that American steel is equal or superior to English steel.

"High-speed" steel is steel that retains its temper while working at a high rate of speed. It makes deep heavy cuts and enables the machinist to turn out four or five times as much work with one tool as he did with the old carbon steel, according to Mr. Ramsey, of the Crucible Steel Co. A large amount of tungsten is used in the manufacture of high-speed steel, and it goes through a great many labor operations. Outside of tungsten, however, this steel costs very little more than ordinary steel in the beginning, but by the time it is finished labor has been employed to the extent of about $400 a ton. The American manufacturer pays for skilled labor about $4 a day, while the English and German manufacturer has the same work done for $1.75 a day. It is absolutely essential to retain the present duty on tool steel if American standard of wages in this industry is to be maintained.

STEEL WOOL OR STEEL SHAVINGS.

[Paragraph 10.]

The manufacture of steel wool and steel shavings is practically a new industry in the United States. It is now being encouraged by a duty of 40 per cent. The Underwood bill proposes to cut this duty in half, which American manufacturers contend would destroy the American industry. Practically 60 per cent of the cost of producing steel wool is due to the skilled labor employed in this industry.

Mr. Herman Wolf, a representative of the American Steel Wool Manufacturing Co., of New York, submitted the following table to the committee showing the difference in the cost of producing steel wool in his New York factory and in Europe:

Cost of production per pound.

	United States.	Europe.
	Cents.	Cents.
Wire	3	2
Labor	10½	4
Manufacturing expenses	4½	3
Total	18	9

This table shows that the cost of manufacture in this country is double the European cost, the increase being due almost entirely to the greater expenditure for labor in the United States. The duty on steel wool now amounts to 7 cents a pound, which would indicate that the present rate is none too high to protect the American industry.

The only protest that the Senate committee received against the present duty on steel wool was from an importer of a German product. This importer contended that the present duty is ruinous to his business and that he was losing money on his importations. On the other hand, the American manufacturers of steel wool declare that any reduction of the duty would destroy that industry in this country. When it comes to a question as to whether an American industry or an importer of foreign products is to survive, I shall always support the American industry. I do not believe Congress would be justified for one minute in reducing a duty on the complaint of an importer that it was ruinous to his business. Yet the Underwood bill does this very thing.

IRON OR STEEL ABRASIVES.

[Paragraph 11.]

The duty on metal abrasives is a typical example of how a protective tariff builds up an American industry and at the same time benefits an American consumer by reducing the cost of production. When American companies began the manufacture of metal abrasives the foreign product was selling in this country for from $70 to $75 per ton. American competition soon pushed this price down to $60 per ton. Prior to the tariff act of 1909, metal abrasives had been imported at a duty of 45 per cent ad valorem. When the Payne bill was under consideration manufacturers of these abrasives demonstrated that they were in need of additional protection. I offered the amendment, which was adopted, fixing the duty at 1 cent a pound. This increase of duty did not increase the price of metal abrasives, but did give the American manufacturer better protection in his sale of off sizes, which constitute nearly two-thirds of his product, and which must be sold at a great reduction under the price charged for standard sizes.

Metal abrasives consist of grit, shot, and sand made of iron or steel, and are used in grinding, sawing, rubbing, boring, and facing marble, granite, stone, brick, and so forth, and in sand-blast castings. The quantity of the abrasives used in each operation is so small that its price does not in any way affect the cost of the material on which it is used. For instance, 25 cents' worth of abrasives is sufficient to completely work granite or marble worth $500 or $600.

One importer has practically a monopoly on the importation of foreign abrasives used in this country, having the exclusive agency for all the important foreign plants. If the American industry were destroyed to-morrow, he would absolutely control the sale of iron and steel abrasives in this country, and could raise the price to any figure he desired.

Manufacturers of this article insist that the present duty of 14 cents a pound is necessary for the continuance of the industry in the United States, and that the rate of 20 per cent ad valorem proposed in the Underwood bill would be ruinous to them. As the representative of the foreign shot producers is a keen competitor in the American market under the present duty, it is contended that any reduction of the tariff would not in anywise benefit the American consumer. Shot manufacturers submitted statements to the Senate committee, showing that the American cost of producing abrasives is from $42.62 to $49.25 per ton. Sizes of foreign abrasives saleable in the United States cost, laid down in American ports, about $31.80 per ton. The raw material used in this product costs about one-half as much abroad as in the United States, while the labor cost is practically in the same proportion, the foreign manufacturer being able to procure unskilled labor from 80 to 85 cents a day, while the American manufacturer has to pay $1.80 a day.

The evils of an ad valorem tariff system is plainly shown in the case of metal abrasives. Iron and steel shot used for this purpose is made in a number of sizes, the prices for which vary in accordance with their use. It is extremely difficult for anyone but an expert to distinguish the difference in the size, however. This would make it possible for an importer under the ad valorem tariff to defraud the Government by misrepresenting the size of his imports of abrasives. In the "Iron-Sand" case hearing at Boston, September 28, 1911, two examiners of that port testified that they were unable to distinguish between $9 and $30 sizes of shot. Under an ad valorem duty an importer might be able to get $30 shot passed by the examiners as $9 shot and thus reduce the amount of duty he would have to pay. Finer sizes of these abrasives are called the "off" sizes, and these have to be sold at greatly reduced prices. Except for use, however, it is difficult to distinguish between most of the off sizes and the standard sizes. About 3,000 tons of metal abrasives are used in the United States annually. If the foreigner sold all of these and had to pay a duty of only 20 per cent the Government would lose about $8,000 a year, and the consumer would not get his shot a cent cheaper. In fact, it is quite certain that with the American industry destroyed, the foreign producer would at once raise his price, and thus the American user would have to pay more under the lower duty than he had under the higher duty which had made American competition possible.

WIRE RODS AND MANUFACTURES OF WIRE.

[Paragraphs 12 and 13.]

Paragraphs 12 and 13 seriously affect the wire industry of the United States, which does a total business of approximately 2,500,000 tons per annum, representing in value $100,000,000. This industry employs about 100,000 persons. Its tonnage covers a complete line of wire products from the coarsest wire used for telephones, telegraph, nails, and fencing purposes to the delicate wire used in the manufacture of pianos and finer wires entering into the articles of daily use. The Payne bill makes a careful classification according to values and specifications of the products covered by sections 12 and 13 of the pending bill. The Payne rates were carefully graduated according to these values and the specifications. The Underwood bill would upset that entire classification and include wire rods and the products of wire all under two ad valorem duties, 10 and 20 per cent, without any regard whatever for the widely different labor costs entering into these products.

A proviso to paragraph 13 puts barbed and all the fence wire and baling wire on the free list, but to make doubly sure that its attack on the fence-wire industry will be effective the Underwood bill also repeats this item as paragraph 69 under its free list. Another blow was delivered the wire-rod industry by also placing cotton ties on the free list.

Mr. Wallace H. Rowe, president of the Pittsburgh Steel Co., the largest manufacturers of wire in the world, stated to the Finance Committee that his company had not made 2 per cent on barbed wire in the last two years, and that its profit on nails has been very small. His company produces about 2,000,000 kegs of nails a year, or approximately one-seventh of the total annual consumption in the United States.

Discussing the price of barbed wire, Mr. Rowe said that he had personally sold barbed wire at 6 cents a pound for painted and 7 cents a pound for galvanized wire. He declared that under a protective-tariff duty these commodities have been gradually cheapened in cost, until to-day the American farmer is getting the finest grade of steel in his wire, manufactured on more scientific lines than ever before in the history of this country, and is paying only 1.55 cents for painted and 1.85 cents for galvanized wire. Mr. Rowe informed the committee that the net profit of his company was about 6 per cent. He pointed out that 90 per cent of the steel products exported from the United States are those sent out by the United States Steel Corporation, which is able to get much lower rates than other manufacturers owing to its great diversity of products and ability to charter vessels by combining cargoes.

"Common" wire product includes the cheaper grades, such as fence wire, barbed wire, wire nails, baling wire, and wire fencing, which are manufactured in quantities running to hundreds of thousands of tons and which, starting from the cheapest raw material, are produced under conditions and by methods insuring a small proportion of labor cost in the cost of the finished article. Such product is sold as the ordinary run of the mill and is not subject to any specifications or inspection for size and quality. High-grade specialties, on the other hand, are made from raw material costing two or three times more than the common product. They are manufactured under conditions requiring many more operations, heat treatments, with their attendant picklings and handlings, inspections, and so forth, all of which go to make the proportion of labor in the cost of the finished article between 60 and 70 per cent.

In the manufacture of wire and wire products there is little, if any, difference between the methods employed in American mills and those of European manufacturers. American manufacturers have no advantages because of better and more modern machinery, for no machinery is required in drawing, except the wire block, to which power is applied; and, therefore, the additional cost is almost entirely that of labor. Moreover, there is a constantly growing demand on the part of the consuming public for a higher and more reliable grade of material in these products, as shown by the continual increase and severity of purchasers' specifications for quality. This is particularly true where failure of material might endanger human safety. Such conditions can only be met by additional labor cost in extra inspection and operations in manufacture. Practically all high-grade wire products purchased by the United States Government are subject to very rigid specifications and inspection.

It is absolutely essential that a more detailed classification of wires and wire products should be made in the rates of duty. Under former bills the average duty was high enough to cover the more expensive products. To make a single rate of duty which will allow tonnage products to be imported would be absolutely ruinous to all industries engaged in the manufacture of the higher grade wires and products of wires. In House bill 18642, paragraph 12, wire rods are changed from a specific duty (as in paragraph 134 of the act of 1909) to an ad valorem duty of 10 per cent, a reduction of 41.2 per cent from the equivalent ad valorem duties under the act of 1909, as shown by the imports of rods for 1911.

Rod-rolling practice is the same here and abroad with little, if any, difference in machinery, and in 1908 the following daily wages were paid in Germany and the Pittsburgh district of the United States for rod-mill labor:

	Aschen, Germany.	Hagen, Germany.	Pittsburgh.
Ordinary rolling-mill men (10 hours)		$1.88 to $2.35	$9.33
Heaters		1.65 to 1.88	9.33
Mechanics		.97 to 1.42
Laborers		.75 to .83	1.78
Mechanics (rod mill)	$1.21 to $1.46		3.53

I call attention to the wording of paragraph 12 in the pending bill. This paragraph has been so changed as to include the products of wire rods, as well as wire rods themselves. This was done by the insertion of lines 14, 15, 16, and 17, reading as follows:

Including wire rods, iron or steel bars, cold rolled, cold drawn, cold hammered, or polished in any way, in addition to the ordinary process of hot rolling or hammering, 10 per cent ad valorem.

It will be seen by this clause that a wire rod, cold rolled or cold drawn, would produce a round or flat wire, and thus make this paragraph applicable to drawn or cold-rolled wire at 10 per cent duty. The effect of this would be to nullify the duty on such wire as covered by paragraph 13 at 20 per cent ad valorem. Such result would deprive the Government of considerable revenue, as well as practically destroy the protection to mnufacturers whose product comes under paragraph 13.

Paragraph 134 of the act of 1909 provides—that all iron or steel wire rods which have been tempered or treated in any manner, or partly manufactured, shall pay an additional duty of one-half of 1 cent per pound.

This provision is eliminated in H. R. 18642, with the consequence that any additional labor put on the rolled wire rod, such as tempered or treated in any manner, will pay 10 per cent on the added cost. As this added cost is made up almost entirely from labor, and the cost in the United States of such labor is at least double that in foreign countries, the proposed rate is entirely inadequate to cover the difference in labor cost.

Paragraph 13 places all kinds of iron or steel wire, whether round or flat, whether in long lengths or short, in coils or otherwise, on a uniform ad valorem rate of 20 per cent.

The rates of the Payne bill have not proved prohibitive, as shown by importations of between 18,000,000 pounds and 19,000,000 pounds for the year 1910, and 19,000,000 pounds for the year 1911, at an average foreign cost of 4.8 cents per pound for 1910, and 4.4 cents per pound for 1911, being equivalent to a duty of 38¼ per cent ad valorem for each of the two years.

In the pending bill it is proposed to reduce the present rates to 20 per cent ad valorem on the grounds that it would be followed by importations to the value of $1,200,000. At the same unit of cost as the importations for 1911, this would call for an importation of 27,000,000 pounds, yielding a revenue of $240,000, against an average revenue of $325,000 per year for the two preceding years. This would mean a loss in revenue to the Government of $85,000 per year, and the increased importations would mean an additional loss in wages of $200,000 to American labor, or $600,000 less in wages to labor for the entire importation.

There are in this country 10 or 12 manufacturers of this grade of steel wire, and an open market. It must be evident that if foreign manufacturers can now compete in the American market, with the present rate of duty averaging 38 per cent on the importations made, a lowering of the rate to 20 per cent would result in very serious loss to American manufacturers, if not in the closing up of several.

As stated before, this wire is special, both in material and manufacture. On account of the exacting requirements of the consumer, many more drawings, annealings, temperings, cleanings, handlings, and inspections are necessary than in the ordinary commercial product. Practically all the above is labor. In fact, the percentage of labor cost to the cost of the finished article will run about 60 to 70 per cent.

Wire drawers (skilled labor) engaged in work of this kind earn in this country the following wages per week, as compared with foreign manufacturers:

United States, wire drawers, $18 to $30.

England (Warrington), wire drawers, $9.73 to $10.95.

Germany, wire drawers, $8.76 to $9.24.

For ordinary wire drawers, wages paid in 1908 for 10 hours per day were, in—

Pittsburgh district: Ordinary wire drawers, $3.74 per day; laborers, $1.48 per day.

Germany: Hagen, ordinary wire drawers, $1.43 to $1.50 per day; laborers, 75 cents to 84 cents per day. Mannheim, wire drawers, $1.24 to $1.50 per day; ordinary labor, 75 cents to 90 cents per day. Mulheim (per week of 60 hours), wire drawers, $9; ordinary labor, $4.50⅞; ordinary labor, boys, $2 to $3.50.

According to the report of the British Board of Trade (1907–8), the weekly time rates of wages of laborers in the engineering trades for 1905 were:

Birmingham, 20 shillings, or $4.87.

Bolton, 18 to 20 shillings, or $4.38 to $4.87.

Halifax, 18 to 22 shillings, or $4.38 to $5.35.

London, 24 shillings, or $5.84.

Manchester and Salford, 18 to 22 shillings, or $4.38 to $5.35.

Middlesbrough, 22 shillings, or $5.35.

Sheffield, 20 to 24 shillings, or $4.87 to $5.84.

Warrington, 18 to 20 shillings, or $4.38 to $4.87.

In the above towns are located the principal wire mills engaged to-day in exporting wire into the United States.

The average weekly laborer's wage in the engineering trade was:

England and Wales, $4.38 to $5.35.

Scotland, $4.37 to $4.87.

Ireland, $3.89 to $4.87.

Under the act of 1909, wire galvanized or tinned was subject to the duty on the bare or uncoated wire plus a duty of two-tenths cent per pound in addition. This is eliminated under H. R. 18642, galvanized wire being subject to a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem—the same rate as on uncoated wire.

In connection with this item I quote the following from the statement of Mr. George S. Whyte, of the Macomber & Whyte Rope Co., of Chicago, at the hearing of the Finance Committee on February 21, 1912:

> We believe that the specially galvanized wire (known as double or extra galvanized wire) used in rope making should be preserved as under the Payne Act, namely, with two-tenths cent per pound in addition to the duty on the plain wire. Such wire is treated very differently from the close-wiped fence products. The process is slower, more expensive, and entails vastly more inspection, care, and handling than the cheaper grade. It is readily distinguished by means of standard tests which are in practice everywhere to-day. The labor used in this process corresponds to wire mill labor and the remarks above as to wages will apply in this case.

The labor cost for the American manufacturer is 70 per cent greater than the labor cost abroad. The rate proposed in H. R. 18642 is 20 per cent. This means that the additional value added by galvanizing should pay duty at 20 per cent, while the American manufacturer pays 70 per cent more for his labor than the foreign maker.

Flat wire is manufactured from hot rolled flat rods, either by cold rolling or cold drawing through dies, or by cold rolling or cold drawing from round wire or rods, depending on the requirements desired. It is a very highly manufactured product, entering into so many and varied uses as to entail a vast number of specifications as to quality, finish, size, and temper. This makes it necessary to employ extra operations, annealings, temperings, handlings, inspections, and so forth, all of which bring the labor cost to an exceedingly high ratio.

While on flat wire of the lower grade the labor cost runs 50 per cent labor to 50 per cent material on low carbon steel, on the higher grades and more highy treated wires of both high and low carbon the percentages will run 20 to 30 per cent material and 70 to 80 per cent labor. Under paragraphs 124 and 135 of the act of 1909 flat wire receives a protection of 35 per cent ad valorem, giving a very moderate protection to American manufacturers, in view of the shown disparity in wages abroad and here. It is proposed to reduce this duty to 20 per cent ad valorem, unless the clause in paragraph 12 should stand (lines 14, 15, 16, and 17), in which case it would be reduced to 10 per cent. The industry is a growing one, carried on at present by about 20 manufacturers in seven States. A large number of workmen are employed who would be directly affected by such changes as proposed under the rates of H. R. 18642. Many of the mills would probably have to cease operating unless wages could be adjusted to equalize those paid abroad.

On wire rope the present duty is made up of the duty on wire, of which the rope is composed, plus an additional duty of 1 cent per pound (par. 135, act of 1909). The duty proposed in House bill 18642 is 20 per cent for wire and for wire rope (par. 13). This means that the additional cost added to wire by manufacturing into rope is to pay a duty of 20 per cent. This additional cost is almost entirely labor, and the labor cost of the foreign ropemaker is only about half the cost of that paid in the United States. The machinery is practically the same here and abroad, and the general methods and speed of production are the same, and any reduction would necessarily have to be in labor cost.

To sum up, in the manufacture of wire rods and of steel wire of the higher grades, also in galvanizing wire, in manufacturing wire rope from the wire, and in the manufacture of flat wire from rolled rods or drawn wire, the labor cost of the American manufacturer is 60 to 100 per cent greater than that paid by his foreign competitor. The rate of duty should be one to cover this difference on labor cost, if the business is to be held by the wage earners of this country. Customhouse returns show that the rate on steel wire in the tariff act of 1909 is equal to 38¼ per cent on the higher grades imported, and this rate has not prevented the importation of many millions of pounds annually, and I submit that the present rate should be maintained and no change made until Congress has full information on which to base any change in the rate of duty. The change proposed has been submitted without information as to the effect of the changed duty, and may lead to loss of millions to the manufacturers and a great loss of work and earning power by the labor heretofore employed.

WROUGHT ANVILS.

[Paragraph 17.]

Before the McKinley law placed a protective duty on anvils a wrought anvil was not made in the United States. That law imposed a duty of 2½ cents per pound, which the Wilson law reduced to 1¾ cents. Under the Dingley Act the duty was 1¾ and is now 1⅝. In 1907, 3,000,000 pounds of such anvils were produced in the United States and the imports were 709,794 pounds. Under the reduced duty of the 1909 law the production was 2,600,000 pounds in 1911, a decrease of 400,000 pounds, while the imports were 1,310,863, an increase of 601,114 pounds. This clearly shows that the rate under the existing law is too low, and the Underwood bill proposes to reduce that more than one-half.

The average wage paid in the industry in the United States for all classes of labor is $1.82 per day, whereas in Sweden, a large competitor, the average rate of wages is 99 cents per day. The freight rate from New York to New Orleans on anvils is 40 cents per hundred pounds. The water rate from Sweden to New Orleans is only 30 cents per hundred pounds.

The following tables show the wages paid in the anvil industry in the United States and Sweden:

Wages paid in United States (furnace men, per week of 50 hours).

AUTOMOBILES.

[Paragraph 18.]

The automobile industry in the United States is a magnificent tribute to the success of the protective-tariff system. So recent as 1897, when the Dingley bill was enacted, the automobile industry had not reached sufficient importance in this country to be even mentioned by name in that act. Accordingly, it was given a protection of 45 per cent under the basket clause. At that time about the only automobiles used in this country were of foreign make, and they were so expensive that only a few of the very rich could afford such a luxury. American inventors and manufacturers then got busy and, with the aid of the tariff, which protected them from the cheaper labor of Europe, have built up an industry with a quarter of a billion dollars invested in the equipment of its manufacturing plants and whose products, including finished parts, in 1910 were valued at $254,580,000 as compared with $28,018,911 in 1905. It is a fact well known to all that the growth of the American automobile industry has been accomplished by a marked reduction in the price of automobiles, so that now these machines are within the reach of any person of average means. A most important factor in the automobile industry is its recent development of automobile trucks, which are revolutionizing the means of transportation, especially in towns and cities of the United States. These trucks are reducing the cost of such transportation, in which economy the American consumer will have a large share.

The pending bill reduces the duty on automobiles from 45 to 40 per cent. This is not a very great reduction, but it does not appear that there is any reason whatever for making even this change in the present tariff. When the Payne bill was under consideration, an Italian automobile concern asked that the duty on motor cars be reduced from 45 to 33 per cent. This indicated that that foreign company believed it could continue to maintain its factory in Italy and ship its products to America at a satisfactory profit with a difference of but 12 per cent in tariff. It is entirely possible that the proposed reduction of 5 per cent would be equally as advantageous to the foreign manufacturer of motor cars.

The present tariff has compelled a number of foreign manufacturers to establish factories in this country. Not many years ago a large proportion of the accessories and parts of the automobile such as magnetos, springs, frames, gears, and castings were manufactured in Europe. Nearly all of these items are now American made, giving employment to thousands of American persons, who receive from one-third to one-half more than men employed in the same class of work in foreign countries.

When the Payne bill was under consideration the Fiat Automobile Co., of Italy, wrote the mayor of Detroit the following letter:

NEW YORK, December 15, 1908.

The MAYOR, Detroit, Mich.

DEAR SIR: Owing to the strong probability that there will be no relief for imported cars in any customs revision that may be made under the new administration, we have decided to establish a large factory in this country for the manufacture of our cars and to remove to it a large portion of our manufacturing machinery as well as our organization from Turin.

We are therefore looking about for a suitable place to locate this new factory, which will be of very large proportions, and we are writing you with the hope that you will do us the courtesy of bringing this question before the proper persons or organization in your city, with the idea that we may ascertain what inducements would be made, if any, for the establishment of such a plant in Detroit. We would guarantee to employ 500 skilled mechanics to begin and within a year employ 2,000.

One of the officers of this company expects to sail for Europe about the middle of January, and any proposition that we might receive from your city will be submitted to our directors in Italy upon his arrival, when the matter will be definitely considered and settled.

Trusting to have the honor of your esteemed reply at your earliest convenience, we are,

Very respectfully, yours,

FIAT AUTOMOBILE CO.
E. R. HOLLENDER, Vice President.

The Payne bill maintained the tariff on automobiles at 45 per cent, as a result of which the Fiat Co. has erected an extensive motor-car factory at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., employing American labor at American wages for the manufacture of cars which they sell in this country. This is the same company which wanted tariff reduced to 33 per cent so that it might continue to supply the American market from its factory in Italy, where cheaper labor materially lessened the cost of production. People who can afford to buy automobiles can afford to pay enough for them to maintain the high standard of American wages. This can only be done by keeping the tariff at such a point as to prevent products of cheaper foreign labor supplanting those of American factories.

CASTINGS OF IRON.

[Paragraph 23.]

Manufacturers of textile machinery are fearful that the wording of paragraph 23 will permit the importation of parts of machines finished and ready to be assembled at the rate of 10 per cent ad valorem. The present duty on textile machinery is 45 per cent, but the House bill evidently intends to include such machinery under the basket paragraph at 25 per cent.

Even under the act of 1909 importers of textile machinery are endeavoring to take advantage of the lower duty on castings "not made up into articles" by having parts of machinery shipped separately in the "knockdown" and entered as castings "not made up into articles." Cases involving the construction of the paragraph relating to cast iron are now pending in the courts. Assistant Secretary Curtis, of the Treasury Department, has suggested that if it is desired to make certain that parts of machines shall not be imported under paragraph 23 these words should be added, "and not parts of machines in any form ready for assembly" after the word "articles."

In a letter to the chairman of the Finance Committee Mr. Curtis says:

It is true that several importers have taken advantage of this proviso of the Payne law to import parts of machinery in the "knockdown" and by separate vessels, claiming the 1 cent per pound rate. This has resulted in a great deal of litigation, which is still pending. I inclose herewith a copy of a recent decision of the United States Court of Customs Appeal (T. D. 32227), which, while it has some bearing upon the questions involved, is not by any means conclusive.

If it is desired to increase the rate of duty upon completed machinery only, it is possible that the phrase "but not made up into articles," in paragraph 23 of H. R. 18642, the proposed substitute for Schedule C of the Payne law, which recently passed the House of Representatives, will have this effect. However, to make certain of this result, I would suggest that after the word "articles" in the said paragraph there be inserted the words "and not parts of machines in any form ready for assembling."

The pending bill was drafted, however, without paying any attention to the possibility of its permitting textile and other machinery to be imported at a rate which would absolutely ruin an American industry in which $50,000,000 has been invested. The annual output of the textile machinery amounts to upward of $20,000,000, giving employment to from 12,000 to 20,000 wage earners.

The increase in production of textile machinery in this country during the last 15 years has been over 100 per cent, and the prices have been materially reduced, but the English production exceeds that of the United States by more than 200 per cent. The total importations into the United States in 1910, at their foreign value, were over $6,500,000. Including duty they had a value in the United States of approximately $9,750,000, and took the place of that much American machinery. The annual revenue from such importations is approximately $3,000,000; to obtain the same revenue under the proposed reduction of duty, importations must increase to approximately $12,000,000 in foreign value, or equivalent to an American value of approximately $18,000,000. Necessarily the American production will be reduced accordingly, which would be equivalent to 41 per cent of the total American product, and a loss in wages to American workmen at the very lowest of over $3,000,000. No domestic textile machinery is exported.

According to the report of the British Government, American wages are over 100 per cent more than those of Great Britain. The present duty of 45 per cent no more than offsets this foreign advantage in labor, cost of material, etc. Nothing would be gained by decreasing duty, but there would be a very large loss. The imports of textile machinery from England in 1909 amounted to $3,680,840, and under the new tariff law they jumped to $5,559,884 in 1910. These figures are conclusive in showing that the duty now imposed on textile machinery is hardly sufficient to protect the manufacturers in this country. England alone exported more than $37,000,000 worth of textile machinery in 1910. Without a large reduction in wages, which would also necessitate a large decrease in the cost of materials, the United States producers could not compete under the reduced duty with foreign manufacturers. Such a reduction would result in enormous loss, and there is no demand for any such drastic treatment of this great industry.

CAST-IRON PIPE.

[Paragraph 23.]

The manufacturers of cast-iron pipe, according to the statement of their representatives before the Finance Committee, have not been making any money for some time. The present duty is $5 a ton, and it is proposed, under the House bill, to reduce that to 10 per cent ad valorem. The cost of iron pipe is governed largely by the price of pig iron. Labor and other material outside of the pig iron cost at least $1 per ton more in this country than in England, and the labor employed at least 50 per cent more. The producers at interior points in this country have no advantage in the way of freights to the Atlantic and Gulf ports, as iron pipe is brought over from Europe at very low rates, because it makes good ballast. This pipe is sold usually to public-utility companies, like gas works or water works or municipalities. It is not sold to the general public like other commodities. The manufacturers are required to bid and the competition is very strong. Iron pipe lasts for 100 years or more.

Mr. George M. Bunting, vice president of the Standard Cast Iron Pipe & Foundry Co., of Philadelphia, said that there is now no profit in the cast-iron pipe business owing to the close competition among American manufacturers. He contended that if they had to meet increased competition from abroad by lower tariff duties American makers of cast-iron pipe would have to close their foundries, which employ about 7,000 men. He declared that wages would have to be reduced to meet foreign competition, and that it is difficult even now to get men to work in the factories for the wages that American companies can afford to pay them. The manufacturers of iron pipe agreed to a reduction of duty on that product from $8 to $5 in the Payne bill. This they believe is the least protection that will allow that industry to continue in this country. According to Mr. Bunting the iron-pipe manufacturers have not been able to get back one penny for depreciation in the last three years, or to any extent for interest on the money invested. During that period his plant has been running about 75 per cent of its capacity, it having been found cheaper to keep the foundries in operation even without a profit than to shut them down owing to the overhead charges that would continue whether the plant was running or not.

IRON AND STEEL CHAINS.

[Paragraph 24.]

As in numerous other instances, the pending bill completely ignores the widely varying labor cost entering into the production of chains, by providing a single ad valorem duty for all kinds of iron and steel chains without any regard whatever for their method of manufacture. Thus the high-grade sprocket chains used on bicycles and automobiles would pay the same rate of duty as the coarse, heavy chains used on steamships or in logging camps.

The difference in the cost of making certain classes of chains in this country and abroad is due to the employment of women and children in the chain-making industry of England. In the Cradley Heath district of England large numbers of women are employed in making chains. They do not work in factories, such as we have in this country, but each family has its chain-making shop right in its home. The women and children go to the larger plants for their raw material, and return the finished chains at the end of the week or month. This is called the cottage or home industry of England. It has caused so much talk that the British Parliament at one time sought to prevent it. but as the women engaged in it asserted that they had no other way of earning a living, and the business was not found to be unhealthy, the attempt on the part of Parliament to forbid women from engaging in it was abandoned. It is a credit to the United States that women and children are not employed in that industry in this country. The American workmen have to compete with chains made by that kind of labor in Europe, and a reduction in duty to 20 per cent ad valorem would affect the situation in this country to a great extent. The half-inch size chains, for instance, command a scale of wages in this country of $3.12 per hundred pounds. It is the union rate, and practically all American shops that make these chains are under union conditions. The rate of the English manufacturer is $1.36 per hundred pounds, as given in the outworker's list. That is a rate a little less than 50 per cent of the American wages.

The secretary of the Chain Makers' and the Chain Strikers' Association in Great Britain has commented quite severely on the condition of women workers in the trade of the Black Country, so called, and he stated that the average wages for a week's work, with long hours, six days in the week, is only from $1 to $1.25 in American money. Competition with that kind of labor is what is invited by the reduced rates of the House bill.

The Morse Chain Co., which is interested in the manufacture of chains in London, Hanover, and Paris, as well as in this country, fully confirms the report that wages paid chain makers abroad are far less than the American scale. According to this company skilled labor abroad runs about 50 per cent of what we pay in this country. Mr. F. L. Morse, manager of the Morse Chain Co., in a letter to be found on page 497 of the Senate Hearings, says:

ITHACA, N. Y., February 14, 1912.

Mr. L. M. WAINWRIGHT,
President Diamond Chain & Manufacturing Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: We have copy of your letter of the 12th instant, addressed to the Committee on Finance, United States Senate, Hon. BOIES PENROSE, chairman, Washington, D. C., and have carefully noted the same.

Referring to this letter, we, as possibly you know, are interested in manufacturing the Morse chain in London, England, Hanover, Germany, and Paris, France, and it has come under the writer's personal observation that the assembling wages are in London $1.60 per week, and in our own plant we are paying from $1.65 to $2.25 per day for the same work, this being somewhat higher than you mention, as we use no female labor. The skilled labor is not lower proportionately, but runs about 50 per cent of what we pay here.

The cost of material is also less in France, Germany, and England, so we have a large handicap in competing with the foreign makers. We have found that with the present duty into Canada their prices will run from 15 to 30 per cent under our delivered prices, and it is only by being closer to the market that we are able to take any of the Canadian business.

There is no question in our mind but what a reduction in the tariff will work a hardship on the American manufacturers, and until the scale of labor and cost of material has been reduced will necessitate running their plants at no profit or at an actual loss. The only way that we see to meet the foreign competition is a radical reduction in the cost of material and labor, and with these two items on the same basis we have no fear of any foreign competition.

We feel sure if the committee who has this matter in charge investigates the manufacture of the standard nonpatented chain they will recognize that the duty now imposed does not meet the difference in cost between the two countries.

Very truly, yours,

MORSE CHAIN CO.,
F. L. MORSE, Manager.

I know of no stronger statement than this letter from Mr. Morse in regard to the necessity of having tariff sufficiently high to protect American workmen against the reduction to the wage level of Europe.

The following table shows the wages paid English and American chain makers, the English prices being for outworkers who furnish their own fuel and factory, while the American wages are net to the workmen and are on the scale of the National Chain Makers' Union:

CUTLERY.

[Paragraphs 26, 27, and 28.]

The total sales of pocket cutlery in the United States, including both domestic and imported knives, now amounts to $5,000,000 a year, wholesale market value. Of this amount $3,000,000 worth is produced in American factories, employing 4,000 workmen. The proportion of labor to the actual cost of producing American cutlery is 80 per cent, which indicates the vital interest that wage earners have in the continuance of that industry in the United States.

The Ways and Means Committee has estimated that the pending bill will increase the imports of foreign pocket cutlery to $1,800,000. This is $1,000,000 in excess of the present imports. On the basis of the present market value such an increase of imports would mean a loss to American workmen and wages of $1,201,970, leaving but one-third of the present American product to be divided among the 35 cutlery factories of the United States. Even now these factories are producing from 15 to 20 per cent below their usual capacity, owing to the increasing importations of foreign knives.

I have here three samples of American pocketknives and three German knives, with a tabulated statement of their cost and selling price. The American knives are made of high quality crucible steel, while the German knives are made with lower grade Bessemer steel blades, such as are used in nearly all imported cutlery. The foreign knives, being identical in appearance, have the same apparent value to the consumer as the American knives, with which they are sold in direct competition, but, of course, they are far less durable.

The factory cost of American knife No. 2 is $3.10 a dozen, while the foreign value of knife No. 12 is $1.25, and the landed value, including duty and all other importing expenses, is $2.48 a dozen.

The factory value of American knife No. 7 is $5.30 a dozen, while the foreign value of knife No. 17 is $1.25 a dozen and the landed value $2.48.

The factory value of American knife No. 8 is $8.97 a dozen, while the foreign value of knife No. 18 is $3 a dozen and the landed value $5.70 a dozen. In each instance the labor cost alone of the American knife is greater than the entire foreign value of the competing knife.

The table following shows the cost and selling prices of these knives in detail.

The following table gives a comparison of weekly wages paid to cutlery operatives abroad and in the United States, indicating that the American workmen receive fully three times as much as the foreign operatives in cutlery factories:

Comparison of weekly wages paid to operatives abroad and in the United States.

	Average paid in Austria, Belgium, and Germany.	Average paid in United States.
Forgers	$4.30 to $7.00	$15.00 to $23.00
Grinders	4.50 to 8.00	15.00 to 27.00
Blade finishers	4.50 to 6.00	12.00 to 18.00
Handle finishers	4.50 to 6.00	12.00 to 18.00
Cutlers	5.00 to 6.50	15.00 to 21.00

With the extent to which foreign cutlery is now competing with the American product in the United States under the present tariff, it is apparent that no further reduction can be made in the rates of duty without causing a corresponding decrease in the wages paid workingmen in this industry. In fact, American pocket cutlery manufacturers contend that the rates in the Underwood bill would destroy their industry, and that with American competition eliminated the foreign manufacturers would have a monopoly of this market and would then increase the prices of cutlery.

Another branch of the cutlery industry affected by paragraph 26 is the manufacture of razors. The Ways and Means Committee estimates that its reduction of the duty on razors would increase their importations from $375,835 for 1911 to $800,000. The entire production of all the razor factories in the United States is less than $400,000. With an estimated importation of more than that amount it is apparent that the Underwood bill proposes to put the razor industry of the United States out of existence. It is absolutely impossible for American razor makers to compete with foreign razors and maintain their present standard of wages. Employees of several American cutlery companies appeared before the Senate Committee on Finance to voice the opposition of their fellow employees against any reduction in the duty on razors.

Mr. Max Schascheten, representing the employees of the Robeson Cutlery Co., of Rochester, N. Y., gave the committee an interesting comparison of wages paid in American and German razor factories. Mr. Schascheten worked in a German factory for 10 years and was fully informed on the subject of wages paid in that country and in the United States. He stated that German wages amount to only one-third or one-fourth of those paid in this country. An expert razor man might make $4 a day in the United States, while in Germany he could earn only from $1 to $1.50 a day. This marked difference in wages is the reason why Germans are able to come into the American market, pay a high duty, and still undersell razors manufactured in America, according to Mr. Schascheten. In comparing the labor conditions of the two countries Mr. Schascheten said he paid as much for the same grade of meat or a little higher in Germany as in the United States, and that his flour cost him about the same there as here.

A petition signed by a large number of the employees of the Geneva Cutlery Co. states that some of them had worked in the cutlery trade in both Germany and the United States, and that they had prepared the following table as a true comparison of wages paid in the two countries:

Cutlery workers.	Weekly wages paid in—
	Germany.	United States.
Forgers and trimmers	$4.30-$7.00	$12.00-$21.00
Dry grinders	4.30- 5.70	12.00- 18.00
Hardeners and temperers	4.30- 6.00	15.00- 21.00
Concavers	4.30- 9.00	16.00- 24.00
Polishers	4.30- 5.70	12.00- 21.00
Razor handle makers	4.30- 5.00	12.00- 18.00
Honers and handlers	2.50- 6.00	6.00- 15.00

On account of this cheap labor German cutlers are able to manufacture razors at a price with which American manufacturers can not compete. I have here an exhibit of several of these low-priced foreign razors.

German cutlers manufacture razor No. 1 at a cost of 99 cents, or under $1, a dozen. Of these razors 1,311,948 were imported into the United States last year. No American cutler can make a razor to compete with this German product.

The German cost of razor No. 2 is $1.49 a dozen. The American cost of a similar razor is $2.60 a dozen, owing, as I said before, to the greater cost of labor in this country, which is three or four times that required to make the German razor. Taking the importation price of this razor at $1.50, in round numbers, each razor would cost 12½ cents, yet they are regularly retailed for $3 apiece. It is apparent, therefore, that the amount of duty placed on these razors does not affect the consumer, but it is of importance to the wage earners, who must compete with the cheaper labor of Europe.

The German cost of razor No. 3 is $1.99 per dozen, while the cost of a similar American-made razor is $3.75 a dozen. The importation cost of razor No. 4 is $2.99 per dozen, and the American cost is $4.84 per dozen. The importation cost of razor No. 5 is $3.28 per dozen and the American cost $6.02 per dozen.

I want to call your attention to the fact that of all the 2,493,923 razors imported into the United States during 1911 only 2,193 were valued at more than 25 cents each.

The following table shows the German cost of the razors I have exhibited here and gives the American cost in detail:

While discussing the tariff on cutlery Mr. Theobald Diehl, special commissioner to Europe for the Philippine customs service, gave some interesting information in regard to the undervaluation of razor importations from Europe. Mr. Diehl cited an instance where razors were invoiced at 12 marks 40 per dozen; the value was questioned, but the original invoice of the manufacturer showed the value as stated. Further information developed the fact that the real value of the shipment was canceled by a second invoice, which carried an additional cost of some 3 marks per dozen. This second invoice was made in the name of the head of the firm, while the first invoice was carried in the name of the firm itself, thus making the transaction appear as two sales, when, in fact, it covered only the one shipment. Mr. Diehl stated that such manipulations of accounts to conceal undervaluations were resorted to by importers located in New York or their agents in Germany. It is quite likely that the remarkably low valuation of razors imported from Germany is due to some such methods to evade the American tariff. The proposed extension of the valuation tariffs to every item on the metal schedule would vastly increase the opportunity for such undervaluation frauds and seriously injure American industries by such unfair competition.

Paragraph 26 also strikes a blow at another American industry, the manufacture of surgical instruments. American manufacturers contend that a reduction of the duty on surgical instruments from 45 per cent to 25 per cent will destroy that industry in this country. Aside from the preservation of an American industry, there is another question entering into the American manufacture of surgical instruments that I believe should, of itself, deter Congress from taking any step that would in any way handicap or prevent the making of surgical instruments in the United States. I refer to the absolute necessity for surgical instruments in large quantities in times of war. This country should not be dependent upon a foreign nation for its supply of surgical instruments any more than for its supply of arms and ammunition. It is most essential to humanity that a nation like the United States should be able to manufacture its own instruments for the relief of the wounded and the suffering.

Like almost every other industry affected by the metal schedule, the greater cost of producing surgical instruments in the United States is due to the labor item. In Germany these instruments are made largely by the cottage plan. That is, the workmen have shops in their homes, where the women and children all join in the task.

Here is what Mr. Fairleigh S. Dickinson, of Becton, Dickinson & Co., who recently visited Germany to study the manufacture of surgical instruments there, had to say of the German methods:

I went right into the homes of the people and the homes of the manufacturers. One-half of the workmen employed in our factory live better than the principals of the business that I visited in Germany. I found men working 12 and 14 hours a day. I found their children working at the bench. Most of these goods are hand-made instruments, and a man takes them home to his family, and his wife makes the instruments; his 12 or 14 year old girl works at it; his boys work at it. They get up in the morning and they work before breakfast and they work after breakfast and after they have had their dinner.

Mr. Dickinson stated that the American wage cost is more than twice as much as the German labor cost.

Mr. Dickinson testified that he saw girls working in a factory in London for 10 shillings ($2.50) per week, doing work for which his firm paid, in New Jersey, $5 to $6 per week; and the hours were longer in London than in New Jersey.

The price of surgical instruments does not affect the average person, as the surgeon charges his fee for an operation without regard to the cost of the instruments he uses. It is important, however, that this industry should be continued in the United States at any cost, and that the wage earners engaged in that industry should be assured a compensation that will be creditable to this country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Wyoming in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Utah has now been speaking continuously in a rather hot room for over two hours. I think I can guess that it will take at least an hour and a half or two hours longer for him to complete his discussion. I therefore ask the Senator if it will be agreeable to him to discontinue now and let us go to the calendar and take up the pension bills? There are some six or eight, I believe, upon the calendar, which we might dispose of this afternoon. I do not understand that there is any other Senator who desires to speak to-day on this subject, and I know the Senator must be getting a little tired after his long effort.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing that we shall go to the calendar. I feel rather tired, having spoken now for over two hours.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Utah does not desire to go on, I know of no other Senator who expects to speak this afternoon. There was an impression on this side of the Chamber that the Senator would occupy the whole day.

Mr. SMOOT. I can go on if the Senator so desires.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator desires to discontinue his remarks until to-morrow, of course that will be satisfactory.

Mr. SMOOT. I prefer to wait until to-morrow, because it will not then take very long for me to conclude.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. SMOOT. I would prefer that the Senate should go to the calendar and take up the pension bills.

Mr. SIMMONS. That course is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. President, before the Senator from Utah leaves the floor, I desire to make a brief statement, to correct probably an erroneous impression growing out of a statement I made yesterday. I think it is highly proper in these tariff discussions that Senators should try to be as accurate in their statements as possible. On yesterday, when we were discussing the question of American exports of steel rails, I made a statement that was probably not exactly correct.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing to have that statement cut out of my speech, and I understood that the Senator desired that to be done. I have no objection to it. Whatever part of it the Senator desires to be taken out will be agreeable to me.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator can cut it out or not, as he pleases, but I simply want to put myself right about the statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. At the time I made the statement, Mr. President, we were discussing the question of exports of steel rails in this country and abroad. I made a statement, I think, to the effect that Europe was exporting as largely in proportion to production as we were. That is not correct. I had in mind at the time I made the statement not the general exportations of Europe to all countries, but I had in mind the exportations of Europe, especially of England, to the neutral markets of the world. The statement was substantially correct as to the exportations to neutral markets; that is to say, taking out the exports of European countries to other European countries where they have a freight advantage over us, which makes it practically prohibitory as against us—taking out of the account the dependencies and colonies of those European countries, which they largely dominate for one reason or another, and including only the neutral markets of the world, where there are equal freight rates and equal tariff conditions, then the statement would be substantially correct; that is, to those countries we export about ten and a half million dollars, while England exports about $4,000,000. It was that situation I had in mind at the time I made the statement. I referred to our exports and to their exports to the neutral markets of those countries. I do not desire to enter into any controversy about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the Senator understands that the $10,000,000 worth exported from this country includes all other countries, whether it be the English dependencies, the German dependencies, or any others.

Mr. SIMMONS. But we do not export any to speak of to Europe. We export some, but our exports, speaking generally, are almost entirely to the neutral markets of the world.

Mr. SMOOT. Canada is a very large purchaser of steel rails.

Mr. SIMMONS. I include that as one of the neutral markets of the world.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right.

Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now renew my request for the present consideration of the unobjected pension bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bills——

Mr. McCUMBER. I will put it in this way: I ask unanimous consent that we may consider during the remainder of the day the unobjected pension bills on the calendar.

Mr. BACON. And that no other bills be considered?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all; yes.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator desire to include in the consent that no other bills shall be considered?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will make it that way if the Senator so desires.

Mr. BACON. I do not desire that, but simply wish to know, in order that a controversy may not come up later.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply wish to ask that unobjected pension bills on the calendar may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that unobjected pension bills be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. I have no objection to those bills being considered, but I simply want to guard this question of unanimous consent. Of course that is something which ought to be entered into very formally. I think, if we proceed without objection to the consideration of bills, the Senator from North Dakota will accomplish his purpose rather than to have it appear to be a unanimous-consent agreement, when some question might come up as to whether anything else could be done.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from Georgia has any fear about the matter, I will then ask, in lieu of my other request, that we proceed to the consideration of the first general pension bill on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be the order.

Mr. LEA. Do I understand that under this agreement bills other than pension bills not objected to can come up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. BACON. But there is a special direction given to it, so that other bills can not be considered until the order of bills which the Senator from North Dakota asks may now be proceeded with has been exhausted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that certain bills are asked by the Senator from North Dakota to be proceeded with, and after that the Chair supposes the remainder of the calendar is subject to the action of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that after the bills are considered for which the Senator from North Dakota has asked consideration, then we shall proceed to the consideration of other bills on the calendar to which there is no objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that the Senator from North Dakota has preferred any request except as to pension bills.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all.

Mr. BACON. I desire to state that I have no objection to the Senate giving unanimous consent to taking up those bills alone. I did not ask for that limitation, because some Senators might have in view some other business which they desire to have transacted; I have none myself; and I have no objection to the action of the Senate for the remainder of the afternoon being limited to those bills if it is so desired. I do not know how long they will take. If they will reasonably occupy the remainder of the afternoon I can see no objection to them.

Mr. McCUMBER. I assume that they will take less than an hour. I did not ask that we consider only those bills, because I thought some Senators might possibly want to ask that some other matters be taken up; but if there is no objection by the Senator, I will now renew my request for unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills upon the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will report the first pension bill on the calendar.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 18712) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments. The first amendment was, at the top of page 2, to strike out:

The name of Henry E. D. Patee, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the committee. I ask this because upon further investigation, we think that the amendment should be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, after line 3, to strike out:

The name of Gabrielle Cooper, widow of George A. Cooper, late second lieutenant Company L, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month, and $2 per month additional for each of the officer's children during their minority, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment recommended by the committee. Further investigation and further evidence justify me in making this request.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twelve," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Frank A. Schaller, late of Company E, Seventy-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twelve," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Noah H. Stout, late of Company D, Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 22, to strike out:

The name of William W. Waters, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the Senate amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 3, line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twelve," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Louis T. Moseley, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of John Dardis, late of Company G, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. At the request of a number of Senators I ask unanimous consent that after we dispose of the unobjected pension bills on the calendar no other business be done on this legislative day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that after the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the calendar no other business be done on this legislative day. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is the request, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that after the consideration of unobjected pension bills no further business be transacted on this legislative day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 20586) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "month," to strike out "in lieu of that he is now receiving," and insert "without deduction or recoupment for former alleged erroneous payments or overpayments of pensions," so as to make the clause read:

The name of William Hill, late of Company E, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month without deduction or recoupment for former alleged erroneous payments or overpayments of pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 8, to strike out:

The name of John A. Ripley, late of Company C, One hundred and fifty-fifth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 22, after the name "Regenhardt," to strike out "jr." and insert "junior," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Louis Regenhardt, junior, late of Company K, Third Regiment, and Company B, Fifteenth Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 14, after the words "United States," to strike out "Volunteer," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Henry Counterman, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Jesse W. Kennedy, late of Company D, First Battalion Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 17, to strike out:

The name of James M. Blankenship, late of Company K, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "forty," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Dyer C. Elder, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 22, before the word "Artillery," to strike out "Light" and insert "Heavy," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Charles A. Brown, late of Company M, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 21, to strike out:

The name of Benjamin Simmons, late of Company K, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and Company B, Fourth Regiment New York Provisional Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of Elizabeth Buhr, widow of Mathias Buhr, late of Company A, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 22, to strike out:

The name of Edward T. Smith, late of Sixth Independent Battery, Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of George Peckham, late of Company I, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 14, I move to strike out lines 14 to 17, inclusive, an item for the same person and carrying the same amount having been included in a Senate omnibus pension bill which has already been signed by the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, after line 13, it is proposed to strike out:

The name of Albert P. Odell, late of Company C, One hundred and seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, at the top of page 15, to strike out:

The name of Judson D. Hammond, late of Company K, Twenty-second and Twenty-ninth Regiments Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 5, to strike out:

The name of Catherine D. Bauerly, former widow of George Vetter, late of Company D, Twentieth Regiment Michigin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "thirty," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Emil Wiegleb, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 1, after the word "Colored," to strike out "Troops" and insert "Volunteer Infantry," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Duncan D. Cameron, late of Capt. Gray's company, One hundred and eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company K, Ninth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 21, to strike out:

Susie C. Heilner, widow of Lewis C. Heilner, late rear admiral, United States Navy, $50 per month.

Samuel H. Craig, late of Troop D, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, $24 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LEA. I ask the Senator from North Dakota to withhold his motion for a moment, as I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 6612.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the fact that the unanimous-consent agreement adopted was that no other business should be transacted to-day after the disposition of the pension bills.

Mr. LEA. I asked the Chair if the agreement would prohibit the calling up of other matters afterwards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; but later the request for unanimous consent was modified, and as modified it was agreed to by the Senate.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota, that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 22, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 21, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, be with us in the onward march of civilization, lest we forget that nothing endures which is not in accordance with the laws which Thou hast ordained; lest history repeat itself in the downfall of our Republic. Make us, therefore, wise, just, pure, noble in our conceptions, that Thy will may be done in us, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPORTS ON THE COTTON CROP.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 14052, an act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to issue certain reports relating to cotton, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Do these Senate amendments make any change in the date of making the report from those dates in the bill as passed by the House?

Mr. LEVER. It does not change the date as to making the report on the condition, but it does change the date as to the acreage.

The motion of Mr. LEVER was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KENDALL, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for 12 days, on account of important business.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21969, designated as the Panama Canal bill. Pending that, I would like to propose a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. There are two contested sections to which it is understood we will return for more elaborate consideration. I want to submit a request, either in the House or in the committee, to limit the debate on these two sections. Ought that to be made in the House or in the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks in the House.

Mr. MANN. It could be made in either.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, too.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will make the request in the committee.

The motion of Mr. ADAMSON was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LLOYD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21969, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask what the parliamentary situation of this bill is now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois has an amendment pending.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire unanimous consent that the vote on that amendment may be passed until there is a quorum in the House. I do not desire to obstruct the business of the bill, but I would like very much to wait until there is a quorum before there is a vote taken on that amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to say that it is not our fault that there is difficulty about obtaining a quorum. Some of our committee have studied this question 15 years—studied the judicial system and the difference between running a government with a large population, prosperous at home, and running a machine shop and a business institution on the Canal Zone.

It may be material and it may not. A jury trial is already provided by existing law in the zone. There is plenty of time to amend and change that law before the canal is ever opened if our committee or Congress decides that it ought to be done. If gentlemen who are not on the committee, who have not studied the question so much, feel it their duty to drive their little contentions to that extreme that they will call for a quorum and suspend the business of the House, then gentlemen can do it on their own responsibility. We have already passed several sections of the bill, and we want to get on with this work, but I want to say now that it is our duty and desire to get through with this bill to-day. I do not want to say anything or put anything in the RECORD that would look like criticism of my colleagues who may not be present, or of where they go in their absence, but if the point of no quorum is made at any time when we are voting on important sections of this bill, I do not think I shall object to Members being sent for and being brought here. It will not be my fault. I object to this request.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend my amendment by substituting the word "either" in the latter part of the amendment in place of the word "any."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let us have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois to indicate exactly what his amendment is.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, my amendment applies to section 8, page 11, striking out the word "any" in lines 14 and 15.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman please state his amendment in the form in which he now presents it?

Mr. FOWLER. I have not the exact wording of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment will be found at the bottom of the second column on page 7804 of the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows.

Page 11, line 13, strike out the words "and a jury shall be had in any criminal case or civil case at law originating in said court on the demand of either party" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and in any civil or criminal case in said court a jury shall be afforded on the demand of any party."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend that by inserting the word "either" in place of the word "any."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FOWLER. But debate on the amendment to the amendment is not exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment has been agreed to, however.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 6, noes 36.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, what was the gentleman's point of order? He said he made the point of no quorum. I make the point of order that there is no such point of order—that there is no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum.

Mr. BARTLETT. But that is not a point of order that can be made.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman desires to be technical, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred Members present, a quorum. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 8, page 11, lines 13 and 14, to strike out the words "originating in said court."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is substantially the same amendment that we have just voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "originating in said court."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the point I make is that we have just voted down substantially the same amendment; not in the identical language, but it amounts to the same thing.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, it is entirely within the province of the House to vote down certain language and adopt other language.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, by striking out the words "originating in said court," will have the effect of giving a jury trial in this district court, which is to be a court of record, the general court of record in the zone in all cases, whether the cases originate in that court or whether they be transferred to the court by appeal from the magistrate's court. That is the common practice in every State in the Union.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, it is not the practice in New York to give a jury trial after a judge has decided the facts and the law. The gentleman is in error in a statement that that is so in every State in the Union.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I believe that that statement is generally correct; that it is the common practice; that when a case is appealed from a court not of record to a court of record the party has the right of trial by jury provided by the rules and practice of the court of record. There is no reason why a man who has happened to be prosecuted criminally in a magistrate's court and who then makes an appeal in order to get what he believes to be justice should be denied the privilege he would have had if he had been prosecuted originally in a higher court.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Would not the gentleman trust the judge of this appellate court with the duty of reviewing the action of the magistrate's court in cases arising in the magistrate's court that are very simple indeed?

Mr. BORLAND. Well, I will say to the gentleman they are not simple to the defendant who happens to be prosecuted.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Has not the gentleman confidence in the judge of the appellate court to make a fair review of the action of the court below?

Mr. BORLAND. I will say to the gentleman from New York that my confidence in a particular judge is not the question at issue, but it is a question whether an American citizen who happens to be prosecuted, as he believes, unjustly in a court not of record and has been given a right of appeal as he ought to a court of record ought not to enjoy there what he feels he ought to enjoy, a trial by jury. Any confidence of the gentleman in a particular judge is not the question at issue at all. It is a question of whether we will preserve there the American ideals which we think ought to apply to courts. Now, I am not a critic of courts. I am not one of those men going around the country demagoging about mistakes of courts. All courts are subject to mistakes, all courts are subject to personal bias, all courts are made up of judges who are merely human. There is only one safety, and that is a rule of law and not a rule of men. I do not care if we have the best men to administer affairs, we have fought for a thousand years for a government by law and not by virtue of a particular man who happens to occupy a particular office. [Applause.] And we have no more reason to trust a judge without a trial by jury when the case is appealed than if it were originally brought in his court.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman from Missouri have a trial by jury and an appeal from a police judge's court where a fine is imposed for a petty violation of the law?

Mr. BORLAND. No; we do not.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That is what you do in this case.

Mr. BORLAND. We have in Missouri, and you have in every State in the Union, a general principle that the police court organization of the municipality is only a quasi criminal court. It is not a criminal court, and if it were it could not exist. It is established to enforce certain by-laws or ordinances of the city, and therefore its proceedings are not particularly criminal. When they are appealed to the criminal court of the county they retain the form they originally had in the police court. I have never seen really the reason for distinction between a quasi criminal prosecution in a police court and a criminal prosecution in a justice of the peace court. Every city man knows that distinction exists.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no man in this House or elsewhere my reverence and love for the right of trial by jury. I am familiar with the history of the Anglo-Saxon people and the struggles by which they secured that inalienable and valuable right to themselves, and the means by which we have secured it; but I do not believe it is any violation of that sacred right, nor a violation of our duty to preserve it to everyone who shall be tried in an American court or in a court constituted by the legislators in the American Congress, that the petty offenses described in this bill, which are to be tried before a municipal or police judge, should be tried by a jury. The question has time and time again been before the courts, in which it has been determined that, even where men are tried in a police court and not only fined and imprisoned for days and months, that such imposition was a violation of the Constitution of the United States——

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him if, under the provisions of this bill, a corporation or a trust could not clandestinely have a suit brought against them in the magistrate's court and then take an appeal to the district court and have it tried by a judge who might be friendly to them and evade a jury trial?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know what trust would bother about a $300 case in a small court on the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. FOWLER. I asked particularly if that can be done.

Mr. BARTLETT. Where $300 was involved—I do not think they would bother themselves with a case involving $300. If it were $300,000,000 it might be different.

Mr. FOWLER. But could not they have the suit brought before the judge instead of giving the people the right to have a trial by jury if they wanted to do that?

Mr. BARTLETT. With all due respect to my friend from Illinois, I do not think there is anything in the suggestion, and therefore I will not undertake to answer it.

Mr. FOWLER. One other question: I will ask the gentleman if the Constitution does not provide that all civil actions, where the sum involved is below $20, shall be tried by a jury?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; it does not; it provides that all common lawsuits shall be tried by a jury.

Mr. FOWLER. Civil means common law.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no; we have common-law equity suits, and the Supreme Court has decided that we need not decide an equity suit by a jury.

Mr. FOWLER. If it be true, I will ask the gentleman if it will not contravene the Constitution upon that question when you force men to have suits tried up to $300 and deprive them of a right of trial by jury.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think so, nor do I give my own opinion in saying so, but simply give the decisions of the courts of the United States upon that subject.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for five minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to any extension of time, but I am willing for the gentleman from Illinois to ask his question.

Mr. CANNON. If the Constitution, according to the contention of my colleague from Illinois, guarantees a jury trial, what objection is there to this legislation; why do gentlemen disagree; because you can not repeal the Constitution by an act of Congress?

Mr. BORLAND. But the gentleman knows the Constitution does not apply to Panama.

Mr. CANNON. I was answering my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course, the gentleman from Illinois is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. BORLAND) there were—ayes 22, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit another amendment to section 8, as follows:

Line 20, page 10, strike out the words:
"The rules of practice in such district court shall be prescribed or amended by order of the President."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, lines 20 and 21, strike out the following:
"The rules of practice in such district court shall be prescribed or amended by order of the President."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this district court which is sought to be created by this section is one district court for the entire zone, and the salary of the judge is the same as the salary of the United States circuit judges in this country, which is perfectly proper, and an appeal is given from that court to the fifth circuit court at New Orleans, which is proper and ought to have been done before.

Now, that makes that United States district court down there practically a United States district court. It is clothed with admiralty powers, and so on. Incident to its local operation it has this appellate jurisdiction over the local magistrate's court, but it will probably have a more extensive jurisdiction than that. It will have the general civil and criminal jurisdiction that the United States court has, an admiralty jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction the same as the United States district court in this country. A court of that kind should make its own rules of practice, but they should be prescribed as near in harmony as possible with the rules of practice in other United States courts. There is no reason why the exception should be made in this case and the rules of practice prescribed by the President. There is probably no advantage by the Executive order making rules of order for that court. Whenever the judge wants the rules established he will have to draw them up and ask that the President promulgate them or he will have to go to the governor, or whatever you call him, and ask him to ask the President. In that case he will be a mere dependent of the governor. That is a thing that ought to be prevented. The courts ought to be free from a governor down there, at least. If the court is free from the President, or the President in his multiplicity of duties could possibly give any attention to it, there would be something in its favor. But everybody here knows that the President can not give the slightest personal attention to the matter. He must sign an Executive order sent him by some one in whom he has confidence.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Did not the gentleman a moment ago express some doubt as to the wisdom of the change down there and say he did not want to clothe him with too much power?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think the gentleman could have misunderstood what I said. I am not a professional or political critic of the courts.

Mr. HAMLIN. Still, I understood the gentleman to raise some suspicion that he might not always be fair. What objection have you now to letting the President prescribe the rules that should govern?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman might want to go so far as to regulate the judge. I am not a professional or political critic of the courts, but the courts are now operating under this plan I have advanced, and lawyers have been satisfied with it and have found that it worked satisfactorily. Now, nobody would get up and advocate that the governor of a State should prescribe the rules of the State courts.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But this governor is so far removed from us here. He is down at the zone, and it would be much better to allow the rules to be made here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, as we have often explained, we have not attempted to assimilate things down there to what is going on in the United States. The canal is as much a "sui generis" among other enterprises as a whale is among fishes or an elephant among animals. We have from the beginning consistently held the President responsible for everything of an administrative character down there. We did not think the people down there were ready to have put upon them the rules of the United States courts. The rules of the United States courts may ultimately be adopted. The only place we are trying to make the connection is on the appeal. We are arranging for them to be brought to the court of appeals at New Orleans in certain cases and carried to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move, on page 10, line 21, to strike out the word "President" and insert in lieu thereof the words "circuit court of appeals of the fifth circuit."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 21, strike out the word "President" and insert the words "circuit court of appeals of the fifth circuit."

Mr. BORLAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, there can be no possible objection by the chairman of the committee to that amendment. If he does not want to trust the judge down there to make his own rules, as is customary in courts and would be in the absence of any statutory provision, then let the rules be made by the judge of the court of appeals of the fifth circuit of the United States, and we can get away as far as we can from this government by Executive order.

Mr. ADAMSON. We appreciate the research and ability of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], but our committee has studied hard on this matter and we think it is as it ought to be, and we ask the Members to stand by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BORLAND. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] moves that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 10, line 24, by striking out, after the word "exceeding," the words "three hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, as is patent on its face, seeks to secure to the people, as nearly as possible, the right of trial by jury. There is no doubt in my mind but that the court which is established on the Canal Zone by this bill is a court for all intents and purposes under the laws of the United States. The territory belongs to the United States. It is territory in which the United States establishes a court. It is territory in which there is an appeal taken from the decisions of the court in that zone to a United States court at New Orleans, and I say, Mr. Chairman, that those people down there ought to have the right of trial by jury, in so far as it is possible to give them that right. The Constitution should follow the flag, and wherever it is unfolded to the breezes of heaven over territory owned by the United States, the Constitution should follow and be coextensive with the flag. Who will deny this proposition?

I stand here for the honest, sturdy poor, and claim for them the same rights that are claimed in the provisions of this bill for other men—men who can go in the court on business that involves a sum greater than $300. No discrimination should be made against the citizen of small means. His rights are more dependent than those of the man of means.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment ought to pass. I do not desire to take up the time of the committee needlessly, but I want to emphasize the necessity of a strict adherence to the provisions of the Constitution—and especially in this case—the provision that gives to everyone that is charged with a criminal offense the right to a trial by jury, and in all common-law cases a right to trial by jury in cases where the sum involved exceeds the amount of $20. To give these rights to the rich and deny them to the poor is an unjust discrimination which no one, in my opinion, can afford to sanction.

In reply to my distinguished colleague, the ex-Speaker [Mr. CANNON], when he intimates that this court down here is not under the jurisdiction of the United States and ought not to be termed a court of United States jurisdiction, I wish to say that the appeal power in this bill confers upon that court all the rights of having the cases of the litigants tried in the courts of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. In the first place, the gentleman in quoting me quotes me as saying something that I never said.

Mr. FOWLER. I beg the pardon of the gentleman, then.

Mr. CANNON. I am standing by this bill. That is all.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, if the gentleman does not contend that this court is not under the jurisdiction of the United States and is not a United States court, I beg his pardon and desire to withdraw my expressions in regard to him. But I so understood him, and I think the Members of the House so understood him. At least a Member who was on the floor of this House took up the question and said that the Constitution did not follow the flag in respect to the courts established on the zone. I say that the Constitution ought to follow the flag in all territory owned by the United States over which the American flag floats, it matters not what territory it is or who its inhabitants are. Equal and exact justice should be dealt out to all and special privileges to none. The Declaration of Independence, the Stars and Stripes, and the Constitution are born of the same spirit, and the supremacy of one necessarily implies the presence of the other two. Who will dare to separate them in the Canal Zone? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. My esteemed colleague from Illinois is always strenuous, and I think he intends to be fair. Now, what I did say was—and I repeat it—that if the gentleman's contention be true, that on the Canal Zone the Constitution guarantees everybody there a jury trial, then any legislation that we might make could not repeal the Constitution. That is what I said, and I think the gentleman is a good enough lawyer to admit that I am correct. Now, then, so far as the Canal Zone is concerned, we have it for all practical purposes to operate this canal, and in operating this canal we could make it, if we desired it, a military reservation.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. One moment. We could make it a military reservation just as much as any Army post is a military reservation. We have plenary power in that matter, and in my own judgment practically it ought to be a military reservation, considering the semisavages on land adjacent to it—not all of them, but a very respectable number, speaking with the highest respect of the population down there—and on the sea all the people of the world have a very valuable canal costing $400,000,000, with its locks, that might be dynamited. Practically, I say, it ought to be a military reservation for the preservation of the canal and the proper operation of the canal.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask if it is not preferable to establish a military government there than to undertake to establish a civil court and undertake to deprive men of the right of trial by jury?

Mr. CANNON. Well, practically, reading this bill, I think it goes a long way toward making this a military reservation. But it does provide for the litigation of minor troubles that may come there, and does provide for a court. If you were to exclude the courts entirely from the Zone, as we could, I think we should establish them there, except in certain excepted cases. We need as much education touching our newly acquired possessions and touching the Canal Zone as they need. You can not measure their corn in the half-bushel or in the bushel as you would with your constituency, and give the same measure in the newly-acquired possessions as you would at home. Your constituency is competent for self-government.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not then strike out the provision about trial by jury entirely?

Mr. CANNON. Well, that is a matter for the gentleman to consider and voice his opinion upon. But, following my judgment, I believe this bill is fairly well drawn in the form in which it has been reported by the committee to the House.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you not in favor of giving the poor people the right of trial by jury the same as the rich people?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, as to the poor people and the right of trial by jury, you might get out a search warrant in that zone, and it would be questionable if you could find poor people or rich people enough to try other poor or rich people. Practically that zone will be and ought to be a military reservation.

Mr. FOWLER. Then why do you want a court there at all?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were 2 ayes and 50 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the bill provides that when the district judge is absent the President may designate a circuit or district judge of the United States to go to the zone. The bill having provided that the district judge may be absent six weeks during the year, which provides for an annual absence, and then under the provisions of this bill there would be a junketing trip for some district judge or judge of the circuit court to go to the zone, with mileage and per diem paid, every year. Why would it not be sufficient to do what was proposed in the previous bill—to allow the President to designate some one there to act as judge when the district judge is absent or incapacitated? What object is there in providing a trip with mileage and per diem every year for some United States district or circuit court judge to make a trip to the Canal Zone?

Mr. ADAMSON. In answer to that I want to say that we are trying to establish a court there of high character with a judge of great ability. The President might not be able to pick up a volunteer suited to the purpose. The expense of the trip down there is small in comparison with the danger of error in the dispensation of justice in admiralty and equity courts during the interim. It was thought that the President could always find one judge of the United States court who would not mind taking the trip.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that, especially when he has his mileage and per diem.

Mr. ADAMSON. Whether it is a junketing trip or not I have nothing to say. I want the judge to have his traveling expenses and not junketing expenses, if I know what that word means. If he gets there all right and right side up, it is all right to hold the court until the regular judge returns and then return to the United States, and he ought to have his traveling expenses, which are not overmuch to the zone and back, and his per diem is no more than he gets when he leaves home here.

Mr. MANN. The bill does not provide for traveling expenses, but for mileage and per diem allowed by law to district judges when away from home. It is a considerable distance to the Panama Canal and amounts to a considerable sum. Why should a district judge go there on mileage when his expenses of going there would amount to nothing? If there is anybody on the Canal Zone who is qualified to try a case before a district judge it would be easy to find some one when it was necessary—and it would not be necessary once in 10 years—to hold court in the absence of the district judge.

Mr. ADAMSON. If it were possible to find a man on the zone to take the place of a higher judge, it would then be incongruous to pick up an outsider and appoint him a judge pro tempore for six weeks to hold court when we have judges here who are at leisure and could go to the zone and discharge the duties with ability?

Mr. MANN. That is what we have provided for recently in the district of Porto Rico. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, on page 12, lines 13 and 14, the words "any circuit or district judge of the United States" and insert in lieu thereof "a judge pro tempore."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RAINEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6603. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the board of education of New Hanover County, N. C., portion of marine-hospital reservation not needed for marine-hospital purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6161) to authorize the Great Northern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Yellowstone River, in the county of Dawson, State of Montana.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 21590. An act to authorize levee and drainage district No. 25, of Dunklin County, Mo., to construct and maintain a levee across a branch or cut-off of St. Francis River and to construct and maintain a levee across the mouth of the Varney River, in the State of Missouri.

PANAMA CANAL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the records of the existing courts and all causes, proceedings, and criminal prosecutions pending therein as shown by the dockets thereof, except as herein otherwise provided, shall immediately upon the organization of the courts created by this act be transferred to such new courts having jurisdiction of like cases, be entered upon the dockets thereof, and proceed as if they had originally been brought therein, whereupon all the existing courts, except the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone, shall cease to exist. The President may continue the Supreme Court of the Canal Zone and retain the judges thereof in office for such time as to him may seem necessary to determine finally any causes and proceedings which may be pending therein. All laws of the Canal Zone imposing duties upon the clerks or ministerial officers of existing courts shall apply and impose such duties upon the clerks and ministerial officers of the new courts created by this act having jurisdiction of like cases, matters, and duties.

All existing laws in the Canal Zone governing practice and procedure in existing courts shall be applicable and adapted to the practice and procedure in the new courts.

The Circuit Court of Appeals of the Fifth Circuit of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, modify, reverse, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the District Court of the Canal Zone and to render such judgments as in the opinion of the said appellate court should have been rendered by the trial court in all actions and proceedings in which the Constitution, or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States, is involved and a right thereunder denied, and in cases in which the value in controversy exceeds $1,000, or which involves the title or possession of real estate exceeding in value the sum of $1,000, to be ascertained by the oath of either party, or by other competent evidence, and also in criminal causes wherein the offense charged is punishable as a felony. And such appellate jurisdiction may be exercised by said circuit court of appeals in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure as nearly as practicable as is done in reviewing the final judgment and decrees of the district courts of the United States.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I have a committee amendment:

Amend by inserting in line 5, page 14, between the word "jurisdiction" and the word "may," the following:
"Subject to the right of review by appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases authorized by law."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 5, insert after the word "jurisdiction" the following:
"Subject to the right of review by appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases authorized by law."

Mr. ADAMSON. We thought, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to provide that they might go to the Supreme Court by appeal.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman means by appeal from the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. ADAMSON. Circuit court of appeals; in any way now authorized by law.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman think his amendment ought to come in after the words "United States"?

Mr. ADAMSON. It will now read, "and such appellate jurisdiction subject to the right of review by or appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases authorized by law." I think it is in the right place.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I submit an amendment to section 9, page 13, to strike out lines 13, 14, and 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, strike out the paragraph including lines 13, 14, and 15.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman these words are as follows:

All existing laws in the Canal Zone governing practice and procedure in existing courts shall be applicable and adapted to the practice and procedure in the new courts.

The new courts will consist only of the district court, which will be the nisi prius court and the magistrate's court. The old courts consisted of district courts, practically a justice of the peace court, and the circuit court and supreme court. I am not at all sure—I expect the chairman of the committee is—just exactly how the rules could be applied to the new courts.

Mr. ADAMSON. They are not rules, but there are a great many existing statutes of procedure in particular cases. They are not repealed and the jurisdiction has been conferred on the new courts. We simply provide in these lines which the gentleman moves to strike out that these statutory provisions as to the procedure shall be adapted as applicable to the new courts. Where it can not be done they will have to be ignored.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no doubt the gentleman will be heard in opposition to it, but that is not the point I want to make. The gentleman has put into the bill and defended with ability a provision to have the President prescribe the rules of procedure in these courts. Here is a provision in the same bill that requires the existing law governing practice and procedure to continue in the new courts. Now, if these two can be construed together at all, it means that the executive act of the President can set aside an act of Congress; that is, this act making the rules and practice and procedure as now determined by existing law apply to the new courts. Either the new courts are going to have rules and practice prescribed by order of the President by executive order, or they are going to adopt, as far as they can do so, rules applicable to the old courts.

If the President has full power by this bill to prescribe by Executive order the rules of practice and procedure, there is absolutely no necessity for these words.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say that we have not authorized the President to enact any statutory procedure at all. It is only the rules of court that the President is authorized to establish. These are existing statutes already on the zone affecting the material mode of procedure in certain cases.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. I call the attention of the gentleman to page 10, line 20, where it says:

The rules of practice in such district court shall be prescribed or amended by order of the President.

And to the words on page 13, line 13—

All existing laws in the Canal Zone governing practice and procedure in existing court, etc.

Can there be any difference in the legal contemplation of those words?

Mr. ADAMSON. The rules of decorum are the rules of the court. They do not depend upon statute, and may be made by the judge.

Mr. BORLAND. Then the gentleman should have said rules of decorum; but it says rules of practice, and if the rules of practice are now fixed by existing law and are to be continued, then the Executive order of the President can not repeal or put in operation an act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Here is a provision that authorizes the existing laws governing the rules of practice to be adapted to the procedure in the new courts. They are adapted to the procedure in the new courts.

Mr. BORLAND. I take it; yes.

Mr. MANN. But we have already provided in the law that the existing law shall not be changed except by Congress, and unless you have this provision in the bill they can not adapt the present laws governing the rules of practice to the new courts at all.

Mr. BORLAND. Then the gentleman thinks that the general power conferred on the President is limited to a mere change of name or date in the existing rules of practice?

Mr. MANN. I did not say that. I think he has the power to adapt the existing laws governing the rules of practice to the new courts.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; and he would have that general power under the words on page 10, would he not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Further than that he could not change the law where it is governed by law.

Mr. BORLAND. How far does his power go under the words on page 10?

Mr. MANN. To the extent of making rules of practice that are not affected by existing law, or to adapting the rules of practice governed by existing law to the new courts.

Mr. BORLAND. Why would it not be better for the courts themselves to do that?

Mr. MANN. The courts on the zone up to date have been created by order of the President. The laws providing for the Canal Zone have been created by order of the President. Everything on the zone by way of government has been done by order of the President.

Mr. SABATH. On the recommendation of the judges there largely.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, before we leave the sections relating to the jurisdiction of the courts and the practice in them, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the proceeding provided in section 5 is to be governed by these sections relating to the jurisdiction of and the practice in the courts. I refer to the part of the bill found at the bottom of page 6 and at the top of page 7, providing for the trial of claims for damages to vessels and the manner of settlement of those claims. The bill contains quite an unusual provision, it seems to me, for it says that in case of disagreement suit may be brought in the district court of the Canal Zone against the governor of the Panama Canal, and that the hearing and disposition of such cases shall be expedited and that judgment shall be immediately paid off without proceeding to execution. Is it intended that there shall be no appeal; that neither side to a controversy shall have the right of appeal?

Mr. MANN. That is not what it says.

Mr. ADAMSON. We have not yet reached that. We have agreed to go back to that proposition. I answer generally that the rules of court will apply to the procedure and to everything that fits, if the House adopts it. The only two differences entailed there will be the expedition and no appeal, but the House has not agreed to that.

Mr. MANN. There is no provision that there shall be no appeal.

Mr. ADAMSON. When we come to that I will say to the gentleman we will be very glad to discuss it with him.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That after the Panama Canal shall have been completed and opened for operation it shall not be lawful for any person to go, be, or remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone without the permission of the governor of the Panama Canal, except United States soldiers, sailors, and marines and their officers, and the employees operating the Panama Canal. Any person violating this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction in the magistrate's court of the subdivision in which the violation occurred shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding a year, or both, in the discretion of the court. It shall be unlawful for any person, by any means or in any way, to injure or obstruct, or attempt to injure or obstruct, any part of the Panama Canal or the locks thereof or the approaches thereto. Any person violating this provision shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction in the district court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or both, in the discretion of the court. If the act shall cause the death of any person within a year and a day thereafter, the person so convicted shall be guilty of murder and shall be punished accordingly.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 10—to strike out all of said section down to the word "court," in line 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, strike out all of section 10, including lines 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, to and including the word "court."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, it is not my custom to take up much time in five minutes' debate in legislation, and it never has been, and I hope it never will be, my custom to become a general critic of legislation. I do not think I have ever indulged in general criticism of legislation.

Mr. MANN. We will be very glad to yield the palm to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. But I can not pass over at this time this provision, which I regard as the most un-American provision in the bill. This provision is overshadowed in its general importance, I am sorry to say, by the only burning question that is in the bill, and that is the right to fix tolls, and whether American commerce shall be throttled in its effort to seek passage through that canal.

That great question, in the minds of Members of Congress, has overshadowed these minor questions, which are themselves of great importance, so far as the control of the canal is concerned. Now, this provision says, in plain English, that after the opening of the canal it shall be a crime to be upon the Canal Zone without permission from the governor. We can talk about the right of trial by jury, and all that sort of thing, but this provisions says it is a crime even to be there. Trial by jury is supposed to be instituted to protect a man from the oppression of those in office; but what on earth is the good of protecting them from oppression of those in office when the mere fact one is on the zone, whether there is trial by jury or not, constitutes a crime? It is said, if this provision is adopted and if the chairman of the committee is correct, everybody who goes to the zone will have general leave to go there by some sort of proclamation, but when particular fellows go they are to be picked out as criminals and brought under this provision.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman from Missouri say with any authority that we are permitting this provision to be put into the law to be violated constantly there?

Mr. BORLAND. Of course the chairman of the committee will answer me, and I am not going to ask him to take up my time at this time, but he said that if anybody had any lawful right to go there, there was no reason why he should not go there.

Mr. FOSTER. He meant there would be no difficulty in securing permission.

Mr. BORLAND. He stated that if people landed from ships they would not have to have a personal permission, but some kind of a general proclamation would permit them to land. I do not know how that is going to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I object; I will be compelled to object in all cases in order to avoid the consumption of too much time. We are going to run this under the five-minute limit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reply to the gentleman's speech, under the five-minute rule. The United States is not trying to institute a palladium of liberty on the Canal Zone, but it is trying to run a canal. We have upon that Canal Zone a great workshop and all the appurtenances thereto. If a factory was going to spend millions of dollars it would acquire the necessary land, purchase everything that is needed, and then it would put up a notice saying that persons without any business should keep out of there. We do not want our expenditure of $400,000,000 in workshops, locks, and so forth, broken up. Internationally we have protected that by treaty, and no nation would blow it up or fire on that. Now, we are charged with the duty of protecting them against individuals. It is proper to say that outside of the American employees, soldiers, and sailors and their officers nobody else must be there without permission. If people are there who are lawfully there the policeman will find it out in some way, and there will not be much trouble about their identification. If a man is uneasy about his identification he can easily have a card sticking in his pocket to show what he is doing there.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will permit, that applies very well to the people who are on the zone, but let us take a concrete case of a man who buys a ticket from New York to Panama and gets off the boat without permission of the Government. He subjects himself to this fine.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is not a particle of trouble about that. Provision can be easily made to identify every passenger, and there will be no trouble about that at all. In the first place, it is simply a question of identification between the person and the officer who challenges him. In the second place, if he can not satisfy the officer he will have to satisfy the magistrate's court. That is all. There will not be a case in 10,000 of a man being compelled to go before a magistrate unless he is rightfully carried there, and we think our safety demands that we should exclude every person from that zone except whom we want there.

Mr. FOSTER. The intention of the committee is that the Government shall have control of it on the zone, and that is all that is intended by it.

Mr. ADAMSON. The governor of the zone there will fix it so as to permit those who ought to be there to go there and to keep out those who ought not to be there.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I favor the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to strike out this provision of the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I only have five minutes, and the gentleman from Georgia has given notice that we can not have any more time under the five-minute rule. The provision of the bill is——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate on this amendment is exhausted unless the gentleman wants to move to strike out the last word. There has been five minutes' debate on this pro and con, and I make the point of order that debate is exhausted. The gentleman ought to comply with the rule if he does not——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can enforce the rule if he desires to do so. That is the rule——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. No; I will not; the gentleman was discourteous, and I will not ask any further time.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman was more discourteous to me than I was to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BORLAND) there were—ayes 57, noes 65.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment. In section 10, line 14, after the word "except." insert "citizens of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 14, insert after the word "except" the words "citizens of the United States."

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment, and I will call the attention of the committee to the bill as it would read if this amendment were adopted.

Without the permission of the governor of the Panama Canal except citizens of the United States, United States soldiers, sailors, etc.

Mr. Chairman, this, so far as I know, is the first proposition in the history of this country where we are not going to permit citizens of the United States to travel freely throughout the domain of the United States. The Panama Canal belongs to the United States, and whenever a citizen of the United States is prohibited from going upon that Canal Zone you have prohibited a citizen from traveling as he may please throughout the United States. For instance, if I took a boat at Galveston, with a ticket to Colon or to any other portion of the Canal Zone, upon landing I subject myself immediately to this fine.

Now, the reply of the gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the committee, is that the rules and regulations and proclamations down there will not apply to a citizen like myself or any Member of this body, but I submit it is a dangerous precedent to place in the hands of any one man an opportunity to prosecute and to imprison a citizen for going upon the Canal Zone without any intention to do any harm, without intention other than to prospect and conduct a business for which he went, simply because he did not happen to have permission of the governor of the Canal Zone. The reply, I know, of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] and others is that this is virtually a military reservation down there and is conducted upon a military basis. Well, Mr. Chairman, we have adopted court rules different from those of military courts. We have adopted a civil government down there, and it does seem to me that whenever we provide that no foreigner shall place foot upon that Canal Zone we have given all the protection to the Canal Zone that is necessary, because if you are an American citizen the police authorities there ought to be sufficient to protect the zone against an American citizen, and it does not seem to me it is Americanism for Congress to pass a provision in this bill prohibiting absolutely any citizen of the United States from making a trip to the Canal Zone of his own sweet will.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I wish to say that when the chairman of the committee was discussing this matter the other day I indicated that while I was willing to be bound by the action of the committee in this matter, a committee of which I am a member, I was not clear or satisfied in my own mind with reference to the provision. But I think a moment's reflection will satisfy the gentleman from Texas that we could not possibly permit of any such discrimination against the citizens of all other countries, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. His amendment proposes to permit the citizens of the United States to have the liberty of the zone and to prohibit citizens of other countries. I wish to say that would be a violation of treaty rights.

Mr. GARNER. No more than we could say that no citizen of another country can land upon American soil.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What would Panama say?

Mr. GARNER. I am not asking what Panama would say, but I say we would have the right to guard the immigration to that zone, but we ought not to have the right to prohibit all American citizens from going there of their own sweet will.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I have time and again denied the impeachment and disclaimed the intimation that we were running the Canal Zone as a military reservation, but the Government is running it as a Government affair for military purposes in time of war and commerce in time of peace. We have a great workshop there costing millions of dollars—it may be approximating a billion dollars. The machinery of those locks is such that the least accident would render them useless. We have those there who are responsible for their safe construction and who will be responsible for the safe operation of them. If we provide for Americans only, we flatly violate the treaty, to start with, which demands equality as to conditions of commerce, charges of traffic, and otherwise—certainly otherwise, if not one of the first two propositions.

In the second place, the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] would require a man to carry along his certificate of birth and all of his naturalization papers, and put him to a great deal more trouble than pulling a card out of his pocket in order to show that he has the permission of the Government. Furthermore, our naturalization laws are so liberal, so broad, in our invitation to all the world not only to come here and seek refuge in the palladium of liberty and bring the offscouring of the earth upon us, that we might say that some American citizens sometime might get to be bad men. The safest rule to follow is the rule which the ship has to follow. But when a ship comes there we are going to take charge of it. We are not going to allow its own officers to run it through the canal. We are going to have our own lock managers to carry it through. We do not want to abridge the privileges of any American citizen to go down there and enjoy himself, but it is easy for the officers of that zone to identify and give permission to all those who may be there.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the great commercial center of the Mississippi Valley, the city of St. Louis, which in part I have the honor to represent in this House, has a general and a special interest in the opening and operation of the Panama Canal; a general interest with all Americans in this great avenue of commerce and the benefit it will bring to us all; a special interest, because we believe that as the Panama Canal is completed and thrown open to the commerce of the world the thoughts of our Nation, its people, and Congress will be turned to the doing of another big job for commerce and prosperity, to wit, Lakes-to-the-Gulf deep waterway. The opening of the Panama Canal makes this project the more needed and necessary. The Mississippi Valley should and must be placed on a parity with the seaboard by corresponding development of the Mississippi River and its tributaries as parts of a comprehensive system of commercial navigation. The above statement is a part of the platform of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf Deep Waterways Association, as adopted in their convention at Chicago October 12, 13, and 14, 1911, and on this platform we shall continue to wage battle till victory is ours. And this association at its convention in Chicago declared its position upon the question at issue in this bill, to wit, Shall tolls be imposed upon American vessels doing coastwise business of this country? Upon that proposition it said:

> The policy of free waterways is fundamental with the American people, and hence this association declares that this principle should be extended to our coastwise trade through the Panama Canal.

Mr. Chairman, with that declaration I am in hearty sympathy and shall vote for the Doremus substitute for section 5. American money and American enterprise built this canal, and we must not lose sight of the fact that the American people own it and have the perfect right to reserve to themselves some special benefits for this great outlay. The following editorial from the Washington Post is a brief statement of the situation:

A FREE CANAL FOR OUR SHIPS.

American ships carrying American goods are free to visit any port over which the American flag flies without any tax or toll whatever. Whether in coast harbors, in the rivers, or on the Great Lakes, it is the policy of the American people to keep their domestic commerce free of tax and in the hands of American citizens.

But it is now proposed by some Members of the House of Representatives to change this policy, so far as the Panama Canal is concerned. It is proposed that American ships shall not pass through that American canal on the way from one American coast to the other without paying a tax.

There are two "reasons" given for this curious proposal—first, that the United States is bound to tax its own ships under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and, second, that American shipping through the canal benefits only the two coasts, and if passed free would throw that much of the burden of maintaining the canal upon the people of the interior. It is held, in other words, that if American ships are passed free they will be receiving a subsidy.

The first "reason" has been shown to be utterly baseless. There is nothing in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty which even by implication requires the United States to tax its own domestic shipping. This commerce is confined solely to American ships. Foreign ships are prohibited by law from entering our coastwise trade. How, then, are foreign ships discriminated against if American ships are exempted from tolls? No foreign country taxes its domestic shipping for the use of its own harbors or canals. On the contrary, all foreign maritime nations repay to their own ships the tolls through the Suez Canal.

The second "reason" is as worthless as the first. If free passage through the Panama Canal is a subsidy, then the free use of the Great Lake ports, the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf ports, and river ports is also a subsidy. If the people of the interior should not pay for the free Panama Canal, then the people of New York and California should not pay for the improvement of the Mississippi River.

Why was the Panama Canal constructed? Was it not for the purpose of developing the common commerce as well as providing for the common defense? The freight going through the canal will originate in every part of the country and it will flow to every part. The free canal will operate as a regulator of railroad rates throughout the United States. "When we provide, in effect, the rate of freight between the two oceans," said Mr. MANN, in the House debate, "we will have determined for all time a regulator of railroad rates in the United States, the beneficial effect of which will go into every hamlet, every village, every city, every home in the land."

It is impossible to believe that Congress will provide for the freedom of American shipping in every place under the American flag except through the Panama Canal, the greatest trade artery in the world.

Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard a moment upon the other phase of this question, the one made so necessary by the near completion of the canal. That is for the Congress to authorize and provide the means for making the Mississippi River navigable for ocean steamers, and in connection therewith to raise the levees of the river to prevent floods and overflows such as we have been witnessing of late. If this is done, it will enable our people of the Mississippi to send their goods, wares, and merchandise by water from St. Louis and other points down the "Father of Waters," on through the Panama Canal, and to the marts of the world. That is what we want and what we will have.

Mr. Chairman, I have a bill, H. R. 24191, pending in this House to provide the money—$30,000,000—for raising the levees, and thereby protecting millions of acres of farm land and greatly increasing our productions. The raising of the levees is practicable, and the Government of the United States ought to do it. I submit the following letter from Gen. Bixby and an editorial from the Washington Herald as evidence thereof:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, May 16, 1912.

Hon. L. C. DYER,
United States House of Representatives.

SIR: 1. Referring to your letter, dated April 17, 1912, inclosing one dated April 15, 1912, from Robert E. Lee, secretary St. Louis Sales Managers' Association of St. Louis, Mo., relative to raising the Mississippi River levees and urging the introduction of a bill in Congress for the purpose, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a report on the subject dated May 3, 1912, by Col. C. McD. Townsend, Corps of Engineers, president of the Mississippi River Commission.

2. Paragraph 4 of Col. Townsend's report shows that the Mississippi River Commission can at any time raise the standard grade to any height thought by them necessary; but to raise the levees themselves up to that grade is quite another question, since it depends mainly on how fast the Federal Government and the various States and local organizations provide money therefor and upon the limitations placed by these governments or organizations upon the use of such money.

3. For many years past the instructions of Congress to the Mississippi River Commission restricts their levee construction to merely what is necessary to improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce and does not provide for independent protection of land from overflow.

4. As the increase in value of land due to an efficient levee protection is amply sufficient in the end to pay for cost of same, it would seem proper for legislation to take the shape of a loan of moneys from the Federal Government to each State directly interested, to be repaid gradually. (See pp. 8, 9, 12, 14, and 24 of H. Doc. No. 549, 62d Cong., 2d sess., herewith; see also last 2 lines, par. 4, p. 27, of Natl. Waterways Com. Rept., S. Doc. 469, 62d Cong., 2d sess.)

5. The inclosures received with your letter are returned herewith as requested.

Very respectfully,

W. H. BIXBY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

[Second indorsement.]

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
St. Louis, Mo., May 3, 1912.

1. Respectfully returned to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

2. As to the height of levees along the lower Mississippi, it can be said that the Mississippi River Commission has never adopted what it considered a final grade, the grades established from time to time being only tentative and being restricted by the amount of funds appropriated and the needs of such funds on other improvement work.

3. There is probably no question but what the levees in most instances need enlargement and raising, and much valuable data as to final grade will be obtained from the present flood; it can not be stated at this time what the grade will eventually be or just how many feet the levees ought to be raised.

4. It is not thought that the enactment of any new legislation is required to empower the commission to raise the levees to any grade deemed desirable. What is needed is appropriations of sufficient amount and with sufficient regularity to permit the work to be done.

C. McD. TOWNSEND,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers, United States Army,
President Mississippi River Commission.

NATIONAL CONTROL OF LEVEES.

The South is still advocating the maintenance of the Mississippi levees by the Federal Government. She points out the nationality of the interests involved; she declares the great Father of Waters belongs to the Nation. For more than a century the valley States have been fighting their own battles—for the most part inadequately—against the great spring floods, and she believes the time is now at hand for the National Government to aid in her unceasing struggle.

Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, points out the fact that national levee control is not a new idea. He writes:

"At a convention held in Memphis in 1845, with 600 delegates, representing Pennsylvania, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, as well as the States of the South, and presided over by John C. Calhoun, the position was taken that the Mississippi River and its control was a national and not a State problem. Calhoun, with that broad vision which characterized his statesmanship, took the ground that what individual enterprise could effect alone should be left to individual enterprise; that what a State and individuals could achieve together was to be left to their joint action; but what neither of these, separately or conjointly, could accomplish was the province of the Federal Government, and this, in his opinion, was the situation as to the Mississippi River."

Although the Mississippi River drains fully 27 States, only 2 comparatively small States have to bear the brunt of the accumulated floods of the great river. This burden should not be borne by Louisiana and Mississippi alone. All the valley States should aid, and, in a larger sense, the Nation itself should lend the strong arm of its resources to the work. The comprehensive projects of waterway improvement are national, and, by the same logic, the slow and arduous task of levee improvement should be national.

Mr. Chairman, the people of my district are thoroughly in earnest that Congress should take hold of the deepening of the Mississippi River and the raising of its levees. I have received many letters commending the bill introduced by me. The following letter from the president of the Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., of my city, is a sample of these many letters that I have received in regard thereto, as follows:

RICE-STIX DRY GOODS CO.,
St. Louis, Mo., May 10, 1912.

Hon. L. C. DYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DYER: I see it reported in the press that you have introduced a bill in Congress providing for Government construction and control of the levees in the lower Mississippi Valley.

I am very glad to see that you have taken the initiative in this most worthy and important work. The whole country is interested directly and indirectly in this land.

I am sending you under separate cover marked copy of the New York Journal of Commerce regarding my interview with a number of New England manufacturers, as follows:

"Elias Michael, of the Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., yesterday expressed the following opinion on the Mississippi floods and the cotton situation:

"'There was a meeting the early part of the week in Washington, which I attended, regarding steps to be taken to repair the levee recently washed away in the lower Mississippi Valley in time to prevent another overflow when the usual June rise of the Mississippi occurs, occasioned by the melting snows in the mountain districts.

"'The country now inundated is the main source of supply of long-staple cotton. The rich bottom lands of Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, in the so-called Delta, produce a very large portion of the entire crop of long-staple cotton, and it seems to me that the manufacturers of cotton goods, particularly those of New England, where most of this staple cotton is used, are very much interested in seeing that something is promptly done to enable the farmers in this region to plant and raise a cotton crop.

"'The cotton manufacturers have had experience of what scarcity of cotton means. It is a situation that demands serious consideration, for if steps are not taken promptly and protection provided so that these valuable cotton lands can be redeemed in time to make a crop, the scarcity of long-staple cotton will be felt by the entire country, and in no direction can the Government do better work for the general good than the conservation of these rich and fertile lands.

"'Heavy rains and overflows have so soaked the earth that it can not absorb any more moisture, and when the snow water from the mountains reaches the lower Mississippi Valley (it generally occurs in June), and the levees are not repaired by that time, there will be no cotton raised in this section of the most valuable cotton lands of the country.'"

I urged them to have their Senators and Representatives support the measure then pending for making an appropriation immediately available for the purpose of repairing the levees. These New England manufacturers took it up with their Senators, and I understand the movement received hearty indorsement and support.

I mention this because it is good to know one's possible allies and friends in a measure such as you have undertaken, and I believe you can count upon the hearty cooperation of the New England Senators and Representatives, as well as the support of manufacturers in New York, Pennsylvania, and other sections where they use long-staple cotton.

Outside of the direct interest, the movement for the Government to undertake the repair of these levees has great merit. The United States Government controls the river, and individual effort has been unable to cope with the situation.

The conservation of this rich land is strictly a Government duty, as its crop is the means of extended relations between this country and the balance of the world.

The Mississippi River is the drain for 30 States. This immense valley or watershed is drained through the Mississippi, and all the States are interested to see that these overflows do not cause death, destruction, and disaster to this section of the country.

Yours, very truly,

ELIAS MICHAEL.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to rise and say that it seems to me that this provision as it stands is a rather strange provision, that makes a man unconsciously, possibly, guilty of committing an offense by merely being somewhere in a zone 10 miles wide and 40 or 50 miles long.

Now, I believe that the amendment offered by my colleague from Texas [Mr. GARNER] would be subject to the objection of making a manifest distinction between our own citizens and other people, who might be equally innocent with them, and while relieving our own citizens of unconscious criminality leave an innocent foreigner in the toils; but I believe that this committee might be willing to accept the amendment that I have to offer in lieu of the amendment offered by my colleague from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. I move as a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas the following: In line 13, strike out the words "without the permission of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "contrary to the rules prescribed by," referring to the governor of the Panama Canal.

I understand that a Government workshop may have, properly, notices posted to keep out of this place and that place, and this would enable the Government to reach the purpose of the framers of this bill—that is, to protect its property—but would enable the Government and require the Government to prescribe definite rules of which the people would be able to take notice. There would be some means of a man having some consciousness of his violation of the law, or being notified where he might and might not go; but under the bill as it stands any stranger or citizen of the United States, going to the Panama Canal and stepping off some boat at some stopping station, would technically and legally and substantially be guilty of a crime.

Now, I believe that is wrong. I believe that the rules prescribed and promulgated by the governor might be, ought to be, and would be made plain. I think that is the solution of the whole matter. The rules should be made plain, so as to protect the property of the Government there and not at the same time violate all the principles of equity and of good government.

I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to accept this suggestion. I offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas the amendment which I submit. In line 13, after the word "zone," strike out the words "without the permission of the governor," and insert in lieu thereof the words "contrary to the rules prescribed by the governor."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 13, by striking out, after the word "Zone," the words "without the permission of," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "contrary to the rules prescribed by."

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, may I add this, that the section will then read:

That after the Panama Canal shall have been completed and opened for operation, it shall not be lawful for any person to go, be, or remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone contrary to the rules prescribed by the governor of the Panama Canal"—

And so forth.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I think that would make it read mighty funny, to say that it would be unlawful for a man to do contrary to the rules. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia make a point of order? The Chair did not understand him.

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir; I did not make any point of order. I said it would be a strange proposition to make it read that way, and it would not make any difference anyhow. As to the gentleman's complaint, that some ignorant man would get there unawares, I do not think that many people would go to Panama without knowing just where they were. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDY. And I suggest to strike out the words "except United States soldiers, sailors, and marines and their officers, and the employees operating the Panama Canal," in lines 14, 15, and 16, down to the word "Any."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas is going to add something to this bill, I do not want him to butcher up what we have of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 13, by striking out, after the word "Zone," the words "without the permission of," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "contrary to the rules prescribed by."

Mr. HARDY. And strike out, in lines 14, 15, and 16, the words "except United States soldiers, sailors, and marines and their officers, and the employees operating the Panama Canal."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. What is this that the Clerk has just read?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not offer such an amendment. The gentleman has an amendment pending, which he can not change.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] offered an amendment. I offer as a substitute for that amendment the one which has just been stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct. As the Chair understands the parliamentary situation, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] offered an amendment. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] then offered a substitute for that amendment, and later he asked to add further words; he asked to add to the amendment by striking out certain words. Now, the substitute is the original amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] and which has been read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the substitute now, and will offer it as soon as the original amendment is voted on.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not withdraw it without unanimous consent.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, for the present I will object, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] has given notice that he will not give time.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I understand he has not.

Mr. MANN. The only way to get the floor is by offering amendments, and the gentleman from Georgia has given notice that he will not give time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will, if it does not take away my rights.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want the gentleman to have the chance to offer his amendment and to argue it, but I want to move to close debate in 10 minutes; no, say 15 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following, either in the form of a substitute or as an amendment, according as the Chair now holds that the proposal of the gentleman from Texas is before the House; and if it is before the House, as a substitute or as an amendment. What I offer is this: On page 14, line 11, after the word "operation," strike out the words beginning with the word "it," down to and including the word "Canal," on line 16, and substitute the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, strike out, in lines 11 and 12, the following: "It shall not be lawful for any person to go, be, or remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone without the permission of the governor of the Panama Canal."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has reported the amendment incorrectly. I said, "On line 11, beginning with the word "it," and down to and including the word "Canal," on line 16—to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 11, page 14, after the word "operation," the remainder of line 11 and all of lines 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, down to and including the word "Canal," on line 16.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that identical motion has been made and voted down.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit it to be reported, he will find that he is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the remainder of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

And insert the following: "The governor of the Canal Zone shall have the right to make such rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the President, touching the right of any person to remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone, as may be necessary."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to accept that.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. I want to know if I can not withdraw my amendment and get a vote on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]?

Mr. ADAMSON. I am perfectly willing to adopt that amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that is adopted, the language in line 15, "any person violating this provision," should be changed to read "any person violating any of such regulations." Then it would be in accord.

Now, the sole purpose of this is to meet the view, well expressed by the gentleman from Texas, to give perfect control over the canal and yet not to make the innocent doing of a thing a crime on its face; that is what I have undertaken to do.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the Clerk read the provision as it will be if the amendment is adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his substitute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of line 11 after the word "operation" and lines 12, 13, 14, 15, and line 16 up to and including the word "canal" and insert the following:

"The governor of the Canal Zone shall have the right to make such rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the President, touching the right of any person to remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone as may be necessary."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "this provision," in line 16, page 14, and substitute the words "any of such regulations."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 16, strike out the words "this provision" and insert in lieu thereof the words "any of such regulations."

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky fully carries out the purpose of the committee.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. McCALL. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Is not the gentleman getting back into the same difficulty again by providing that any person that violates one of these regulations is guilty of a crime?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. Here is the difference: The bill made the mere fact of a person being on the zone without permission a crime. That has been changed and you simply make the violation of any regulation a misdemeanor, and I assume that the President will not approve, even if any governor should recommend, any regulation as drastic as the one we had in here in the form of a law, and in that respect it is different. Presumably the regulation will provide for punishment only in the event of a violation under certain conditions. We must proceed on the assumption that our officials are going to exercise ordinary common sense and fair dealing. We have a situation, as was well said by the distinguished chairman of the committee, that is unique. We are not creating a territory for the purpose of having it populated; we have possession of a particular piece of territory which we are to use for the purpose of transporting ships from ocean to ocean, and anything else is incident to that main purpose, and every rule and regulation ought to be written with regard to the preservation of that main purpose and not with any particular theory in regard to government as we know it here, because you have not the same conditions, and in the absence of equal conditions rules fail to apply. The governor will make reasonable regulations and the President will approve no other, and I know that the force of public opinion in America is sufficient to make any governor or any President abrogate any rule that is not in accord with common sense and common justice. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I agree with the gentleman that there should be regulations, and I think the governor is the one to make the regulations. The gentleman has said, "The governor shall have the 'right' to make regulations." Why not say that he shall make them and not have the right to make them?

Mr. SHERLEY. I assume that the governor is going to have common sense and if he does not make them there will be nothing to prevent a person going there. I assume that the President and the governor are intelligent and would make regulations that ought to be made; that the men going to the Isthmus and the agents of the Government that are going there are not to be fools. I must assume a certain amount of common sense in the public men of America. If I did not, I would not authorize them to make any regulations.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if we adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, we shall have marked the difference between tweedle dee and tweedle dum. The gentleman from Kentucky is hopeful and expectant that tweedle dum will be more satisfactory than tweedle dee. This bill prescribes what may and may not be done by those visiting the Canal Zone. The amendment provides that the governor may prescribe regulations, which regulations may be exactly in line with the provision he proposes to strike out and thereby give us a government not by law, but a government by regulation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. So had I, but I yielded.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is hopeful that the governor will exercise good judgment, and he assumes that he would not if he exercised the judgment which the committee has exercised in presenting the bill to us. The fact is, the language of the bill as it stands is just what it should be. It is a provision which will protect the Canal Zone; if it becomes law, all men may read and understand it, which is infinitely better than the same kind of provision by regulation made by the governor and approved by the President. If we are going to protect the Canal Zone, we will find that our only difficulty will be in protecting it against evil-minded persons, individual marauders, and that we will never have any difficulty with foreign foes on the canal, particularly if we do not fortify. The provision in the bill is one under which we can protect the Canal Zone, under which all visitors to the zone shall know what the law is. But the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky changes all that and proposes to give the governor the opportunity to prescribe a regulation of exactly the same kind. Of course, he is hopeful that the regulations will be different.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The difference is this: The way it was written in the law the mere trespass constituted a misdemeanor without regard to the reason. Here we simply provide for regulations and punishment for violation of those, and it does not follow that the regulation will be one that will make the innocent doing of a thing a misdemeanor. I know that the gentleman being from the West is opposed to regulations.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the regulation to be effective must be prohibitory, except in accordance with certain requirements. That is all this section provides. If anyone shall have the permission of the governor to go on the Canal Zone, what other requirements could the regulation contain, except a requirement of that sort. I believe that government by law is infintely better than government by regulation.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I was struck with the force of what the gentleman from Texas said—that we should not have a provision here which would make the mere going by an American citizen upon the Canal Zone a crime—but if it would be unreasonable to have the going of an American citizen there a crime, it would be uncivilized and illiberal and barbarous to an extreme to have the going there of a citizen or subject of any foreign nation a crime, because American citizens are presumed to know something of our own laws, although none of us can keep pace with the statutory requirements of the different States or of this national body. But the citizens of foreign nations are not supposed to have any knowledge of this kind, so that it would be illiberal in the extreme to provide that anybody going there from any part of the world to the Canal Zone and going upon that Canal Zone by that act committed a crime and was liable to a fine and punishment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has improved this somewhat, but I think it should be more carefully considered and that it may be improved still more. He sets up a little satrap down there and we unload the jurisdiction of Congress upon this petty officer, who is acting outside of the Constitution, with unlimited power to make regulations, and then provide that the violation of any of those regulations amounts to a crime and makes a person subject to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do we not now do that in regard to forts and arsenals, and are not the statute books full of provisions giving to the Army the right to make regulations relative to entrance upon forts and arsenals?

Mr. McCALL. I do not know whether we do or not.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is a fact; I know.

Mr. McCALL. The Panama Canal is going to be different from a fort. It will be a sort of Mecca, to which the people of the world will come. We hold that as trustee for commerce, and to try and set up a military rule the same as with regard to forts, so that nobody would go there without such peril, it seems to me, is not reasonable. I admit the gentleman has improved the law somewhat, but I do not believe he has a satisfactory solution of the difficulty.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the provision which the committee has decided to retain in the bill is the most remarkable provision I have ever seen in any bill offered in this House—a provision that we shall invite the world to go through the Panama Canal, and if anybody accepts our invitation we shall put them in jail for a year. The gentleman from Texas offered a proposition which would except our own citizens, but would still invite the citizens of other nations to come upon the Canal Zone, with a threat that if they accepted our hospitality we would put them in jail for a year. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] proposes that we shall escape the responsibility of doing that and put it upon the President. Upon what theory are we operating a canal, except to invite the people to pass through the canal? Upon what theory do we open up the canal between the two oceans unless we want people to go through the canal, and to go through it under a threat provided by this bill that if they do so they are violating the law and making themselves subject to punishment for misdemeanor, to fine and imprisonment?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. For a question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman see a difference between going through the canal and going on the Canal Zone, and does the gentleman think there should be no regulation controlling the canal?

Mr. MANN. That question is not one of the gentleman's best questions.

Mr. SHERLEY. It seems to be one sufficiently difficult of answer to compel a rather unusual answer.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is still endeavoring to consume my time.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is to the advantage of the committee at present.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps that is the gentleman's opinion. He has that in his head probably. The proposition in the bill could be put into force under the general provisions by the governor. If it is in the bill, everybody knows it, but the gentleman from Kentucky would have the same provisions put into effect by a regulation of a governor, not by the law, not by the Congress—and at that I believe the gentleman's provision is better than the one in the bill.

To properly guard the canal is correct, but to say that a traveler shall not leave a boat which goes through the canal and cross the Isthmus by rail is extremely absurd and ridiculous. No other language properly denounces it. We have ample power to protect ourselves upon the canal without providing that every person who lands from the sea on either side on the shore is a criminal, without providing that everyone who leaves the boat is a criminal, without providing that everyone who steps across the line from the city of Panama to the city of Colon, outside of the city limits, can be arrested, and without jury trial sent to jail and be fined. We would not stand for a thing of that kind in the United States for a moment, and we ought not to inflict it upon the Canal Zone—not there so much because it affects matters there, but for our own honor and reputation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it is always a source of regret to me to have to disagree with my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has just spoken, and with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], who also has just spoken; but it does seem to me that gentlemen are creating ghosts, supposing improbabilities. This is a very plain matter. We have the canal and we have a population of 90,000,000 people in the United States. I do not know whether we yet include Porto Rico—I do not know whether the law in respect to Porto Rico has passed yet.

Mr. MANN. It has not.

Mr. CANNON. It probably will pass. We will have more than 100,000,000 people in the United States, and we have a canal that costs $400,000,000.

Now, it is useless to say that every American citizen, naturalized or unnaturalized, is a patriot. There are exceptions. Why, three American citizens have assassinated three Presidents. The McNamaras, American citizens, destroyed bridges by the wholesale and are now in the penitentiary. It is all very nice to talk about trusting everybody, but when you get 10 miles of a reservation on the Canal Zone for a specific purpose there should be power to make reasonable regulations so that you shut out the McNamaras and shut out the Guiteaus and the Czolgoszes, and people of that stamp. Oh, but my friend says, you will invite all the world and then put them in the penitentiary. Nay, nay, they have got to go there aboard ship, and regulations would provide how they could go with safety. Perchance once in awhile some anarchist, some fellow with dynamite, might smuggle through, and precaution should be taken to protect our canal and its locks. The same protection is taken touching our military reservations in the United States. True we come and go substantially by unanimous consent, but there is the power, there is the power there now to make the regulations for protection and care of our military posts, and the gentleman, my colleague, and the gentleman from Massachusetts could not go upon a military reservation, unless by consent as the power to exclude is there. The same way I say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], who was in the Navy. You can not go upon a battleship except by consent. The ship is United States territory just as much as any other territory, and we have the power to make regulations as to how men shall go and come upon a battleship, and it seems to me we are making ghosts upon our own imagination and then running from them.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to ask the parliamentary status. I understood the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky was——

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is pending, the second amendment which he offered.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be recognized for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am not on the floor.

Mr. HOBSON. Then I will take the floor.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think that is in order.

Mr. HOBSON. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. HOBSON. I want to be informed if this provision in the bill meets with the approval of the canal authorities.

Mr. ADAMSON. I stated in a speech on the floor some time ago, as it was drawn and reported by the committee, it met the approval of the chief engineer, Col. Goethals.

Mr. HOBSON. I simply wish to add, Mr. Chairman, that the question of the military features of the Panama Canal ought to be given full consideration in all such matters. The probable issue of future war will be settled by the fact of whether we are able to command and control the free passage of the canal or not, and our ability to control the free passage of the canal will unquestionably hinge upon the legislation we now provide that would give our officials proper authority to control the access of persons to that canal.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit a question in the line the gentleman has taken in discussing this very important section? Let me ask him this question: This first part of section 10, as it was worded, would it require an inspection of passengers on ships passing through the canal, by the governor or under his authority, and the crews of freighters?

Mr. HOBSON. I would hesitate to interpret it in that regard, but I would not hesitate to say that in particular cases where the safety of the canal was involved the governor would assume the authority to inspect any ship or any passenger on any ship that goes through the canal. Otherwise the passenger ship might be carrying a person with malevolent intentions toward the canal, and at certain critical stages might even sink his own ship or at least utilize the position of that ship to destroy important engineering works. That is an inherent part of our authority to protect the canal that is involved in the section. It is a fact in American practice in connection with our forts and our stations, and for a time past in connection with our ships, that we did not exercise that vigilance in keeping from the outside world knowledge of our affairs and our military features that was important for our efficiency in time of war. It is only year before last that we were finally able to get the authority under which a spy caught red-handed could be tried and convicted, and we need not fear that in adopting this section and the authority to make regulations, as provided in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, we need not fear that we might do injustice to the sight-seeing activities of legitimate sojourners and the movements of citizens who are there for legitimate purposes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe the last amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky has not been voted upon.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have it reported again so that I might offer a suggestion.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have unanimous consent to make the substitution read, "any of such rules or regulations," so as to conform to the exact language of the amendment adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to amend his amendment by the insertion of the words indicated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Whether the gentleman thinks the provisions would come within the decision of the courts about the forest reserves in reference to violating rules and regulations. Has the gentleman laid a sufficient foundation here to constitute a misdemeanor upon a violation of the regulations?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is really a question of law how far the regulation can be issued the violation of which creates a punishable offense, but inasmuch as the gentleman says the foundation for punishment is given as to a specific thing, why, then, regulations to carry that out are, I think, lawful, and their violation can be made punishable.

Mr. MANN. If we provide by law directly the governor of the Canal Zone should have control over the admission of persons to the Canal Zone, I think we could then give power to make regulations a violation of which might constitute a misdemeanor; but without that, I doubt it very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, on the question suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky, I desire to say we give to the Commissioners of the District power to make regulations, and the courts have sustained their right to make those regulations and enforce them to the extent of fine and imprisonment.

Mr. ADAMSON. The committee accepts that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, as changed by unanimous consent.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. That amendment goes in after the concluding words of the new portion on line 16, page 14. I do not know what the concluding portion is, but it is just before the word "any," on line 16 of page 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 16, insert, before the word "any," the following:
"Provided, That such regulations shall not exclude persons engaged in ordinary business or travel from being upon or passing over any portion of the zone except designated portions adjacent to the locks and other works and necessary to the policing thereof."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I voted for the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to change this section instead of making a man prima facie a criminal when he was found on the zone, to at least provide that the governor or some one in authority and supposed to exercise discretion should make regulations, and the violation of those regulations should constitute the offense. I voted for that as a mitigation of the rigor of the original rule. But it does seem to me, especially in view of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, that the purpose is not served even by that amendment. I want to make that canal down there a great commercial highway and invite all the nations of the world to use it as freely as is consistent with good order and good government and safety. But it is just as consistent, so far as 80 per cent of that canal is concerned, with good order and safety for them to use it as it is for them to use the plaza in front of this building or the steps in front of the United States Treasury. There is not a particle more reason to exclude people from 80 per cent of that zone than there is to exclude them from the steps of the United States Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman's idea carry him so far that he would provide for the construction of warehouses at the mouth of the canal?

Mr. BORLAND. I have gone over that. I would like to have warehouses built.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In which merchandise and samples could be displayed?

Mr. BORLAND. I am in favor of that. Here are two cities, Colon and Panama, that by our treaty are excluded from our jurisdiction, but territorially are in the zone. They are surrounded by a line of posts. If those cities grow at all, they have got to grow on American territory. If they grow on a military zone, coming right up to the limits of the city, a man on the zone is there by sufferance or favoritism, or whatever you call it. I was born and lived for 12 years of my life near Fort Leavenworth, and I know that some fellows were always on the reservation conducting some business by governmental favoritism. Every law-abiding citizen ought to have the same right there to go down and conduct commerce. Talk about ghosts, the ghosts are that somebody will take dynamite down there and blow up the locks, which are large enough to contain any private structure in the city of Washington. The ordinary policing around those locks for a mile or half a mile would be ample to protect them. My provision is to reduce or proscribe that zone to the amount that the governor declares would be necessary for the policing of the locks. The remainder of the 400 square miles ought to be open for commerce, every bit of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments to section 11, by the order of the House, will be passed. The Clerk will read section 12.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That all laws and treaties relating to the extradition of persons accused of crime in force in the United States, to the extent that they may not be in conflict with or superseded by any special treaty entered into between the United States and the Republic of Panama with respect to the Canal Zone, and all laws relating to the rendition of fugitives from justice as between the several States and Territories of the United States, shall extend to and be considered in force in the Canal Zone, and for such purposes and such purposes only the Canal Zone shall be considered and treated as an organized Territory of the United States.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I understood that when we reached section 11 amendments might be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. They may be offered or may not. We will reach the section again, when they can be offered, or Members can offer them now.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection to it, it is all right, but we have passed the section.

Mr. BORLAND. We are still on section 10.

The CHAIRMAN. We have passed section 11 and gone on to section 12.

Mr. BORLAND. Section 11 was passed by former agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that by order of the House section 11 had been passed, and the Clerk would read section 12.

Mr. BORLAND. That was made by order of the House, not by order made now. We have not begun to read section 12.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman want to offer an amendment to section 10?

Mr. BORLAND. I want to offer an amendment to section 10. Section 11 is the one we are on now, unless we had read section 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had perfect liberty to offer an amendment to section 11. Section 10 is passed. The Clerk will read section 12.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to have the Chair hear me on that point. Sections 5 and 11 were passed by previous order of the House. No order was made at this time. The previous order of the House provided for their passing until the other sections were concluded. We were working on section 10 until we began to work on section 12.

Mr. ADAMSON. We had begun on section 12.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] was not observing what was occurring. The Chair stated positively, by order of the House, section 11 would be passed, and the Clerk would begin to read section 12, and he began the reading.

Mr. BORLAND. But it was not by virtue of that statement that we passed section 11.

The CHAIRMAN. We were reading section 10, and section 11 was passed. If the gentleman desires to ask unanimous consent to return to section 10, the Chair will entertain the motion.

Mr. BORLAND. I will not do that. I think that was by inadvertence.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection——

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I object. We started section 12, and we want to make progress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That all laws and treaties relating to the extradition of persons accused of crime in force in the United States, to the extent that they may not be in conflict with or superseded by any special treaty entered into between the United States and the Republic of Panama with respect to the Canal Zone, and all laws relating to the rendition of fugitives from justice as between the several States and Territories of the United States, shall extend to and be considered in force in the Canal Zone, and for such purposes and such purposes only the Canal Zone shall be considered and treated as an organized Territory of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after section 12, the following: "That the President shall provide a method for the determination and adjustment of all claims arising out of personal injuries to employees thereafter occurring while directly engaged in actual work in connection with the construction, maintenance, operation, or sanitation of the canal or of the Panama Railroad, or of any auxiliary canals, locks, or other works necessary and convenient for the construction, maintenance, operation, or sanitation of the canal, whether such injuries result in death or not, and may revise and modify such method at any time; and such claims, to the extent they shall be allowed on such adjustment, if allowed at all, shall be paid out of the moneys hereafter appropriated for that purpose or out of the funds of the Panama Railroad Co., if said company was responsible for said injury, as the case may require. And after such method shall be provided by the President, the provisions of the act entitled 'An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment,' approved May 30, 1908, and of the act entitled 'An act relating to injured employees on the Isthmian Canal,' approved February 24, 1909, shall not apply to personal injuries thereafter received and claims for which are subject to determination and adjustment as provided in this section."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is the same provision as was in the canal bill that we passed before.

Mr. ADAMSON. If it is framed up in the proper shape so as to make it law it will not be objectionable. We are trying to divorce the President from the function of legislating down there, so that if the gentleman will put that in the proper shape I will not object to it at all.

Mr. MANN. Well, as the gentleman has repeatedly stated on the floor, the whole theory of this bill is to hold the President responsible for the operation of the Canal Zone and the administration of the canal.

Mr. ADAMSON. But we do not want him to legislate.

Mr. MANN. This does not give the President the power to make law. It only gives the President, through the officials down there, the right to make adjustments for personal injuries. We are operating the Panama Canal now as a business proposition. There is no reason why we should not take care of those who receive personal injuries in the course of that operation instead of requiring them to come before Congress for special bills or be limited to one year's pay such as is now provided.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] was agreeable to this proposition when we passed it before. No one objected to it then, and I hope no one will object to it now. It is not practicable to do it in any other way than this.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, when we passed the bill before, we were building the canal, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and I always agreed that it was then too early to make permanent and general legislation. I agree to the general principle of paying these casualties down there if men are hurt, and frankly I am not in favor of scrutinizing too closely the facts as to exactly how far a man was to blame if he got hurt in the line of his duty. But we object to the President making laws down there. That duty should be left to Congress. We hold the President responsible for the administration of the laws down there. If the gentleman from Illinois will modify his proposition and restrict it to the casualties that happen down there, and make it law right now, I will agree.

Mr. MANN. There is no other way of extending the law, except in the way suggested, as the gentleman from Georgia will readily see. The limit of compensation allowed to men who receive injuries down there is now one year's pay, which is not a proper limit on the Canal Zone, when we are operating the canal as a business enterprise.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I am in sympathy with the suggestion of the gentleman, and I think that he and I can agree upon the provision. If we can pass this section over until the bill is finished, I think we can agree about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent to pass over this section for the time being without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That in time of war in which the United States shall be engaged, or when, in the opinion of the President, war is imminent, such officer of the Army as the President may designate shall, upon the order of the President, assume and have exclusive authority and jurisdiction over the operation of the Panama Canal and all of its adjuncts, appendants, and appurtenances, including the entire control and government of the Canal Zone, and during a continuance of such condition the governor of the Panama Canal shall, in all respects and particulars as to the operation of such Panama Canal, and all duties, matters, and transactions affecting the Canal Zone, be subject to the order and direction of such officer of the Army.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, strike out all of section 13.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, section 13 contemplates the fortification of the Panama Canal. As such fortification will necessarily render the canal liable to blockade and bombardment—make it subject to blockade and bombardment—as it will make it a point where a foreign enemy will first strike us in case of war, if we are to fortify, if we are to turn this great work of peace into an adjunct of war, it is entirely proper that we should have this provision in which in time of war the governor shall be an officer of the Army. But our treaty with Great Britain provided for the neutralization of the canal. We guaranteed under that treaty that no act of war should ever be exercised within the canal. We pledged ourselves against bombardment, and yet this section, if it has any meaning at all, is clearly an evidence of our intention to violate the fundamental provisions of the treaty. I know that in the present temper of the House that will not cut much of a figure.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. HOBSON. I want to ask the gentleman if he can conceive any means by which we could enforce that neutrality provision of the treaty without making such provision as we have here?

Mr. MONDELL. My personal view of it is that it is beyond the limits of possibility to keep the canal open and in use in time of war if we fortify it; whereas by international agreement, under which it will be to the interest of all the nations at all times to keep the canal open, we will be able to maintain the canal for the benefit of commerce and keep it open for the use of our battle fleets in time of war. Fortification, in my opinion, defeats its own object. To attempt to fortify is to fly in the face of our solemn pledges and obligations, and further than that it is to do a thing that while it will cost us in every century of time at least four times what the canal itself has cost, will not keep the canal open in the face of the enemy that commands the sea at either end. All military men agree to that, and yet we propose to plant these fortifications as though they would be of some value.

Unless we have a Navy strong enough to command the sea they would be absolutely valueless. Without fortification all the world is willing and anxious to aid us in maintaining the neutrality of the canal in protecting it because all the world wants of the canal is an opportunity to use it. That opportunity is best obtained when the canal is open at all times to the ships of commerce and, for that matter, to the ships of war. That has been our thought and intent in regard to the Panama Canal from the beginning. Every great American that has ever expressed an opinion in regard to it up to four or five years ago has expressed the opinion that the canal should be neutralized and should under no circumstances be subject to the vicissitudes of war; and yet we are proposing in this legislation to do the very thing to make the canal valueless to us in case we have a war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman, but have we not gone so far that it is too late to retrace the steps?

Mr. MONDELL. A question is never settled until it is settled right. Having made an appropriation of $3,000,000 for beginning the work that will cost $100,000,000 is not, I think my friend from Pennsylvania will agree with me, a settlement of the question. Congress has not fully considered the matter or taken into consideration the enormous cost, and, more than that, has not considered the utter futility of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman take into consideration the further objection that, in addition to the great cost of armament, it will cost $25,000,000 per annum for maintenance?

Mr. MONDELL. No fair estimate has ever been made less than that.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, has there been an estimate that placed it anywhere close to it?

Mr. MONDELL. Twelve thousand men of all arms will cost us twelve to fifteen million dollars.

Mr. SHERLEY. No more than it would stationed at your forts out West. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. The upkeep of the fortifications would cost at least $50,000,000. This expense would be in addition to our present Army expenditures at home.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that while there may be some question as to the wisdom of fortifying the canal, that this provision ought not to be considered as bearing upon that question in the slightest degree. In fact, as it seems to me, this provision would be more necessary if we did not fortify the canal than if we did.

There can be no question but that the President of the United States would have the right to declare martial law over any part of the territory of the United States—and this certainly is part of the territory of the United States—in case it should become necessary for our own national defense, and that would be true whether the canal was fortified or not.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the necessity of having a military government on a neutralized canal?

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman asks a question that it is impossible to answer, because we have not a neutralized zone. It is true that we neutralize the use of the Panama Canal, but we have not a neutralized zone, and our treaty does not so imply. We have a zone that is a part of the territory of the United States, which it will be necessary for this Government to protect, and if it should become necessary to declare martial law in order to protect that, or any other interest of this Govermnent, the Government would certainly have the power to do so. This provision of the law is only to do that more effectively and to do it more easily. I am inclined to think that the power already exists to do in effect what this provision says may be done, but certainly it only does it in a more effective way, and therefore I think it is entirely advisable.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have always had the impression that we wanted to do something with this canal that would be of profit to the commerce of the United States, but a recent visit to the canal indicated that the whole purpose of the canal, from the viewpoint of most of those on the Isthmus, was to make it a military reservation. We have been expending a great deal of the people's money on this canal, and we ought to maintain it as befits a great Nation like the United States, even if we do have to stand there as the almoner of the world and give the world the opportunity to use it. As a matter of fact, we are very largely in the position of maintaining it for the rest of the world. That is to say, Germany and England, having entered the South American market, and having largely absorbed the commerce of Latin America, we have provided for them the means of entrance and of exit in order that they may do the business in South America which we have thought we might be able to do ourselves. Now, it appears we are to pay for the passageway through which our commercial competitors are to go. I do not believe that even the Congress of the United States knows what the canal is going to cost.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield there, I will suggest that the reverse of his position is true. Instead of saying we pay for their passage, he should say that they pay us for their passage, and that is the only way we will ever get any returns from the canal.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They will pay us for the passage, if this bill passes, at the rate of, say, $1 per ton, but, according to the best estimate that we have received, we will not in any one year pass more than 10,000,000 tons, which will make a return of $10,000,000, if we pass that much tonnage.

Speaking along the line of neutrality as raised by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONDELL], and answering the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who raised some question about it a moment ago, I assume it is greatly to be desired especially as a method of reducing the maintenance cost. I would like to call the attention of the House to page 415 of the first volume of the hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in which a most interesting coloquy takes place between the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] and Col. Goethals, the chief engineer of the canal. I hope I may have time to read a portion of that very illuminating statement. Mr. STEVENS is interrogating Col. Goethals:

Mr. STEVENS. Estimating then that the operation and maintenance require $3,500,000, there should be added a reasonable expense for administering the government of the Canal Zone. For the purposes of canal administration last year it was testified by Mr. Thatcher yesterday that there was expended $1,100,000 for such administration. In all probability, would or would not that be reduced the year beginning with the permanent charge for the canal?

Col. GOETHALS. That ought to be reduced very materially.

Mr. STEVENS. Was that your estimate to the chairman, which was about $4,000,000?

Col. GOETHALS. Including sanitation and civil administration, provided colonization was not entered into.

Mr. STEVENS. Then we have the annual interest charge upon the principal expended for the construction of the canal. What would that be?

Col. GOETHALS. $12,000,000 per annum.

Mr. STEVENS. It has been stated in the hearings that there would be needed for defense here eight batteries of Coast Artillery, a division of Infantry, and a battalion of Field Artillery.

Col. GOETHALS. That is the estimate prepared by the Chief of Staff or General Staff.

Mr. STEVENS. That has been decided by the military authorities in Washington who have been appointed to report upon that subject. How many men in eight batteries of Coast Artillery?

Col. GOETHALS. There are about 150 men to a battery for a heavy gun.

Mr. STEVENS. That would be about 1,200 men. Estimating that number of men at approximately $1,000 per man, what does that amount to?

Col. GOETHALS. $1,200,000.

Mr. STEVENS. A division of Infantry would be about how many troops?

Col. GOETHALS. Three regiments to a brigade and two brigades—about 1,000 men to a regiment—would be 6,000 troops.

Six thousand infantrymen! That is what you want to put on the canal apart from your Coast Artillery. But, to continue:

Mr. STEVENS. At the average of $1,000 per man, that would be how much?

Col. GOETHALS. Six million dollars.

Now, you have added your Infantry to your Coast Artillery, and you are building up a splendid establishment there to protect the canal, which we thought was built for commercial enterprise—

Mr. STEVENS. These batteries of Field Artillery—how much would that be?

Col. GOETHALS. Four hundred and fifty men; about.

Mr. STEVENS. Which would cost a good deal more on account of the horses?

Col. GOETHALS. Say another $1,000,000 to cover the Field Artillery.

Mr. STEVENS. That would be a total for the military expense for the protection of this canal of how much?

Col. GOETHALS. $8,500,000, practically.

That is per annum, plus your $3,500,000 for civil government.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield for a question.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that since then the estimates have been considerably increased over those given by Col. Goethals.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That makes it so much worse.

Mr. MONDELL. They have added $4,000,000 since then.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. STEVENS then goes on. He is tracing out the total cost of the defenses, defenses which, to a certain extent, will be a menace and will induce the world to believe we have put a chip upon our shoulder to fight anybody that comes along. Let me read:

Mr. STEVENS. Then we have items for the construction $12,000,000; protection, $8,500,000; and operation and maintenance, $4,000,000, as a minimum.

Mr. DOREMUS. You have not included the naval attachment down here.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Put the wireless station in also.

Mr. STEVENS. The Navy contemplates keeping how many marines here?

Col. GOETHALS. They now have 450. They have asked for a site for an advanced base for three battalions, practically 1,200 men. There is another $1,200,000.

Mr. STEVENS. Making, then, the total expense to the people of the United States annually, on account of caring for this enterprise, for its construction, operation, control, and protection, of about $27,000,000 annually?

Col. GOETHALS. Yes, sir. With 7,000,000 tons of freight, not as a possible amount of traffic but as an actual amount of traffic, we would require $4 a ton, and we would have no ships through the canal.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Of course, that would make the tolls prohibitive.

Col. GOETHALS. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. And the commercial value of the canal would be completely destroyed?

Col. GOETHALS. Entirely. We can save $130,000,000 if we stop right now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The total maintenance cost runs up to $27,000,000 per annum, and that does not include a vessel of war on either side of the canal. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the Panama Canal was built to help us develop our commerce. It ought not to be overweighted with a military establishment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

That the civil employees in the canal service between the ages of 18 and 45 years shall be organized into a heavy artillery regiment, which force shall perform such military service, engage in such drills, and be governed by such regulations as the Secretary of War may direct: Provided, however, That the number of such drills shall not exceed 52 in any one year and the annual encampment which may be prescribed shall not exceed two weeks.

That for this service officers and men shall receive as compensation the rate of pay to which officers of the same grade and men of the Regular Army would be entitled to for the same length of service, but in no case shall the allowance for this service exceed $200 annually for an officer or $100 annually for an enlisted man, and this allowance shall be made at such times and under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that that is in order on this bill. It is a provision that ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I make the point of order that it is not germane to this proposition.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard upon that proposition. We are providing in this bill for a military force for the defense of the canal.

I am proposing by this amendment that civil employees on the Isthmus shall be organized into a force to supplement the men of the Regular Army to be sent there for the protection of the canal. Civil employees will generally be of military age, they will be acclimated to conditions as they exist on the Isthmus, and will, therefore, be immune from troubles which would affect men sent there for military or other service.

By making this authorization the necessity for sending at least one regiment of Heavy Artillery to the Canal Zone will be obviated, thereby bringing about an economy of something like $800,000 a year. Therefore it seems to me that such an amendment should appeal to the economic claims of the Members on the Democratic side of the House, as it will produce a saving, and I think the amendment should be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That this act shall be known as and referred to as the Panama Canal act.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I have a committee amendment which I desire to offer. I did not deem it entirely necessary, but gentlemen have asked me to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by adding at the end of the bill, beginning after the word "act," line 25, page 17, the following: "And the right to alter, amend, or repeal any or all of its provisions, or to extend, modify, or annul any rule or regulation made under its authority is expressly reserved."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is immaterial to me whether the amendment is agreed to or not, but I do not like to have this go into the law without a statement made that it is entirely and wholly unnecessary. We put that provision in laws which confer special franchises or special rights upon individuals or corporations which may be treated in the nature of a contract, but this does not make a contract with anyone. It merely carries the right to create another governmental instrumentality, and it goes without saying that we have the right to alter, repeal, or modify or change any regulation. While I care nothing whether the amendment goes in, I did not wish anybody to think that it is necessary to put in a general legislative law a provision that we have the right to repeal it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, my own opinion concurs with that of the gentleman from Illinois; but other gentlemen, who are great parliamentarians, suggested we put that in, and I am perfectly willing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, going back to section 5, I wish to see if we can reach an agreement as to debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the section first.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized to prescribe, and from time to time change, toll charges for the use of the Panama Canal by all vessels, except those belonging to the Government of the United States (including those of the Panama Railroad Co.) and the Government of the Republic of Panama, which excepted vessels shall be charged no tolls. Charges may be based upon gross or net registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, or otherwise, and may be based on one form of tonnage for warships and another for ships of commerce, but the tolls shall not exceed $1.25 per ton, based upon net registered tonnage for ships of commerce, nor be less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal: Provided, however, That under regulations prescribed by the President a vessel paying toll going through the canal in ballast shall, on its return trip through the canal laden with cargo, be entitled to receive a rebate of 50 per cent of the tolls just previously paid going through in the opposite direction without cargo. No preference shall be given nor discrimination shown, directly or indirectly, to the vessels of any nation, its citizens or subjects, other than vessels belonging to the Government of the United States (including those belonging to the Panama Railroad Co.) and the Government of the Republic of Panama, observing the rules and regulations of the Panama Canal. The toll for each passenger shall be not more than $1.50. The President is authorized to make, and from time to time amend, regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal and the passage and control of vessels passing through the same or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto, and all rules and regulations affecting lighting, pilots, and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters.

Such rules and regulations shall expressly deny and forbid the use of the Panama Canal to all the classes of vessels the passage of which through the Panama Canal, or any part thereof, is made and declared unlawful by section 11 of this act.

Such regulations shall provide for prompt adjustment by agreement and immediate payment of claims for damages which may arise from alleged injury to vessels, cargo, or passengers from the passing of vessels through the locks under the control of those operating them under such rules and regulations. In case of disagreement, suit may be brought in the District Court of the Canal Zone against the governor of the Panama Canal. The hearing and disposition of such cases shall be expedited, and the judgment shall be immediately paid off without proceeding to execution. All such claims, whether by agreement or after judgment, shall be paid out of any moneys appropriated or allotted for canal operation.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wish to offer a committee amendment to section 5, and then see if we can reach an agreement as to time for debate upon the section and all amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 5 by striking out the entire sentence beginning with the word "No," on line 22, page 5, and ending with the word "canal," line 5, page 7. The language to be stricken out reads as follows:

"No preference shall be given nor discrimination shown, directly or indirectly, to the vessels of any nation, its citizens or subjects, other than vessels belonging to the Government of the United States (including those belonging to the Panama Railroad Co.) and the Government of the Republic of Panama, observing the rules and regulations of the Panama Canal."

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The rate of toll shall be uniform upon all vessels, except the official vessels of the Governments of the United States and the Republic of Panama, but when based on different forms of tonnage for different classes of vessels the rate fixed in each case shall be substantially equivalent to the rate based on any different form of tonnage."

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], myself, and some other gentlemen have talked about a fair division of time for debate on this tolls proposition. Mr. BROUSSARD and I thought an hour would be sufficient to discuss it, having had such a long general debate, and I ask unanimous consent that on this section and all amendments and substitutes to it we shall have a debate of one hour a side, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman filing the minority report on that subject.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what he contemplates the procedure would be during the two hours and at the end of the two hours upon these propositions which have been or may be submitted to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, I do not care whether I have the last speech or the first speech or the speech in the middle.

Mr. MANN. I do not care when the gentleman speaks, but we have now submitted some four, five, or six amendments to this section. Everyone knows that if we have two hours general debate here that immediately after it was announced men who have not had their lunch will go out to get it, and those who have had their lunch will go to their offices to transact business, and at the end of the two hours when you come to a vote no one but the few who have remained here will know what the different propositions are.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then I am willing to modify the proposition. Mr. BROUSSARD did not speak in general debate and Judge SIMS did not. I am perfectly willing to say those two gentlemen shall have some time each and then go on under the five-minute rule as usual.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment and I would like to have 15 or 20 minutes to discuss it. I have very decided views upon this proposition.

Mr. MANN. I have exceedingly decided views upon this proposition, but I am not going to impose upon the House or committee by asking for an extension of time. I think, on the contrary, I shall withdraw the amendment I have pending and advise the House to vote for the Doremus substitute.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am perfectly willing to allow the two members of the committee who did not speak in general debate to have 20 or 30 minutes, and then proceed under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it is now 2 o'clock. We have two controverted propositions here, but I am perfectly willing to have the gentlemen talk, but it seems to me it is hardly fair to the House for gentlemen to make long speeches now at the expense of other gentlemen who desire to eat their dinners this evening.

Mr. GARNER. May I make this suggestion to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. Chairman, would you not obviate this situation if you should go on under the five-minute rule, and when the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] gets up to address the committee and he should ask unanimous consent to continue for 20 minutes, the committee would likely give it to him; and when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks 20 minutes, it would be given to him; and then if the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] will get some time and would ask the committee's indulgence for a little while and receive it, and in that way you would progress along on these different provisions, and in that way the committee would get the benefit of what these gentlemen have to say? I believe that we could get to a vote before 4 o'clock.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request in accordance with the wise suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]—that we go on under the five-minute rule, and that when the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] address the Chair they be allowed to proceed for 20 minutes each.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent that we proceed under the five-minute rule, and that when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] address the Chair they each be recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to know if the gentlemen named are not on the same side of the proposition?

Mr. SIMS. Not by any means.

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that there is a time set for a vote on this?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. COOPER. It is one of the most important questions to come before the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to know if the agreement as to 20 minutes is that they will consume the 20 minutes and no one can talk on their amendments?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, in the majority report, while an argument is made for uniformity of tolls, with the exception of the official vessels of the United States and of the Republic of Panama, and while it is stated that the position of the majority of the committee is that the treaties require that sort of treatment and would forbid preferential tolls, it was expressly stated that the committee did not necessarily base its action upon that ground, but upon the ground that we needed the tolls in the canal; that we feared there would not be much foreign business during the first year; that the coastwise trade was amply protected from all the balance of the world as to competition; that it did not need the tolls; that there were plenty of them to do the business; and if we wanted to do anything for the coastwise trade we ought to give it to all of them, and not to the small percentage going through the Panama Canal.

As we were in perfect good faith, the majority of the committee thought we had stricken from the bill all mention of the treaty. Some of the gentlemen on the floor seemed to complain of that language, and I thought it was only in the interest of truth and justice and due the committee that I state again that it was the position of all the committee except one or two, and that it is offered here by instruction of the committee, in accordance with the majority report, as an amendment that the committee insist on now to open the canal and fix the tolls, with the exception of the ships named, and leave the future of the canal, if success or failure, to indicate or dictate to us if there ought to be any changes made. If it is necessary to negotiate with England about it, or if unnecessary, let the future of the canal determine it. We can not agree with the gentlemen who say, "We will take our position, and if the other nations of the world do not like it, then go to The Hague or some other tribunal to settle the question." That is not the course to pursue. They might say, "Go and litigate the claim of Colombia at The Hague." England might say, "We will just close the Welland Canal." We do not want to construe the treaty. We do not want to precipitate any lawsuits or any trouble, belligerent or otherwise, with any other nation. We have spent $400,000,000 down there, and we have a great enterprise. We want it to succeed. We want gentlemen to unite with us and forego their claims for special interests and let us open that great enterprise and see what its returns will be and what its success will be, and if we find it advisable to change our course we can change the plan. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] as a committee amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. Chairman, I have desired as far as possible to follow the lead of the committee which reported this bill, a committee of which for many years I was a member and at one time the chairman. But I am compelled to part company with the committee on a proposition which I regard as essential to the prosperity of the country, and the amendment which the gentleman from Georgia now proposes involves the whole question.

He proposes to insert in the bill the provision:

The rate of tolls shall be uniform upon all vessels except the official vessels of the Government of the United States and the Republic of Panama.

And when based on different forms of tonnage or different classes of vessels the rate fixed in each class shall be substantially equivalent to the rate based on any different form of tonnage. Under the provision of the gentleman you would have to charge the same rate on warships on displacement tonnage that you would have to charge if it was registered tonnage. But that is an immaterial objection perhaps—a matter of form. I am opposed to any proposition which commits this Government to a construction of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to the effect that, having spent $400,000,000 out of the National Treasury, we are not permitted to give any preference to our own merchant marine passing through the canal. [Applause.] I believe we ought to give preference to the coastwise vessels and also to the vessels flying the American flag and engaged in foreign service. [Applause.] Therefore I am not willing to have the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia agreed to without some kind of a test vote in the House. Those of us who are in favor of having the canal give some preference to American ships flying the American flag ought to vote against this amendment, and those who are in favor of forever shutting out any preference to American vessels ought to vote in favor of the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, if that motion is necessary to enable me to secure a few minutes' time to express my views on the pending measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is recognized.

Mr. BUTLER. I am told, Mr. Chairman, that we are asked to surrender a right without demand made and before a shot is fired at us; that we are asked to give up a right vountarily; that we are asked to forego a great privilege that belongs to our own people, which no nation has questioned or requested us to surrender, largely upon the excuse that we have forfeited the right which we might otherwise have had if we had not so agreed. We are told that our free use of this waterway is in violation of a solemn agreement that we have made with the other nations of the earth. That agreement, it is said, was made with England, based upon the convention made at Constantinople.

Gentlemen endeavor to persuade us that we should refuse freedom to our ships and to our own people to use the waters of the Panama Canal without paying the same rate charged against strangers for a similar privilege. We are told that our hands are tied by the terms of a convention made and now existing in which the British Kingdom is one of the parties and the Republic of the United States is the other. This convention, widely celebrated and now in the public mind, is known as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of a few years ago. We are warned that our agreement, so named, requires us to treat all nations alike and with the same degree of equality. This is one of the reasons to be urged against the adoption of pending amendments providing in effect for free passage by us through our own waterway.

If gentlemen of the committee will take the pains to examine the Constantinople convention, they will discover that we were not a party to it, and that the nations provided for in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty are the nations included in the convention made at Constantinople.

We expended our own money, $400,000,000; we employed our own genius; we asked no nation to assist us. All this is the result of our own work, secured by American labor and American capital. England gave us in this treaty the permission, at our own cost, to build this great waterway; and at the same time, Mr. Chairman, that we agreed with her that we would construct this waterway at our own expense and at our own cost she agreed that we should have and enjoy all the rights incident to such construction, one of which, naturally, is the right to use the canal.

Now, it is a well-understood rule of law that every man who makes an agreement makes it favorable to himself. Does this agreement show that we made it unfavorable to ourselves? Does the language overcome the presumption? The next provision of this agreement reads:

The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing the rules—

Mark you, the language used—on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any "such nations."

What nations do the words "such nations" apply to? It is said that we have used as the basis of neutralization of our ship canal "the following rules as embodied in the convention of Constantinople." If gentlemen will turn to the convention of Constantinople they will discover that we were not a party to it, but that all the other nations of the world agreed how the neutralization of the Suez Canal should be made. England asked of us in this famous treaty—the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, afterwards agreed to—one condition, and that was, that such nations as are referred to in the agreement made at Constantinople should be treated fairly and squarely in the use of the canal. This is the fair interpretation of the words "such nations." [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, has my time expired?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has not yet expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I am unwilling, as one Member of this House, to forever forego the right to claim a great privilege that may or may not belong to us. I am unwilling to give away that which may be our own. I am unwilling to concede that which is not demanded of us and thereby commit the American people to a condition that may never arise. It may occur that some time in the future some tribunal to which this great question is submitted will decide that this privilege is ours. Why should we now surrender it before the demand is made? Do we break our agreement with these great nations because we now insist that this privilege is ours? I can not see, Mr. Chairman, why we violate our own agreement, why we break our word, passed by us through convention, ratified by our people, and accepted by all the nations of the world. We should at this time take unto ourselves what, according to the fair construction of this agreement, belongs to us and which stands undenied.

Before my time expires I wish to congratulate these learned men who have prepared these reports. If they had all agreed upon the construction of this treaty I, for one, would have had no trouble in reaching a conclusion. But these experts, these members of this famous Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, these jurists, these gentlemen learned in the law, having studied for weeks and for months this agreement, did tend to confuse us when they differed in their conclusions, some of them warning us that if we did not accept the provision as written in the bill our action would amount to a breach of our agreement and a violation of our word as a great Nation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to have the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I tried to make myself clear, but the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] indicate that they did not clearly understand me.

The object is to strike out the language that the minority report insisted would construe the treaty and foreclose our future rights in the matter. We eschew all reference to the treaty. We do not mention the treaty. We strike out the sentence they objected to, because it was said it resembles something in the treaty. It simply provides for uniform tolls, without mentioning that there is a treaty in the world, because we think that economically we need all the tolls alike from everybody.

Now, if in future years Congress deems that it has the power under the treaty to make special exceptions in favor of particular vessels, and if statesmen here get their consent to shutting their eyes to taking money out of the Treasury to give to special interests, and they say it is not a ship subsidy to take from the Treasury that owns it $5,000 every time a ship goes through the canal and give it to the special shipping interests, all of which are either owned or financed by the same small financial coterie, Congress may do it.

We want to free ourselves from the unjust imputation that gentlemen on the other side have cast upon us that we are trying to foreclose the treaty. We are not, and if they will read the original bill that I introduced they will find that I did construe the treaty clear through it, but that it was stricken out all except this one sentence, and we thought this did not do it. Now we ask to strike that out.

When gentlemen say "we" and "our" they get their grammar confused. Congress and the Government may be "we" in the sense that the canal is ours, but if they confuse any little handful of men conducting the greatest and longest and loudest lobby ever seen on earth to get special privileges as "we," they are mistaken, for they do not represent 1 per cent of the American people. There are 90,000,000 American people who represent the Treasury, and if these people who want the special privileges divert from the Treasury, on an average, $5,000 a month for a ship during the year, you divert from the Treasury for each ship $60,000 that belong to your constituents, who are the American people, and give it to a lot of fellows who do not need it, do not care for it, do not care for the flag except when you give them special privileges, who can get along without it, and do not fight one another in the matter of competition. [Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I am an American, and I am in favor of American ships—flying the American flag—going through the American canal free of charge. Hence I shall vote for free tolls for all ships flying the flag of my country going through the Panama Canal.

I want to do something to aid the American merchant marine, and free tolls for our own ships will go far to accomplish what patriotic America hopes to see accomplished ere we adjourn.

We all realize that there is a sentiment, growing stronger and stronger every day, throughout the country in favor of doing something to rehabilitate our merchant marine. This is patriotic, eminently proper, and should be encouraged by every true American.

There is no man in this country more anxious and more willing to enact proper legislation to restore the American merchant marine than myself, but I want to do it honestly; I want to do it along constitutional lines; and I want to do it in harmony with that fundamental principle of equal rights to all and special privileges to none.

It is a fact—a most deplorable fact—and every man who has investigated the subject knows it, that we have less registered tonnage for deep-sea carrying trade to-day than we had 100 years ago. In 1812 the United States, with a population of less than 10,000,000 inhabitants, owned more registered tonnage for ocean carrying trade than the United States in 1912, with a population of over 90,000,000. The American deep-sea tonnage in 1812 was over 1,200,000, and it is now less than 800,000, and, what is worse still, it showed an actual decrease of more than 6,000 tons last year. In 1812 American ships, flying the American flag and manned by American sailors, carried over 90 per cent of our deep-sea trade and a great part of that of all the countries of Europe. To-day we carry very little of our own trade and practically none of other countries, notwithstanding the fact that we should be the foremost maritime power in the world.

It is a sad commentary on our growth and greatness that more than nine-tenths of our once great and powerful deep-sea fleet has vanished, and not one new keel for an ocean-going merchant ship is being laid to-day on either our Atlantic or Pacific coast, while the vessels of foreign nations throng our ports and monopolize more than nine-tenths of all our import and export commerce.

In 1812 over 92 per cent of our export and import trade was carried in American bottoms; in 1912 less than 8 per cent of our imports and exports were carried in American ships. The United States pays to the owners of foreign deep-sea vessels for conveying our freight and passengers over $300,000,000 a year, and much of this vast sum of money goes to the owners of foreign steamers which are regularly enrolled on the merchant-cruiser lists of European Governments, manned by naval-reserve officers and sailors, and available for immediate service against us in case of war. The British Empire has 16,800,000 tons of merchant shipping; Germany has 8,960,000 tons; France, 3,680,000; Norway, 1,960,000; and Italy, 1,580,000. The larger part of all these great deep-sea fleets is engaged in the ocean carrying trade, but the Government of the United States, which produces and exports more merchandise than any other nation on earth, has a fleet registry of deep-sea vessels of less than 800,000 tons. These comparisons challenge our intelligence and constitute an indictment against our boasted patriotism.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the position in this matter taken by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]. He is opposed to free tolls for our ships. I am in favor of free tolls to help our merchant marine. I always have been, and I always will be, in favor of aiding the American merchant marine. Ever since I have been a Member of Congress I have endeavored to do something for our shipbuilding industries and to restore our deep-sea commerce. I have a bill pending in Congress for preferential duties in favor of American ships, and if that bill could be passed in 10 years we would again see the flag of our country on every sea, and ere long we would have as fine a merchant marine as any country in the world. The bill is a short one. I will read it. It is H. R. 14102 and reads as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14102) to encourage the American merchant marine and American commerce, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That a reduction of 5 per cent ad valorem of the customs duties now or hereafter imposed by law shall be allowed on all goods, wares, or merchandise imported into the United States in vessels of the United States; and in cases where no customs duties are imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 2 per cent ad valorem if such goods, wares, or merchandise are imported in vessels not of the United States. The said reduction of 5 per cent in duty herein provided for shall not apply to goods, wares, and merchandise not of the growth, production, or manufacture of countries contiguous to or bordering upon the territory of the United States, when imported into the United States by land transportation or land vehicles or conveyances through or from ports or other places of countries bordering upon the United States, if the same shall have been brought to such ports in vessels not of the United States; in cases where no customs duties are imposed by law on such goods, wares, and merchandise so imported, a duty of 2 per cent ad valorem shall be levied, collected, and paid. Said reduction of 5 per cent in duty shall not apply in cases where goods, wares, or merchandise are transshipped or transferred from a foreign vessel, port, or place to a vessel of the United States for the purpose of evading the provisions of this act, and in such cases no exemption from duty shall be granted.

SEC. 2. That the master, agent, or owner of any registered vessel of the United States shall be exempt from the tax of $4 for every alien entering the United States on such vessel prescribed by section 1 of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

SEC. 3. That the President shall have power, and it shall be his duty, to give notice, within 10 days after the passage of this act, to all foreign countries with which commercial agreements have been entered into making any provision or provisions which are in conflict with sections 1 or 2 of this act of the intention of the United States to terminate such agreement at a time specified in said notice, which time shall in no case be longer than the period of time specified in such agreements, respectively, for notice for their termination: Provided, That until the expiration of the period when the notice of intention to terminate hereinbefore provided for shall have become effective, or until such date prior thereto as the high contracting parties may by mutual consent select, the terms of said commercial agreement shall remain in force.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, and that, except as provided in the first and second sections hereof, this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. Chairman, that bill speaks for itself, and needs no apology from any patriotic American citizen. It has been indorsed by the leading commercial organizations of our country. If there is anything the American people are anxious to do, it is to put the flag—the flag of the United States—again upon the high seas. There are several ways to do it. One way is by free ships; another way is by ship subsidies; a third way is by preferential duties; and a fourth way is by free tolls through our own canal. I am against ship subsidies. I have fought ship subsidies ever since I have been a Member of Congress, and I will keep up the fight to the end. I will vote now for free ships through our canal. Here is one way to do something now for the American merchant marine. Let us do it while we have the opportunity.

For years, in Congress and out of Congress, I have been advocating honest and intelligent legislation to restore our merchant marine, and for years the men in control of Congress have turned to my appeals a deaf ear. The Congress of the United States is responsible for the present deplorable condition of our merchant marine, and every intelligent student of the subject is aware of the fact.

Preferential duties in favor of American-built ships and against ships flying the flag of a foreign country was the policy so successfully in operation in this country up to 1828, when, to please foreign interests, the law was suspended, and from that day to this our prestige on the high seas has been declining until it is less to-day than it was a century ago.

Many true friends of our merchant marine believe that if this policy of the fathers was restored it would immediately revive our overseas carrying trade and in a very few years build up our ship industries so that we would again secure our share of the ocean commerce of the world and save millions and millions of dollars that we pay annually to foreign shipowners. In reading the report of the Merchant Marine Commission I observe that several of the largest shipbuilders testified that they formerly believed in subsidies but had changed their opinions and now favored my plan for preferential duties.

There seems to be but one objection, so far as I can learn, to a return to this policy of the fathers, and this objection comes from the advocates of ship subsidies, who declare that we have commercial treaties with foreign Governments containing the favored-nation clause, and in order to inaugurate the policy of preferential duties it will be necessary to change our commercial treaties, and this can not be done without giving these favored nations one year's notice.

This objection, however, is more apparent than real, for there is no doubt the change could be made if this Government wanted to make it, and a year's notice to bring it about would cause no great delay, especially when we consider that nothing has been done for our deep-sea shipping in more than a quarter of a century.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. I can not yield. I have only a few moments. Here is a way, I say, to do something now for the American merchant marine. We can give the ships of the United States the preference. We can allow our own ships, built by American workmen in American shipyards, and flying the American flag, to go through our own canal free of tolls. [Applause.] I am in favor of that.

In this connection I must take exception to the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] regarding the construction of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. There is nothing in that treaty that can be construed in opposition to my plan for free tolls for American ships. I stand here as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House, having given careful study to that treaty, and to every circumstance connected with it, and I speak advisedly, and for our distinguished Secretary of State, when I say to this House that there is not a line in that treaty that precludes the Government of the United States from permitting our own ships going through the Panama Canal free of tolls. [Applause.]

If you want to bring about a situation such as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] has mentioned; if you want to get this matter some day into The Hague Tribunal; if you want to invite a foreign lawsuit, then pass this bill precluding the ships of the United States from going through our own canal free. That may foreclose our rights in the future. That may cast a doubt upon our construction of this treaty, and at some future time involve the Government of the United States in a controversy of international importance regarding our rights to grant preferences to our own ships using our own canal which the people of this country have paid for and have built. I am opposed to any legislation that will bring about such a contingency. To me the treaty is clear and plain. It does not admit of the construction urged by my friend from Minnesota. I am opposed now to bringing this Hay-Pauncefote treaty into the realm of dispute. I am opposed to inviting at some future time an international lawsuit. In my judgment the only way that we can prevent that is for the representatives of the American people to stand up here and vote in favor of American ships going through the canal free of tolls. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I see my time is nearly up. Let me say, in conclusion, that the policy I propose to restore our merchant marine is not a makeshift. It is not new, having been the law of our country from 1792 to 1828, when it was suspended, and that suspension was one of the greatest political blunders in all our maritime history. It is not a temporary expedient. It is a permanent remedy. It has been tried and not found wanting. It is the easiest way to restore the American merchant marine. Adopted again as our policy and upon the statute books, it will never be repealed, but, on the contrary, speedily restore our ocean carrying trade, revive our shipbuilding industries, give employment in our shipyards to thousands and thousands of men in all parts of the country, bring about an era of prosperity such as we have never known before in our shipping trade and deep-sea commerce, place our flag on every sea and in every port, and make our seamen what they were in the historic days of the Republic—the pride of America and the masters of the ocean highways of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLOP was recognized.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate as soon as the gentleman from Indiana is through.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. ADAMSON. I move that as soon as the gentleman from Indiana replies to the gentleman from New York debate be closed on this amendment.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, and I want to know who is going to object to it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am. I have objected to everybody having more than five minutes, and I objected to my colleague this morning. I stated this morning that I was going to object to everybody having more than five minutes. I do not care if my own grandmother made the request, I would object. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I rose at the time the gentleman from New York closed. I am a member of the committee and entitled to recognition under the rule.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate in five minutes on my amendment and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman in charge of the bill will permit the Chair, he will say that he has practically agreed to recognize three Members who want to speak on this matter—the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE], and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. FOSTER. Has not the gentleman from Georgia the right of recognition to move to close debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, under the rules the gentleman from New York had a right to make his motion, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] had a right to reply thereto. I move that all debate close on my amendment and all amendments thereto in five minutes, after the gentleman from Indiana has concluded his remarks. Other gentlemen then can make other motions and get recognition in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the motion by making it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming, to amend the motion by making it 15 minutes.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOLDFOGLE) there were—ayes 88, noes 8.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if members of the committee would read the provisions of the treaty under which this question arises, there would be no trouble in its settlement. The gentleman from Pennsylvania read only a part of it and stopped at the most important place in it, and I shall read it all.

> The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation or its citizens or subjects in respect to the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

This provision is plain, says what it means, and means what it says.

To give to the vessels engaged in the coast-to-coast trade free toll will discriminate against the citizens of this country who run vessels in other trades, and who are as much entitled to the consideration of Congress and to the gratuities and subventions of it as anyone else, as the people who are engaged in the coast-to-coast trade. Why should there be granted to the few who are engaged in the coast-to-coast trade a right that is not granted to the American citizen who carries American products and commodities through that canal, that go into foreign markets? And yet if this provision is adopted, we are adopting a provision that discriminates against our own citizens in favor of those engaged in one class of trade who shall use the canal and against those engaged in another class who shall use it.

Mr. SULZER. But my amendment will let all American ships go through the canal free.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; and the gentleman's amendment has no place under this treaty, because it is clear violation of the same. If we desire to invite trouble at the beginning of the opening of this canal, adopt the gentleman's amendment or any one of these provisions proposing free tolls under this treaty, and we will get it. It is a question of no dual construction. It clearly prohibits such proposed legislation as is now offered by this amendment. I ask any gentleman who advocates free tolls, Shall the people of this country who pay $400,000,000 to build this canal not derive any revenue but as a special privilege; shall they hand over the earnings to the owners of the few vessels engaged in the coast-to-coast trade? What answer can he give the people of this country for such a course?

Upon what hypothesis of right, of equality, of justice can you predicate such legislation as that? And yet that is what is proposed by each one of these amendments offered to grant free tolls. Every ship-subsidy man in the United States has preached for the American flag to float on the ocean. That is a specious plea under which he parades. He wants to see it on the ocean, but he wants to see the people of this country taxed to put it there in order that a few shipowners may profit by private enterprise at public expense. [Applause.] That is just what the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] means. It is a ship-subsidy scheme, clothed under a new name, in a different garment, a new garb. That is how every one of the advocates of special privilege wants to fly the American flag on the ocean. If you are to carry the coast-to-coast trade free through the canal, who is to pay the interest on the bonds by which the money was raised to build this canal? If this question is left as the committee has proposed it in the bill, it is subject to legislation hereafter, but adopt either the provision of the gentleman from New York or the provision of the gentleman from California and trouble is invited before a single vessel will sail through the Panama Canal, and trouble is brought on at once between this Government and other Governments, between one citizen and another citizen in this Republic. Can we afford to do this? Shall we do it and jeopardize the success of this the greatest of all enterprises the world has ever known?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CULLOP. I have not the time.

Mr. SULZER. The officials of the Government who know most about it say just to the contrary.

Mr. CULLOP. No; the gentleman says that, and every ship-subsidy advocate in the country says that. This is their claim and it should be exposed so that every citizen of this Republic may know the facts. Let us treat in this great matter all the people fairly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia—the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN and by Mr. KAHN) there were—ayes 83, noes 43.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Certain amendments were offered to this section when the bill was under consideration before. Are not those amendments now to be taken up and disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The judgment of the Chair is that those amendments ought to be taken up and disposed of at this time.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will pardon me, if he will refer to the RECORD he will find that permission was given only to gentlemen to file amendments if they desired. There was nothing compulsory about it. There was nothing about fixing the order of consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true.

Mr. ADAMSON. They were simply permitted to file them and have them printed and have them considered as pending. It does not violate the usual rule of procedure at all. We are still entitled to have the committee amendments and the members of the committee recognized first. We are still entitled to adopt the usual course of first perfecting the text before taking up substitutes.

Mr. MANN. That is very true, but when amendments are pending to perfect the text they must be disposed of before other amendments are offered. There are several amendments now pending to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The judgment of the Chair is that the best thing to be done at this juncture is to recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] to offer his amendment which he presented a few days ago.

Mr. MANN. Under the order heretofore adopted that amendment is now pending.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment which I offered a few days ago, and which I asked the Clerk to report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, section 5, on page 5, by inserting between the word "Panama" and the word "which," on line 9, the words "and also coastwise vessels registered under the American flag, plying only and exclusively between ports in the United States."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to that amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4 of amendments to section 5, H. R. 21969, offered and printed May 18, 1912, add at the end of the amendment proposed by Mr. GOLDFOGLE the following:

"Provided, That before passing through the Panama Canal without paying tolls the owner or master of any such vessel shall agree with the governor of the Panama Canal as to the cash value of such vessel, and the tolls which would have been due on said vessel if not remitted under this section shall be charged up against such vessel on each passage, and when by successive free passages through the Panama Canal the remitted tolls so charged up shall equal the agreed value of the vessel, such vessel shall immediately become the property of the United States and shall be taken possession of by the authority of the President, and either assigned to one of the departments of the Government or sold and the proceeds covered into the United States Treasury: Provided further, That the owner or master of such vessel shall keep it insured for the benefit of the owners or the United States, or both, as their interests may appear, so that in case of loss of such vessel the remitted tolls so charged up shall be paid therefrom."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, am I recognized?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not care anything about the order of debate.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have no objection to yielding to the gentleman if the Chair will recognize me after the gentleman from Georgia takes his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York now.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss this subject for a moment, not from the standpoint of sentiment and loud-sounding claims and meaningless claims, except that they mean something about patriotism and the flag. I assume that a great many of the gentlemen who want preferential tolls for American tolls are honest and sincere about it, and when they say the main object is to furnish a naval auxiliary that they are honest about it. I assume they do not want to rob the Treasury by diverting the tolls and hampering the greatest enterprise that ever was on earth and choke it to its knees and starve it for three or four years by giving preferential tolls to a private interest. I assume they are all honest in their profession, and therefore I offer them an opportunity to give a quid pro quo for a free passage through the canal. Every other proposition that I have ever seen offers the Government an opportunity to buy ships at a high price fixed by a fixed board of arbitration; after 50 years of peace they rot down so the old hulks amount to nothing. Now, under this amendment, if they accept in tolls the amount agreed upon for the price of the ship, then they are free of tolls until they have used up the value of the ship in free tolls, and it makes it then the property of the Government of the United States, and it would look like some fairness and some quid pro quo. If they do not agree to that they plainly state to the people of the United States—I do not mean those Members of Congress, but I mean the little Ship Trust and the little coterie of capitalists who control both the railroads and ships, playing their money into one or the other, as the profit may seem to invite, and playing the Treasury and the people all the time. Here is 1 per cent of our population engaged in shipping, and with the same amount of money in ships of flags of other countries, they would be as patriotic and "holler" as loud for other flags under which they were making money. They come and try to divert from the Public Treasury money that ought to go into it as tolls, which ought to go toward the operation and maintenance of the canal, which has shortened the distance 10,000 miles——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. I have but five minutes and no one else can have but five minutes. No; if these gentlemen are fair, if they mean to be patriotic, if they mean to be honest while they are choking down this great enterprise and hampering it with their selfish claims, let them say we will agree to give you the ship as soon as the free tolls pay for it and then they will have credit for honest profession, then we will have ships as auxiliary to the Navy for the use of our Government. If they will not do that, they stand before us as beneficiaries confessed as making a bold demand for a bonus out of the Treasury as one can contemplate, because they think they can easily throttle the Government and this great enterprise and hold it up until we grant the demand, and they say you can easily give it to us, because folks are not looking and it does not look like you are actually taking money out of the Treasury and giving it to us. I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD, Mr. Chairman, by inserting a statement of Messrs. Baker & Co., of Baltimore, to show us how rich the shipowners are to become, richer than Monte Cristo, rich beyond the dream of avarice, and calling upon us to take advantage of free tolls and organize a ship company through the canal. [Applause.]

The matter referred to is as follows:

PROSPECTUS OF THE ATLANTIC & PACIFIC TRANSPORT CO.—CAPITAL STOCK AUTHORIZED $15,000,000.

The Panama Canal will be opened to the commerce of the world in 1913.

The Atlantic & Pacific Transport Co. proposes to establish a line of steamers from New York, stopping at Charleston or Savannah or both, also from New Orleans through the Panama Canal to San Diego, San Pedro (Los Angeles), San Francisco, Astoria (Portland), and Seattle, and return.

The business opportunity for the development of enormous traffic is exceptional. The plan of organization of the company guarantees that every man's dollar will receive its full interest in the property.

* * * * * * *

RAIL TRANSIT COSTLY.

The rates which the railroads are obliged to charge on these various shipments range from $16.80 a ton on wine (75 cents per 100 pounds) to $33.60 a ton on hops ($1.50 per 100 pounds) east bound; and from $11 a ton on steel rails to $67.30 a ton on clothing and dry goods (not otherwise specified) west bound. All rates are from any Pacific coast point to any point east of the Mississippi River or east of Buffalo and vice versa. On citrus fruits or deciduous fruits the rate is $1.15 per 100 pounds, which is equal to $25.76 a ton weight. [Note: The railroad ton is 2,000 pounds and the steamship ton is 2,240 pounds.]

MILLIONS SAVED.

In the case of citrus and deciduous fruits alone the saving in expense owing to the difference in cost between all rail and all sea transportation through the Panama Canal will amount annually to between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000, according to the size of the crop. Experience in handling this class of traffic in the north trans-Atlantic ocean trades for over 25 years on the part of some of the incorporators of the Atlantic & Pacific Transport Co. has been such as to justify the statement that this traffic can be carried from Los Angeles to New York through the canal by a modern steamer of 16 knots speed, with refrigeration, at not over $7 a ton if no canal dues are charged, and net a handsome profit for the steamer. Similar savings, ranging from 50 to 75 per cent of the present rates charged all rail, will be possible in the case of the other commodities mentioned with the Panama Canal opened to commerce.

TIME OF TRANSIT.

The average time in which freight is now transported by rail from coast to coast is from 18 to 21 days. Sixteen-knot steamers through the Panama Canal can transport the same freight, allowing for stops at intermediate ports, in 16 days.

The object of comparison is not to disparage the present means of transportation, but to show that the cutting of the Isthmus of Panama by the United States Government will make these savings possible for the first time in the history of the world and to show the enormous traffic which by reason of the efficiency and cheapness of the service will inevitably avail itself of this route at paying rates.

AMPLE BUSINESS FOR ALL.

The inauguration of water competition between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts will ultimately be more of a benefit than an embarrassment to the transcontinental railroads. It will, of course, stimulate commerce between the seaboard cities at rates that the railroads will be unable to meet, but that very activity will force its way into the interior which the railroads alone can serve.

The lower rates prevailing at the seaboard cities by this route will insure lower prices at the interior cities. The railroads must transport this freight to the interior, and will therefore reap a compensating benefit for any loss of transcontinental traffic.

We have but to point to the evolution of our shipping on the Great Lakes to show that it was the very business that the Lake steamers took from the railroads that created the towns and cities on the Lake shores, which in turn brought the railroads more business than they lost. History will repeat itself in the conditions bound to arise after the opening of the Panama Canal.

It need only be added that the navigation laws of the United States prohibit foreign steamers from engaging in commerce between the ports of the United States, so that the present enterprise is secure against competition from foreign steamers. The recognized necessity for maintaining the control of the means of transportation between ports of this country insures the permanence of these laws and regulations.

(B) COASTWISE.

The steamers of the Atlantic and Pacific Transport Co. will be American in construction and ownership and will not only engage in trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, but will also stop en route at intermediate ports transporting passengers and freight to and fro upon both the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards. The company will engage in this business to the extent possible without interference with the movement of the transcontinental traffic, as the revenue therefrom can be developed to considerable proportions.

* * * * * * *

ANNUAL PROFIT OVER $2,500,000.

The officers of the corporation expect that the company will earn and pay not less than 10 per cent dividends a year, besides setting aside a conservative sum to cover depreciation.

Conservatively estimated, the profits on 1,000,000 tons of freight a year, added to the revenue of the mail contracts, now advertised for by the Postmaster General, will result in an annual profit of at least $2,500,000, leaving $1,000,000 a year, after the payment of a 10 per cent dividend, to apply to depreciation and insurance. This estimate does not take into account the profits from the passenger business and from other sources that will be developed by the company.

The relative cheapness of steamship transportation as compared with railroad transportation will furnish ample margin to secure this profit and still greatly reduce the rate from the present standard, giving the people the benefit of the reduction.

The operations of the company will begin with the opening of the canal in 1913, and the directors believe the line will begin to earn profits at once and will pay dividends within one year thereafter.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened attentively to the debate, and I have heard a great deal said about the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and their effect upon this legislation. I believe our country has been looked upon by the rest of the world as a Nation of altruists. Since our entrance into the family of nations we have been doing things unselfishly for the benefit of mankind. As early as 1815 Commodore Stephen Decatur destroyed the power of the Barbary pirates, in Algeria, Tunis, and Tripoli, and the countries of Europe thanked us for the good work. Later on, on December 2, 1823, President Monroe announced his famous doctrine that we would look upon the aggression of any European power on American territory as an unfriendly act. The world has tacitly accepted that doctrine. In 1898 we went into Cuba in the great cause of humanity, and gave liberty to the oppressed people of that island. A year or two ago, in the cause of human justice, we returned our indemnity to China. To-day we are helping the Republic of Santo Domingo in solving its financial difficulties. But despite these evidences of altruism, there is not a single nation in the world that believes we are crazy enough to spend $400,000,000 in constructing this canal without giving an advantage in the matter of coastwise shipping to our own citizens. [Applause.] And the time to settle the question as to our rights in the premises is now, on this bill, the first bill that attempts to regulate the commerce of that canal. If there be any question about our rights under the treaty, let us settle it now. It will undoubtedly be determined in our favor. If we wait 10 years, as has been suggested by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], I apprehend other countries will certainly raise the question of our rights under the treaty.

"Your own Congress refused to legislate in your favor for fear that you did not have any rights under the treaty," will be said by the chancellories of the civilized world.

And the matter will then probably go to The Hague tribunal for adjudication. And we will be bound by the decision, even though it should deny our contention. But if we pass this legislation now—if we tell the world that we intend to stand on our rights, in my judgment there is not a country in the world that will deny our rights. [Applause.] I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] or the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] will pass. Let us settle this question now. Let us settle it right. It was our money that built the canal. It is our undoubted right to give a preference to American ships that have occasion to use the Panama Canal in the coastwise trade between Atlantic and Pacific seaboards.

Mr. Chairman, this proposition of free tolls to American ships in the coastwise trade means much to the American merchant marine. I believe that free tolls will encourage the building of American ships for this trade. The building of American ships means auxiliary cruisers and colliers for our Navy in time of war. It was the historic cruise of the battleship Oregon all the way around South America to Santiago de Cuba, during the Spanish-American War, that helped materially to bring about the legislation for the construction of the Panama Canal. It is only a few years since our battleship fleet, in its cruise around the world, gave a practical demonstration of the weakness of our merchant marine to all the nations of the earth. For it was a fleet of foreign merchant vessels, carrying foreign flags, that acted as colliers for our battleship fleet. In case of war we could not procure the services of similar colliers. We clearly need American ships. Let us by our votes to-day do something for the upbuilding of an American merchant marine. Let us not neglect this opportunity. And I feel confident the great majority of our countrymen will approve and applaud our course.

Mr. HAMLIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems the committee ought to meet this proposition just in the position that it presents itself to the House. It seems to me this question of free tolls is the very worst kind of ship subsidy. I am surprised that gentlemen upon this side of the House would say that they are opposed to ship subsidy in any form, and yet, after we have already given the coastwise trade an absolute monopoly on the carrying of traffic from coast to coast, they come to us and ask us to give them free tolls through the canal. That is the worst form of subsidy possible.

Gentlemen, if you will just be reminded of this one fact, the tolls that the committee seeks to fix down there are fixed on the basis of the actual cost to the Government of putting these ships through the canal. Now, somebody will be compelled to pay that cost. Are you going to levy that cost upon all the taxpayers of this country—every man, woman, and child throughout the entire Nation—rather than to place it upon the ships that are already protected by the existing law, giving them an absolute monopoly in this coastwise trade? I do not believe that this committee wants to do anything of the kind, but if there are those here who feel that the coastwise trade ought to have free tolls, then how can you object to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE]. If after these private ship companies have enjoyed the privilege of free tolls, have passed through the canal often enough that the tolls amount to the value of the ship already agreed upon between themselves and the Governor of the Canal Zone, that then the ships, having been paid for by the United States Government in the remission of tolls, shall then belong to the Government and be assigned to the Navy, or to any other purpose for which the United States Government may desire to use them.

Gentlemen, do not mistake this fact. When you vote to exempt these ships, you are voting a subsidy into the hands of the special interests of this country. No man can deceive himself upon that proposition; and in the time I have been here—not attributing to any Member upon this floor any mala fidese—it seems to me that the time has never yet presented itself since I have been a Member when some one has not arisen upon this floor and advocated something that is to the benefit of some of the special interests in this country. You can not call a rose by any other name and make it smell differently. You give to the coastwise trade of this country free tolls, you take the money out of the Treasury of the United States contributed by all the people of all this country, and you place it into the treasury of the special interests, and you can not get away from that proposition. The canal must have the toll to pay the actual expense of putting these ships through the canal. Every ship put through there, in the judgment of those in a position best to know, will cost approximately $1 per net ton. As the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill so well said to-day, ships can not be put through under the officers of the ship, but must be taken charge of by officers or representatives of this Government when they approach the canal. Upon each lock will be placed four electric engines to guarantee the safety of the ship as it goes through. There are innumerable expenses that attach to the passage of these ships through that canal, and it is estimated that that cost to the Government will be in the neighborhood of $1 per net registered ton. Somebody will have to pay that. Who will it be? The shipowner or the people of this country?

Mr. DICKINSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr, HAMLIN. Yes; if you will make it short. I have not much time.

Mr. DICKINSON. How do you reach the conclusion of the estimate of $1 a ton? Do you include the interest on the $400,000,000?

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, no; only for the operation and maintenance of the canal. The estimate we reach is by statements made to us by men who have studied the question, and who know, approximately what the cost is going to be in putting these ships through the canal. We are not seeking to make a profit down there in the sense of a private enterprise, but your committee does not believe that the Government ought to operate and maintain that canal at a loss to the people. Then, these tolls are reached on the basis of actual cost of operation and maintenance. The question up to this House is this, divorced of everything else, How are you going to pay that expense out of the Treasury of the United States? Are you in favor of ship subsidy or opposed to it?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HAMLIN. I can not yield now; my time is too limited. I am sorry, but I can not control the time. If you give these ships free tolls, the cost of putting them through the canal must be contributed by everybody, in order to place that money into the treasury of these privately owned ship companies, who have already been given a monopoly by the Government of the United States in the coastwise trade. Or are you going to make these ship companies pay their toll along with the other ships?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all debate on this question is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Was the debate held by unanimous consent?

Mr. MANN. There are plenty more amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This amendment may determine the merits of this controversy on this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 63.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, in the meantime I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the Goldfogle amendment by adding "and that section 4347 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of February 17, 1898, shall not apply to foreign vessels engaged in the transportation of merchandise and passengers between ports of the United States on the Atlantic or on the Pacific through the Panama Canal."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee want recognition?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; to discuss my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. For 20 minutes?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in good faith. It is not offered with the intention of loading down the bill, and if my amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is voted down I am going to offer my amendment to the text of the bill, and if it is voted down there I am going to offer it to the Doremus substitute; and I am going to offer it in every way that is within parliamentary practice to offer it, and endeavor to have a vote on it in every way I can.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SIMS. I do.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman understand that my amendment does not touch foreign ships at all?

Mr. SIMS. I understand; but I am going to make it touch if my amendment becomes a law.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make the committee understand what this amendment is stripped of its verbiage. The amendment is drawn so as not to repeal the coastwise navigation laws in any respect whatever in all trade in which it now applies. It applies only to freight going through the canal, moved in foreign bottoms, from a port on the Pacific or on the Atlantic through the canal to a port beyond the canal. In other words, it is making the ports of the Pacific foreign as to the ports of the Atlantic and the ports of the Atlantic foreign as to the ports of the Pacific to vessels using the canal.

Mr. Chairman, it is only 2,800 miles, I believe, from New York to Liverpool. We have no flag flying over an American vessel going to Liverpool. All our traffic, all our transocean freight, is carried by foreign vessels under foreign flags. Every passenger that goes abroad goes under a foreign flag. Yet when we are going to carry freight or passengers from a port on the coast of Maine to Seattle, on the coast of the State of Washington, through the canal, that is tax built, in a foreign country, a distance of 6,000 or 7,000 miles, you say no foreign vessel shall have an opportunity to do that service.

The coastwise navigation laws constitute a monopoly to American ships; an absolute monopoly. There is, in fact, no competition to-day from port to port on the Atlantic coast. Let me read to you for a minute from the hearings:

Here is a gentleman who came before our committee when we had this bill under consideration with reference to the fixing of tolls. I want to read to you who he is and his position. I read:

Statement of Mr. H. H. Raymond, vice president and general manager of Clyde Steamship Co. and Mallory Steamship Co.

That is on page 534 of the hearings. He starts out by telling you what he is—vice president and general manager of these two coastwise companies. Now, that of itself, if read no further, shows that there is absolutely no competition between those two companies, although they are both in the coastwise trade, and they have a perfect monopoly as against any foreign vessel.

Now, then, they have had this monopoly for no one knows how many years, perhaps exceeding the life of any man here. Have they built up an American merchant marine on the Atlantic coast, where this monopoly exists? It should be borne in mind that our coastwise laws extend around Cape Horn to the Philippine Islands, to Porto Rico, and Hawaii. Who is getting the benefit of this monopoly?

A shipbuilder from New England came before the committee and wanted free tolls, and I will tell you why he wanted them. He said he wanted them because they would encourage the building of American ships large enough to use the Panama Canal when it was completed. He said that the present coastwise navigation of this country was done in ships too small, with few exceptions, to be operated in the canal, and wanted free tolls in order to induce the building of ships large enough to operate through the canal.

Now, gentlemen come here from California and Washington, from the Pacific coast, and say they have been railroad ridden and railroad oppressed. I do not question the sincerity of their statements, for I do not know the facts myself. They say they want free tolls in order to increase the competition as against the transcontinental railroads. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] made an able and exhaustive speech. He showed that the amount of freight that will be carried through the Panama Canal from the Pacific coast will be very small in comparison with the transcontinental freight carried by the transcontinental railroads from the same coast, and the gentleman from Washington said that this $1 a ton, or whatever it might be, would not only be added to the charge for transportation through the canal, but would be added to all the transcontinental freight going across the country, and would be put into the pockets of the railroads.

How a Republican could make such a speech as that and then vote for a protective tariff I do not understand. Still a Pacific coast gentleman can do a great many things. It looks like he could not get to Congress from that country without being a Republican, and that he could not be an honest man on this question without being a Democrat. [Laughter.]

Now, I am proposing by this amendment to help the Pacific coast people that they will be absolutely benefited by it and at the same time to increase the receipts of tolls through the canal. How do we increase competition? Only by increasing the opportunity for competitors to use the canal. We need not be afraid of the railroads if we adopt my amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the gentleman's amendment do?

Mr. SIMS. It relieves the foreign vessels going through the canal from coastwise restrictions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, you repeal the navigation laws.

Mr. SIMS. It relieves foreign vessels from them when going through the canal. It does not repeal the navigation laws, but it fails to extend them to this new waterway.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does not the gentleman raise the question in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty?

Mr. SIMS. I am not making an argument in reference to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. Now, if you people of the Pacific coast want real competition, why do not you invite the vessels of the world to go through this canal? Why not give the transcontinental railroads real competition? Then you can strike out all railroad provisions in this bill because the railroads will not be able to throttle the competition of all the world that will seek this trade.

How does any Democrat justify this monopoly in the coastwise trade who does not believe in protection, who does not believe in taking the money from those who have it and giving it to somebody else without return of equal value, for that is what protection is. It makes no difference whether you allow the vessels to go through toll free or whether you take the money out of the pockets of the taxpayer and pay the tolls back after it is paid by the ship. That is a mere dodge, as the effect is the same.

There is not, at this time, one particle of competition from port to port between any coastwise ship company and any other. They do not so much as make the same ports. The Mallory Line starts out from New York and does not land a passenger or a pound of freight at any port where another ship lands.

I do not see that it makes a bit of difference whether the lines are railroad owned or are not railroad owned, if my amendment is adopted, for those that are not railroad owned now do not compete with each other any more than those that are railroad owned.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee believe that if his amendment were adopted a single American ship would pass through the Panama Canal?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; I do; every one that is worthy of the name of the flag it bears.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman know that if his amendment were adopted there is not a single American ship that could compete with foreign ships in that trade?

Mr. SIMS. Why?

Mr. KAHN. Because it does not cost so much to run them. They have cheaper crews, cheaper construction, cheaper insurance; everything that applies to a ship is cheaper in the foreign country.

Mr. SIMS. And they will carry the freight cheaper, will they?

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not think they will.

Mr. SIMS. Whenever the gentleman tells me that foreign ships will enter the trade and drive every American ship out without reducing the freight charges he presents a problem that my dull head can not comprehend. Where is the gentleman's logic? [Laughter.]

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. JACKSON. There seems to be a misunderstanding as to the effect of the gentleman's amendment. Would it permit foreign ships engaged in commerce on the Atlantic coast to pass through the canal to ports on the Pacific coast?

Mr. SIMS. That is exactly what it means.

Mr. JACKSON. Would foreign ships taking freight from New York to San Francisco be allowed to pass through without paying tolls?

Mr. SIMS. No; it would pay tolls, but would be permitted to pass through the canal and carry passengers or freight from one port to another if it passes through the canal in doing so.

Mr. JACKSON. It is to furnish competition in the coastwise trade?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and it does not make any difference as to railroad-owned ships. Whenever people talk about the American flag in nine times out of ten what they really mean is the American dollar. The real purpose is to take out of the pockets of the people American dollars under the cry of patriotism and the American flag. If you want to do something to reduce freight rates, and that will really increase competition, give all the ships of all the world an opportunity to serve the people of the Atlantic and the people of the Pacific the same opportunity as the foreign ship has to serve them between Liverpool and the United States.

Let me ask you, my friends, what is the Pacific? It is a vast waste of water. Hawaii and Australia are the only countries in the Pacific. Australia belongs to England and English vessels and always will. Hawaii is a small affair, so to speak. And to-day we have an American company carrying freight from Hawaii to the Atlantic ports. Does it use the American Government-owned railroad? It does not. The American-Hawaiian line to-day uses a foreign railroad, under the Mexican flag, and gives one-third of all its receipts in order to use the Mexican flag rather than the Panama Railroad, which is operated under the American flag. It is true that the president of the road says that the facilities of the Panama Railroad are not sufficient. But let me tell you, when we build that canal at the expense of the American taxpayer, and should the Tehuantepec Railroad offer a rate that will enable the coastwise shipping companies to use it at 50 cents a ton cheaper than to go through our own canal for nothing, they will do it.

The dollar is what they are after. They never cry the American flag except when they are trying to hide a sinister motive behind it. Why not vote for free and absolutely untrammeled competition, that can never be throttled, by allowing all the tramp vessels of all the world and all the steamers of all the world, if they want to do so, to take freight from the Atlantic coast and deliver it from port to port on the Pacific coast and pay the tolls and thus help the people get back part of what they will lose on the canal, and at the same time have real competition which your transcontinental railroads can not and will not even attempt to throttle?

My friends, we have a big job on hand. If we absolutely wipe out and give away the $400,000,000 and undertake to provide for actual current expenses in the maintenance and operation of the canal, and the maintenance of the military force there made necessary by reason of the canal being there, all the shipping that is in prospect for the next 25 years, coastwise and all other, will be absolutely necessary in order to pay current expenses accruing year in and year out; but our friends, our free-toll friends, say to us, "Pay our tolls for us, and at the same time give us a monopoly of all the coastwise business, although we have been unable so far in all the hundred years of our life to cause any competition between each other from port to port."

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Would not free tolls on coastwise trade mean the cheapening of transportation and result in the cheapening of goods to the consumer?

Mr. SIMS. Have the coastwise navigation laws given to the people of the Atlantic coast from port to port freight as cheap as it can be carried by water? Not a bit of it. Will they do better than they have done heretofore? Whenever you make the canal an open roadstead, free of charge or otherwise, it is just as easy for the same companies or any other to go into business and to have a gentleman's agreement, or act as though they had one, and vessels of one line leaving the port of New York would anchor simply at San Francisco and nowhere else, and others would anchor at Seattle and nowhere else, and companies on the Pacific would land their vessels at particular but separate ports on the Atlantic and nowhere else—with not a particle of competition. Let me say to you that the American coastwise lines will have an advantage even if you permit all the vessels in the world to compete with them. The have an established good will. They have a trade already built up. They have arrangements made with the railroads reaching the ports they put into to carry and distribute the freight, and the foreigner would have no such advantage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I can hardly believe that it is necessary to oppose the amendment advocated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] who has just spoken. His proposition is to admit foreign ships to the coastwise trade, something that no commercial nation on earth does to-day. Every nation reserves its coastwise trade for its own ships, not only from a commercial standpoint, but as a protection to the nation itself as a matter of common defense. This has been the policy of this Government from its foundation. If the result of the Panama Canal should be the admission of foreign ships to the coastwise trade, I would look upon it then as one of the greatest calamities that has ever befallen our country. I can not and do not believe that any considerable number of this House favor such a proposition. I am opposed to this amendment for another reason, because it would not give us competition as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has asserted. I call the attention of the committee to this fact: That it is a matter of common knowledge that every foreign ship to-day that is engaged in carrying our overseas trade belongs to some conference, ring, or combine. Between the ships in these combinations there is no competition. Rates are fixed by agreement. The rate that every passenger and that every ton of freight must pay to go from this country to Europe is fixed in advance by agreement made in Germany. Freight and passenger rates between here and South America are fixed by agreement. If once we admit the foreign ship to the coastwise trade, as soon as the American ship disappeared—and the American ship would disappear immediately—then these foreign ships would do exactly in this trade as they have done in the foreign trade—combine and raise freight rates to the highest point that the traffiic would bear. Not only this, but these foreign steamship combines to-day have an understanding with our railroads, and if they controlled the commerce through the canal they would soon make a combination with our railroads so that instead of foreign ships being admitted to the coastwise trade, producing competition, they would absolutely destroy it. In other words, to admit foreign ships to the coastwise trade would destroy the very purpose, from a commercial standpoint, for which the canal has been constructed.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Is the gentleman's time sufficient to permit an interruption there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I regret it is not. We have had some experience with these combinations of foreign ships on the Pacific coast. A few years ago we had considerable sailing tonnage under the American flag on the Pacific. We were sending much of our freight from the Pacific ports to Europe by these sailing ships. As soon as the American ship had disappeared to an extent where it was safe for them to do so, the foreign ships immediately combined. This occurred about five years ago. As soon as this combination was perfected it raised freight rates over 400 per cent. It immediately increased the rate on a ton of wheat sent from Seattle to Liverpool from $1.25 to $5.60. This rate was afterwards increased to $6.90 per ton, and no vessel in the combine was permitted to take freight for less than this amount, and several ships last summer left Seattle in ballast rather than carry freight for less than $6.90 per ton, although before the combine was formed they were willing to do it for $1.25.

We have had some experience with foreign ships in carrying coal for the Government from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. When foreign ships were first employed we had a few American ships. Then the foreign ship carried the coal for $3.25 per ton. The American ship has disappeared and the foreign ships now charge $6.25 per ton. These two illustrations clearly demonstrate what would occur if we were to admit foreign ships to the coastwise trade. Once our flag had disappeared and our shipyards were destroyed we would be compelled to pay these foreign ships a far higher rate than we now pay our own ships. On the contrary, after the Panama Canal is opened and a larger number of coastwise vessels engage in this trade, freight will be greatly reduced until we will carry our own commerce in our own ships as cheaply as it can be done in foreign ships. The history of American shipping on the Great Lakes demonstrates the truth of this conclusion. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] should be adopted there would not be a single shipyard left on the Pacific coast within 12 months. Its adoption would mean the complete disappearance of our flag from ships, not only upon the high seas, but also in our coastwise trade. It would mean that our shipyards would become desolate places, and that not only commercially would we be at the mercy of foreign nations, but we would be helpless in time of war. If for no other reason, we should preserve our coastwise trade exclusively for American vessels as a matter of common defense. If foreign ships are to be admitted to the coastwise trade, then it would be far better for the Pacific coast and for the entire country if the Panama Canal had never been constructed.

I want just briefly to reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], the distinguished chairman of the committee, and to other gentlemen who have been charging that those in favor of a free canal for coastwise ships desire to pay a subsidy to coastwise vessels. Such statements are entirely without any foundation in fact or reason. The other day I made the challenge to any gentleman who made such statements to name any witness who had appeared before the committee in behalf of coastwise vessels and asked for remission of tolls. I repeat it now. As I have before stated, it would make no difference to ships in the coastwise trade whether they paid tolls or not. If they paid the toll they would add it to the freight rates and the consumer and the producer would pay it. The gentlemen who have spoken about free tolls being a subsidy to ships in the coastwise trade have a great deal more confidence in those who would run those ships than have I. They seem to think that the owners of these ships would themselves pay the toll. I have no such belief. The ships that would pass through the Panama Canal are a monopoly—a monopoly created by the Government—and under such circumstances the owners of these ships, if they pay the toll, will see that it is passed on to the consumer. I wish, while I have the opportunity, to say just a word in regard to the charge that has been made by certain gentlemen on the floor of the House, that the Pacific coast is selfish in demanding a free canal for coastwise ships. This charge has especially been urged by certain gentlemen from Minnesota, Dakota, Wisconsin, and that portion of our country. Now, it so happens that on the Pacific coast we raise wheat, and wheat is raised in the group of States mentioned. On the Pacific coast we raise barley, and barley is raised in the group of States mentioned. We raise dairy products, and dairy products are produced in the group of States mentioned. We sell all these products in the same market that the products in the group of States named are sold. In other words, we are competitors with the products of these States. Yet the products from the group of States to which I have referred have a thousand miles of water upon the Great Lakes and through the Soo Canal to reach this common market. This canal through which their products pass is owned, controlled, and operated by the Government, and has been constructed at the expenditure of millions of dollars of the public money. The Great Lakes have been improved by the expenditure of millions of dollars taken from the Public Treasury yet no tolls are charged on vessels using these waters. The gentlemen from that portion of the country to which I have referred insist that the Government furnish them water transportation for their products free, and although we on the Pacific coast are many thousands of miles farther from the common market, they insist that we shall not be permitted to use the waterways constructed by the Government without paying tolls. Are we selfish in asking to be placed upon an equality with our competitors? Does it lie in the mouths of the gentlemen from that section of the country to charge that the people from the Pacific coast are selfish in asking for a free canal for domestic commerce?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. SIMS) there were—ayes 44, noes 66.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question next recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does not the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] raise the question of free tolls upon its merits, and a vote on this proposition will dispose of this entire matter one way or the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamentary inquiry. All debate is closed on this question.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. GOLDFOGLE) there were—ayes 33, noes 80.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the next amendment would be the one offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment again reported.

The amendment was reported as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Canal," page 5, line 6, down to the word "Canal," page 6, line 5, and insert:

"Charges may be based upon registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, cargo tonnage, or otherwise, and when based upon registered tonnage shall not exceed $1.25 per net ton, American measurement, nor be less (other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens and vessels of the Republic of Panama) than 50 cents per net ton; nor shall any rate of charge be prescribed which is less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual operation of the canal, subject, however, to the provisions of article 19 of the convention between the United States and the Republic of Panama entered into November 18, 1903, and the right of the United States to pass its own vessels, troops, materials, merchandise, and supplies without the payment of any charge: Provided, however, That in fixing the charges for the use of the canal, the President may prescribe that any vessel engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States which is owned in whole or in part by any railroad company, or which is owned by any company the stock of which is owned in whole or in part by any railroad company, or which is controlled directly or indirectly by any railroad company, shall pay the highest charges prescribed for any vessel, and that the determination of the question of fact in each case shall be made in such manner and by such person or persons as the President may by general or specific order require: And provided further, That the foregoing proviso shall not apply to the Panama Railroad Co. or vessels owned by it. No preference shall be given to the vessels of any nation, its citizens or subjects (other than the United States and the Republic of Panama), observing the rules set forth in article 3 of the treaty entered into by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain on November 18, 1901, and confirmed by article 18 of the said convention of November 18, 1903, over the vessels of any other nation observing such rules, its citizens or subjects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, several amendments and propositions have already been presented which involve the matter of preferential tolls or no tolls on American merchant marine passing through the canal. I do not desire to aid in any way a division of votes upon such an important question, and as I shall support and vote for the Doremus substitute in the hope that it may be adopted and in the belief that it will, speaking generally, accomplish the purpose which would be accomplished by the amendment which I propose, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The next amendment is the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, before the substitute is offered, I offer an amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee the first vote would probably come on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS], and then the gentleman can offer his amendment on the subject.

Mr. SIMS. But I am offering this amendment to the text of the bill.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment to the substitute it, of course, would have to be voted upon before the substitute.

Mr. SIMS. This is an amendment to the substitute and is an amendment to the text.

Mr. MANN. If it is an amendment to the substitute, of course the amendment has to be voted upon before the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; but the substitute must be presented.

Mr. SIMS. I want to offer an amendment to the text of the bill to which the substitute will apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 5 add the following:

"That section 4347 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 17, 1898, shall not apply to foreign vessels engaged in the transportation of merchandise and passengers between ports of the United States on the Atlantic and on the Pacific through the Panama Canal."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, as I have discussed the same proposition, I do not wish to take up the time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the Doremus substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for section 5 the following:

"SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized to prescribe and from time to time change the tolls that shall be levied by the Government of the United States for the use of the Panama Canal. No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States. Tolls may be based upon gross or net registered tonnage, displacement tonnage, or otherwise, and may be based on one form of tonnage for warships and another for ships of commerce. When based upon net registered tonnage for ships of commerce the tolls shall not exceed $1.25 per net registered ton, nor be less, other than for vessels of the United States and its citizens, than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal, subject, however, to the provisions of article 19 of the convention between the United States and the Republic of Panama, entered into November 18, 1903: Provided, however, That under regulations prescribed by the President a vessel paying toll going through the canal in ballast shall, on its return trip through the canal laden with cargo, be entitled to receive a rebate of 50 per cent of the tolls just previously paid going through in the opposite direction without cargo. If the tolls shall not be based upon net registered tonnage, they shall not exceed the equivalent of $1.25 per net registered ton as nearly as the same may be determined, nor be less than the estimated proportionate cost of the actual maintenance and operation of the canal. The toll for each passenger shall not be more than $1.50. The President is authorized to make and from time to time amend regulations governing the operation of the Panama Canal and the passage and control of vessels through the same or any part thereof, including the locks and approaches thereto, and all rules and regulations affecting pilots and pilotage in the canal or the approaches thereto through the adjacent waters.

"Such regulations shall provide for prompt adjustment by agreement and immediate payment of claims for damages which may arise from alleged injury to vessels, cargo, or passengers from the passing of vessels through the locks under the control of those operating them under such rules and regulations. In case of disagreement suit may be brought in the district court of the Canal Zone against the governor of the Panama Canal. The hearing and disposition of such cases shall be expedited and the judgment shall be immediately paid off without proceeding to execution. All such claims, whether by agreement or after judgment, shall be paid out of any moneys appropriated or allotted for canal operation."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the Doremus substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, by Mr. SIMS, of Tennessee.

Mr. GOOD. Then I withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish the amendment I offered the other day to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend substitute proposed by Mr. DOREMUS as follows:

"That section 4347 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 17, 1898, shall not apply to foreign vessels engaged in the transportation of merchandise and passengers between ports of the United States on the Atlantic and on the Pacific through the Panama Canal."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the amendment proposed by Mr. DOREMUS the following: "No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States at the estimate of the proportionate cost of the actual operation of the canal which shall be determined by the United States Commerce Commission."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] provides that no tolls whatever shall be levied or collected from vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States which pass through the canal. The amendment which I have offered provides that tolls shall be levied to the extent of the actual cost of docking vessels through the canal. It seems to me we should meet this question fairly and should not attempt in this manner to grant subsidies to our coastwise vessels without saying we are granting subsidies to them. [Applause.] Every dollar that it costs the Government of the United States to dock a coastwise vessel through the canal, if we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, is a subsidy pure and simple. [Applause.] It makes no difference what we call it, it is a subsidy. There is no reason why these vessels that are engaged in the coastwise trade, which enjoy a monopoly in the shipping industry in the United States, should not at least pay what it actually costs the Government of the United States to dock the vessels through the canal.

The amendment which I have offered does not call for a penny of return on the investment. It does not call for a penny of expenditure in the maintenance or operation of the canal, except what it actually costs for docking those vessels through the canal. And it seems to me that this great shipping monopoly ought not to ask anything more than this, and that we ought to adopt this amendment because it is fair. It is fair to the shipping industry, it is fair to the interior of our country, which in the end will be obliged to pay the subsidy that we will grant if the gentleman's amendment is adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Then the gentleman is opposed to this substitute?

Mr. GOOD. I am opposed to granting it in this way.

Mr. CANNON. It is the size of the baby that the gentleman objects to?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is the name of the baby that I am objecting to. If you are going to grant ship subsidy, let us say it is ship subsidy, and not let us pass this bill granting this subsidy substantially under some other name.

Mr. CANNON. Does it charge a smaller amount to pass a ship through the locks?

Mr. GOOD. I think my amendment gives a preference to the coastwise trade that is not granted to the foreign trade, and that is all this amendment would give.

Mr. CANNON. It does not include maintenance, however. It does not include the troops down there, and it does not include the interest on the indebtedness?

Mr. GOOD. No; and it does not include sanitation.

Mr. CANNON. It may be a colored baby, but a very small one. It is a smaller subsidy.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that I accept this as the lesser of the two evils. I fear that if coastwise vessels are allowed to pass through the canal without the payment of tolls the cost of locking these vessels through the canal will in the end be borne by the interior shippers. We will be confronted with this situation: When the canal is thrown open for commerce there will no doubt be a spirited competition between the railroads and vessels engaged in coastwise trade between Atlantic and Pacific coast points. At least this measure contemplates such competition. Let us suppose that there will be such competition. Let us assume also that the competition will be such that the railroads, in order to transport freight from San Francisco to New York City, and vice versa, will be compelled to transport it at a price equal to or less than the cost of carrying it. The railroad companies carrying such freight at a rate less than the cost of carrying it will be compelled to recoup this loss from shipments in other territory. Obviously they can not recoup this loss on transcontinental freight or freight which has water competition, and the only place where the transcontinental roads can recoup this loss is from the interior shipper. The benefits which the owners of coastwise vessels will receive must be paid for, then, by the interior shipper. The adoption of the provision for free ships makes this very unnatural condition possible.

It has been pointed out in this discussion that the annual cost to operate the canal will be in the neighborhood of $4,000,000. Its operation will require the employment of about 2,500 men. Practically all of this cost and all of these men are required to operate the machinery of the locks of the canal, and it is certainly not asking too much to require the coastwise vessels to pay their proportionate share of locking their ships through the canal.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much entertained to-day in observing the vigor and frequency with which the word "subsidy" is being used here in an attempt to frighten gentlemen who believe that coastwise traffic in American ships through the Panama Canal ought to be free. Gentlemen shout "Subsidy!" "Subsidy!" at those of us opposed to tolls on coastwise traffic. As for myself, I have outgrown the age when a mere epithet has any terrors. "Subsidy!" There is no more of subsidy in letting American coastwise ships go through that canal free than there is to letting them go from port to port down the Mississippi River free, the Government having expended approximately $120,000,000 upon that river for improvements, and now expending annually $1,000,000 in appropriations for maintenance. [Applause.]

Wherein is there any distinction? If there be any distinction, let gentlemen point it out. Is it a subsidy to allow coastwise ships to go through the Soo Canal free, or to enter New York Harbor free, or to go down the Ohio River free? This word "subsidy" has been used for over a hundred years in this country by those opposed to any Government system of internal improvements, and especially to improvements of rivers and harbors.

It is the very argument that confronted Henry Clay and Andrew Jackson and other statesmen who believed with them that, on grounds of high public policy, this Government has the right to improve the waterways of the country, not because such improvement is for the benefit of any particular class of our citizens, but because it cheapens transportation to all the people and so is for the good of all the people. [Applause.]

Let any gentleman on this floor who says that we are "subsidy" men distinguish between boats going free of tolls down the Mississippi from St. Paul to St. Louis or Memphis or New Orleans, and letting them go free of tolls from New Orleans through the canal to San Francisco or Seattle. That canal is about 40 miles long. Suppose that it were cut through a range of hills 40 miles wide in Iowa. What, then, would be thought of a proposition to charge tolls, amounting to a tariff wall, between different sections of this Republic? I am for protection against the poorly paid labor of China and the underpaid labor of other countries, but I am for absolute free trade between every part of the Atlantic and the Pacific coast line of the Republic of the United States. [Applause.]

Putting tolls of $10,000 or $12,000 upon an American ship carrying American goods under the American flag, going through that American canal, is, in effect, only putting $10,000 or $12,000 of tariff upon the goods. You Democrats are accustomed to declare that the amount of a tariff on goods from Europe, if collected at New York, is added to the price of the goods. Is it not added to the price of the goods if collected at the Panama Canal on a ship going from New York or New Orleans to California? How do you Democrats answer that question? How do Republicans answer it—men who have always demanded free trade between the States?

The argument made here about subsidy was one of the arguments used by friends of the transcontinental railroads during the first terms of my service in this House to defeat every effort in Congress to provide for a canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans through the Isthmus. And, Mr. Chairman, we have been told here of the great work of these railroad companies and of the great amount which their officers invested in building them across the continent. We have heard of this for many years. And yet it is a fact that none of those men really contributed one dollar to build either the Central or the Union Pacific roads.

The Government gave the Central Pacific $48,000 a mile over the mountains, $32,000 a mile for other portions, and $20,000 a mile for all of it. The Patterson commission of 1887 reported that the cost was only $22,500 a mile. These sums per mile all came from the Government.

Then the Government allowed them to issue first-mortgage bonds on the Government land grants to the roads equal to the total amount which the Government itself gave them through its own bonds. Gov. Stanford himself admitted that they had enough money from their own bonds and the Government bonds to pay for their railroads. The commission of 1887 made an investigation and reported that the proceeds of the Government bonds and of the first-mortgage bonds on the land grants supplied every dollar spent on the Central Pacific. The same is substantially true also of the Union Pacific.

Nobody wishes to do these roads any harm, Mr. Chairman; I have taken time simply to call attention to the facts about the alleged investments of their officers. [Applause.]

I have three times voted against ship subsidies. But the proposition before us is not one of that character.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota, Mr. STEENERSON, and Mr. KENT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, when I became a candidate for Congress I promised my people that I should never cast a sectional or a partisan vote, but should consider myself an American Congressman, and, therefore, in the interests of the whole country, as I see them, to preserve the sanctity of treaties, to expedite and free commerce, and to justly place the burdens of commerce, I am here to speak against free tolls for coastwise or other American ships. [Applause.]

The question of whether the granting of free tolls is a subsidy or is not a subsidy, whether or not such a doctrine is a rose under some other name—the name of the beloved or hated subsidy—is not of any particular interest. The canal has been a very real expense in its costs of construction upon all the people of the United States, and it will be a very real expense in its cost of maintenance and operation.

The granting of free tolls to our coastwise ships would mean one of two things: Either that the remission of such tolls would yield greater profits to the ships engaged in such traffic or that the rates of freight carried by these ships would result in lower rates between the producer and the consumer. I believe that with the great difference that exists between the cost of rail transportation and the cost of ocean transportation that ships would easily be enabled to put their charge where the tolls would make little or no difference to them and that the ships would absorb all the benefits of such privilege. They would naturally put their rates as close to railroad rates as possible, except in the case of commodities not portable by the railroads.

But even granting that the producer and the consumer of certain coastal parts of our country should obtain a petty benefit from this remission of tolls, such advantage would be at the expense of the people of other portions of our country, who having paid their share in the cost of the construction of the canal, would be uniformly taxed for the maintenance of the canal should there be any deficit.

If we call this an opportunity to stimulate our merchant marine in order that it may be an adjunct to our Navy, it would seem that we are likely to enter upon fallacy. I should not object to a ship subsidy that was solely for the purpose of establishing in a merchant marine an adjunct to our Navy, a means of furnishing men and ships in case of war. But I believe that when we come to consider such a subsidy, granted for war purposes, we must see to it that there must be such safeguards put about such a law as would insure the obtaining of men suitable physically and mentally and by citizenship for naval service; that they should be subject to proper naval drill, so that in case of war they would be of a sort that we could rely upon as naval recruits. As regards ships, if the Government of the United States needs any American ships, our Government can condemn them and take them for war purposes, and there can be no contention that the Government has not in the past and would not in the future pay liberally for them.

I am not interested in analogies based on river and harbor bills. Everyone knows that a difference in degree creates difference in kind. What was a meritorious policy in the matter of river and harbor appropriations at one time has become a grab bag and an abuse, and everyone knows it. It is now time to call a halt. The most logical argument in the favor of subsidizing country roads upon which are rural routes was based on the analogy to a swollen river and harbor bill. That was the only excuse that could be offered to justify a perennial and an unjustifiable and a heedlessly disbursed local grab from the Federal Treasury. Every time we enter upon any form of such extravagance we lead to other forms of the same thing. This proposition of "free tolls" is really a policy of subsidy, which no one has demonstrated that it is not. A policy like this, to my mind, is leading to the wrecking of real State rights, of home rule, and local self-respect. It is a policy leading more and more to a leaning upon the Federal Government for daily bread, and I believe our institutions will have trouble in standing before it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the attention of the House for a few minutes while we consider something about what it means to pass these ships through this canal, whether the ships are engaged in coastwise commerce or are engaged in any other commerce.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], with great eloquence, talked about the free passage of these ships through the canal as though it did not cost anything to anybody to put them through after this enormous expenditure by the Government in the construction of the canal. As a matter of fact, there are three sets of locks on each side of this canal, of about 1,000 feet in length each. The ships have to be put through those locks, and they have to be lifted 85 feet up one side and lowered 85 feet on the other side. They are not handled in the locks at all by their own power. The locks are handled, in the first place, by tremendous electric power, and in the second place, the Government is ordering 48 large electric locomotives to pull these ships through the canal. The gentleman from the coast States, after having had constructed for them this canal, at the expense of the entire people—a great undertaking, that will cost not less than $375,000,000——

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I regret I have not the time.

Mr. COOPER. Is the gentleman aware that there will be 46 locks on the Ohio River, and that the boats there will have to lock through?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. We have enough to attend to at Panama without bothering about the Ohio River now. I want the gentleman to understand this proposition: Who will pay that expense? It seemed to the committee that the expense should be apportioned to the commerce enjoying the benefits of the canal rather than be imposed as a tax upon the entire people. The mere interest on this entire obligation amounts to no less than $10,350,000 a year. It is difficult to say what it will cost to pass a ship through those locks. It depends somewhat on how many ships the traffic will bring.

Why, the gentleman talks about analogies as to coastwise commerce and the conditions in ports. Our own boats can not get into the port of New York without being stopped at Sandy Hook and pulled in by tugs and paying the expense of being pulled in, but here is a proposition that after the American people have constructed a great enterprise that will reduce the cost of transporting freight from the Atlantic to the Pacific at least $4 a ton, these gentlemen come, and, in addition to that, demand that we shall pull the boats through the canal, and that they shall not bear even the expense intended to be provided by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. It seems to me, in the face of what the country is doing for the commerce of the entire world, what it is doing for the coastwise shipping, the only transportation agency under American control that has anything like a monopoly, that it is on its face a colossal and superlatively selfish proposition for them to enjoy the only transportation monopoly allowed under our system of American laws, and then insist in addition to that that the traffic tax imposed on American ships, not for permitting the boats to go through the canal but to cover the cost of taking them through shall be given them. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If I have time.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman from South Dakota wants an analogy, would it not be a better one to say that if the Government of the United States owned the railroads, then it ought also pull the trains free of charge?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The Government has owned for some time the Panama Railroad, and has been collecting the necessary expenses of transporting some of this same commerce across it, and still we have not known of any American citizens rising in their ambition and in their desire for further gain to suggest that the Government ought not to impose tolls upon that transisthmian commerce. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, for more than 50 years a demand has come from all parts of the American people to encourage the merchant marine engaged in foreign trade. Some schemes have been advanced for postal subsidies, some for discriminating duties and direct subsidies. The reason for this demand has been that the ships in the American shipyards cost more than those that are foreign built; that it costs more to run them than it does to run foreign ships; and that therefore they had to compete with cheaper built ships and cheaper paid crews.

Has anybody ever heard of a demand for a subsidy or aid to domestic merchant marine, who have no competitors? Not at all. [Applause.] It would have been unreasonable to ask it if they had. This is the first time in the history of the American Congress that anybody has ever demanded any assistance from the Treasury for the domestic merchant marine; that is, those in the coastwise trade.

If you grant this concession, what will be the result? You will be discriminating in favor of that part of the American merchant marine which has no competitor and against that part having competition. [Applause.] You who are against subsidies, can you resist the call when they come and say, "You have subsidized the local, domestic merchant marine that has no competition, that has nobody to run prices down, can not you give us some encouragement to enable us to compete with coolie labor and cheaply built vessels?" You can not resist that demand, because it will be founded in justice, and you are laying the first foundation for ship subsidies. Mark my word, if you pass this amendment that demand will come.

Another result of concession of free tolls to the domestic merchant marine will be that you are giving coastwise vessels of ten or twelve thousand tons capacity a bonus of $10,000 or $12,000 on each trip through the canal, and you tax the American merchant vessel engaged in the foreign trade bound for a foreign port for going through the canal because they are competing with cheaply built vessels and cheap labor. [Applause.] Therefore you increase the disadvantage of the vessels that have competition and give a bonus to those that have no competition. The proposition is so absurd that I wonder it has not been withdrawn long before this. [Applause.]

The proposition for free tolls to our domestic vessels using the Panama Canal is nothing more nor less than a demand for a subsidy for those vessels. Why should they be given such a subsidy? Not because it costs more to build or operate them than it costs to build and operate competing ships, because there are no competing ships. It must be, therefore, on the ground that it costs more to carry freight and passengers by the water route from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts than by rail across the continent, because the transcontinental roads are the only competitors in that traffic. But if the land route is cheaper, then, there never was any commercial reason for building the canal. The truth is that the water route, even with the highest proposed tolls, will be much cheaper than the rates by land, and will cut present land rates in two.

Free tolls will not rehabilitate our merchant marine in the foreign trade, because it is not proposed to include that trade If we are going to give the public the benefit of competition of the canal route, then it could be done by granting free tolls to American ships in the foreign and coastwise trade and then exclude the trade between Atlantic and Pacific ports from the coastwise laws. Then foreign vessels could engage in it and compete with our ships, but not on equal terms, because our vessels would have the advantage of free tolls.

This would, together with the right to register foreign-built ships, not only encourage our foreign-going shipping, but give the people the benefit of the fullest competition and compel the lowering of transcontinental railroad rates. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN, Mr. Chairman, when the American people spent $400,000,000, or approximately that sum, in building this great canal and presented it to the world for the promotion of commerce, they did, it seems to me, everything that could be reasonably expected of them. It will perhaps cost as much as twenty or twenty-five and I have heard it estimated thirty million dollars a year to maintain that canal.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I can not yield.

The question that confronts us at this moment is by whom and how that heavy annual charge for the upkeep of a canal built by all the people is to be met. It seems reasonable and just to assess it against the traffic that goes through the canal itself. Thus those who primarily benefit will pay it. Of course, it is not going to be paid by the ship itself. Every charge against the transportation line or ship will be put on the commodity carried. We all know that we can not avoid that law of trade by any law of Congress. Any burden that we impose on carriers, whether on sea or land, will be immediately transferred to the articles carried. If that could not be done, the weaker transportation lines would soon be put out of business, and as a result of our legislation the people would find themselves at the mercy of monopoly. The fact that the toll will be put on the cargo carried is no argument against it. In my judgment, sir, the proper procedure is to make a reasonable charge against traffic through the canal. By the shipping companies it will be charged to the articles carried, and thus finally be paid by the people who gain by the use of the canal. Assuredly, sir, the commerce that goes through the canal, which it gets without cost of construction, can afford to pay, and should be made to pay, for its maintenance. [Applause.]

It is proposed, as was clearly shown by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], to offer an additional advantage to the trade that already enjoys a peculiarly beneficial monopoly. Our coastwise shipping has the enormous advantage of an exclusive right to trade between the ports of this country. [Applause.] In common fairness more should not, and more need not, be done for it in order to maintain it in prosperity.

If there were no other good and sufficient reason for charging a fee for the use of the canal, I would still do it in the interest of all the taxpayers of the country, who paid for it and who, in most cases, will receive so small a benefit from it that it will hardly be traceable.

To grant the free use of the canal to the coastwise trade, and only to that trade, would be a discrimination in favor of a branch of shipping that already enjoys a law-made monopoly and does not need this additional favor. Our people are now taxed needlessly to maintain that monopoly. Let me illustrate: The North German Lloyd Co. operates a line of steamers between Bremerhaven and Galveston. West bound those steamers touch at Baltimore to discharge passengers and cargo. They are not permitted, when they resume the voyage, to take on cargo for Galveston. That privilege is reserved at a higher figure for the monopolistic coastwise lines that it is now proposed to grant this additional benefit to at the expense of the American people. If the German line from Bremerhaven to Galveston were allowed to trade from port to port, east and west bound, our people would have lower freight charges for the carriage of their fruit, cotton, and meats. I do not feel disposed under these circumstances to give any more advantages to the coastwise lines.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another and higher reason why we should not grant the free use of the canal to any ship or line. We are solemnly pledged by treaties with other Governments not to do so. We have agreed to maintain equality of conditions in the use of the canal.

It is hard to believe that gentlemen can be serious when they urge a violation of the terms of a solemn treaty.

It would be reprehensible in an individual, and it is neither decent nor honest in a Government. There ought not to be a different standard of honor for individuals who make up a nation and for the nation itself.

Now, I believe, sir, that it is just as proper, just as essential for the Government to keep its plighted word as it is for an honorable individual to do so. I do not believe that in the eyes of the world, and in the understanding of all honest, fair-minded men, we can any more afford to disregard our international obligations, our solemn treaties, and maintain the respect of foreign Governments than an individual could do the same thing in private life. If we are not to stand before the world convicted of insincerity, if we are not to be met with incredulity when we propose treaties, we certainly ought to keep our plighted faith with Great Britain and the other Governments of the world in respect to the use of this canal.

We do not have in Central America the best reputation in the world for maintaining our treaty obligations, and my vote will never be given to further discredit this country in that respect and in that section of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment now offered to the bill to provide for free tolls to American vessels in the coastwise trade passing through the canal is aptly described by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] as in no sense a ship subsidy. The time has gone by, as he states, when the mere characterization of an act by an epithet should deter gentlemen on the floor of this House from meeting squarely any issue.

I have been for some time in doubt about the propriety of granting free tolls because of the question involved in the construction of the treaty with England by which we established our right to build the canal.

I was constrained to consider for some time the argument so forcefully advanced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] that the treaty prevented discrimination in favor of American vessels in domestic trade in the matter of canal tolls. It impressed me, but I have come to the conclusion that the United States, when it negotiated with England the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, never, in fact, intended to surrender the absolute right to control its domestic commerce, no matter through what waterways it may or may not pass. [Applause.] We must recall that to-day American vessels in the coastwise trade, sailing from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, that have passed around the Horn or through the Straits of Magellan and up the Pacific coast, are within the laws relating to coastwise trade already passed by Congress. These vessels travel 10,000 miles, largely through foreign waterways, and yet not for one moment do those vessels cease to be subject to all the regulations of the coastwise trade.

When we recall the history of foundation of this Government, when we look at the prime constitutional ideas that established the American Nation, we must understand that free and unrestricted intercourse between the States was very much the basis of creating this Nation in its present form and with its constitutional limitations. There is no man in this Hall who knows the history of the foundation of the American Nation who does not know that the Annapolis Convention was conceived in the idea that the restrictions on trade placed by the various Colonies and States before the Revolution and under the Articles of Confederation were sapping the vitality of the country, and one of the earliest and strongest purposes of the founders of the Constitution was that there should be a government that could forever guarantee free and uninterrupted intercourse between the States. You may to-day start a cargo in New York through the great canals of the State of New York, land that cargo at Buffalo, transship it by steamers that are the equal of ocean steamships, and land it at Duluth. You may then send it by transshipment from Duluth to the Pacific coast, and there is not one dollar of embargo, not one tithe of toll, placed upon that cargo of freight. The American Nation has in the last 40 years expended $625,000,000 in river and harbor improvements in this country for the benefit of free trade between the States, and I say that it has rightfully made that expenditure in order that this Nation may be bound together from coast to coast and from the Canadian line down to the waters of the Rio Grande. But, Mr. Chairman, there is no more right for us to say that those expenditures should have been made in order that trade between the States may pass freely than there is now to say that we shall now expend money to construct a canal which shall make possible freer intercourse between our States on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts. [Applause.]

The argument of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN], when he calls attention to the cost of the Panama Canal, is not sound or well stated. It was developed, Mr. Chairman, in the hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that the most tonnage that can pass through that canal annually in the next decade will be 1,000,000 tons of domestic commerce, and that, at a maximum rate of $1 per ton, will yield the amount of $1,000,000 annually in tolls. When we speak in sums of money on the floor of this House in connection with the management and maintenance and protection of this canal, $1,000,000 becomes an insignificant part of the total sum. When we take into account the interest upon the bonds issued for construction and then take the cost of operation and the cost of protection of the canal, the question of the levy of $1 a ton upon only 1,000,000 tons of traffic in the coastwise trade using that waterway becomes so relatively small that it ought not seriously to weigh with gentlemen in this House when they are determining whether or not they want to provide for our domestic commerce through that canal in strict accordance with the great American principle of free intercourse between the States; and I want to assert in conclusion that, believing it is Democratic doctrine to guarantee at all times the free intercourse between our States, and that it is sound policy that this Nation should not fetter but encourage the commerce between any sections of it, I support the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have been surprised, I might say astonished, at the position which some gentlemen have taken with reference to the construction of the treaty in question here. When the words of a treaty solemnly entered into between two nations are quoted, what answer is it to say that we paid for the canal and dug it? What answer is it when the terms of our bond are read to us and when they are before us to say that the canal cost us $400,000,000 and that now we will manage it to suit ourselves? When two nations, through their plenipotentiaries, discuss the terms of a treaty and that treaty is presented on our side to the Senate of the United States and this very proposition which is now before this House, namely, the discrimination in favor of our coastwise trade, is presented to that body as an amendment and it rejects it, what answer is it now to say that we have dug the canal, that we have paid for it, and that we will do with it as we please? And that, too, after having obtained in this very treaty permission that we might build this canal, for such were the terms. The word "may" is used in the treaty. And now is it to be said in answer to the provisions of the treaty that we will do just as we please with it? What else is that than insult to a friendly nation? What answer do gentlemen give to the argument that has been made? What can they claim these words in the treaty mean other than what they do say? What gentleman has given any other construction, taken from the words themselves, that could be put upon the language which is stated in the treaty? The treaty says that the canal shall be opened to vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules on terms of entire equality——

Mr. SULZER. The Secretary of State says foreign nations, and that is agreed to by the representatives of every foreign Government on earth.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield to the gentleman. The gentleman had his own time. Do "all nations" mean other nations than the United States—"all nations" observing these rules? The United States is one which observes the rules. Does "entire equality" mean a difference of tolls on the canal? And what do the other words of the treaty mean? It says that there shall be absolute equality in respect to conditions and charges of traffic and otherwise, that there shall be no discrimination. The terms are made as broad as they could be made. "Otherwise" means in all respects; there shall be absolute equality as far as traffic through the canal is concerned. So reads the bond, so reads our agreement. No one has offered any other construction to be placed upon these words.

Mr. SULZER. I have, and so has the Secretary of State.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has not stated how or why. I wish to say further——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised at my friend from Iowa and my friend from South Dakota and my friend from Minnesota that they have not read the lesson of the Erie Canal, built by the State of New York at an expense almost equal, when the present improvement is completed, to the entire expense of the Panama Canal. [Applause.] Now, the State built that canal and the people in Iowa got cheaper freight for their corn and their cattle coming to the markets of New York, and the constituents of the gentleman from South Dakota and the people of Minnesota got cheaper freight rates for their wheat coming into the State of New York to compete with the little wheat fields in my district up there in the country. But they got it at the expense of the taxpayers of the State of New York, who put every dollar needed in the construction of this Erie Canal, and who not only have opened it free of tolls to the boats that carry these products from the people of those States, but the operating expenses are borne, every farthing, by the State of New York. [Applause.] They come in here as a last resort and want to know if the United States is to charge for the putting of these boats through the canal. We did not hesitate about that. Our people voted it, and some of them voted it when they knew that the products of the people of your State would come in competition with the products of the farmers in our own State. And yet they do not seem to learn this lesson. Why, my people went back and thought that the framers of the Constitution and of the Government knew what they did, and that the main cause and the moving cause of the Union of the States grew out of the question of commerce between the States, and they wanted to remove every friction; and that lesson lasted more than 100 years, and my people were glad to have the facilities afforded by the Erie Canal given to the commerce of the country. [Applause.] To say it benefits——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
